And this while pleading for moderation and a care for the feelings of parishioners who were troubled by advanced services!

The Church Association has issued a stirring manifesto to the people of England on the Romanising tendencies at work in the Church of England. It contains an instructive sketch of the results of the Oxford Revival, the gradual inroads made on the authorised course of worship and ritual, the growing contempt among sacerdotalists for the decisions of the courts, their open and wilful disregard of legal restrictions, the cowardice or apathy or secret sympathy of the bishops with this movement, and the call for a speedy and determined protest against this widespread lawlessness in high places. The proved existence and activity of secret societies whose object is to transform the Church of England "as by law established" into an outpost of Rome makes the duty of the nation in the present crisis immediate and paramount. This appeal deserves to be widely circulated in the homes of the British people.

The dishonesty of remaining and officiating in a Church to which a minister is not true is the feature of the Romanising clergy which strikes the public mind most painfully. It has been freely commented upon in Parliament and in the Press. This is a national and an ethical question. To trifle with sincerity perverts conscience and twists the whole life. The spectacle of a large number of men in a conspicuous and responsible position paltering with truth must inevitably have a deteriorating effect upon the whole people.

From expressions made at the recent meeting of the English Church Union, the point with its supporters seems to be, not obedience to the Bishop as a recognised authority in the Church, but, as Canon Gore says, getting as much liberty as can be "gained or squeezed from any particular bishop in any particular diocese." It seems to us that what the Church specially needs is to consider "what would the Lord Jesus have us do to advance his spiritual kingdom amongst men?" This would settle much that is now in dispute, and throw a flood of light upon many otherwise debatable ceremonials.

"Pray for me" is a common but sacred request. Mr. Gladstone is said to have preferred it to someone at a critical time when he was tremendously burdened. Most of us have asked to be remembered in the prayers of some devout friend, and are perpetually comforted by the assurance that he heeds our request. The thought of his intercessions does not prevent us from praying for ourselves; it strengthens desire and faith. In his last sermon at St. Paul's the Bishop of Stepney told the congregation there was in the cathedral a tall and clever artisan who was a living example of the value of intercessory prayer. Some years ago in an East End workshop he challenged a fellow-workman, a little man of small brain power, to a discussion in any hall on the truth of Christianity. The little man said, "I can only pray for you." Years rolled on, and the big man became an earnest Christian, and now scours the streets of London in the hopes of finding his little colleague and thanking him.

Whittier has made fine use of the request, "Pray for me," in his poem "The Prayer Seeker," the last stanza of which is very Christ-like in spirit—

He prayeth best who leaves unguessed
The mystery of another's breast.
Why cheeks grow pale, why eyes o'er overflow,
Or heads are white, thou need'st not know.
Enough to note by many a sign
That every heart hath needs like thine.
Pray for us!

The political atmosphere in most countries is full of the elements of change just now. There have been crises in France, Italy, Japan, and Germany during the past nine days. Spain is tottering down a steep at the bottom of which lies ruin. Austro-Hungary politics are at a deadlock. Our own country and Russia are almost alone in the stability of their social relations. With all the unrest reflected in our newspapers, there are less signs of real trouble and decay in our public life than anywhere. The hearts of British subjects should be lifted up in perpetual thankfulness for the steady national progress, liberty, and well-being which we enjoy. In proportion to our privileges and opportunities as a people is our responsibility. Where much is given, much will be required.

The War Office has published in leaflet form a "Memorandum" naming some of the duties of "company officers to the men under their control." They must point out to them the disastrous effects of giving way to habits of intemperance and immorality, that it "enfeebles the constitution and exposes men to the risk of contracting disease of a kind which has of late made terrible ravages in the British Army." Those who are thus tainted are useless to the State while in the Army and a burden to their friends after they have left it. The emphasis which the opponents of regulating vice have for long, and especially of late, laid upon the influence of officers is also laid in this official document. There is one paragraph which contains a right principle, but too narrowly limits its application. It is this :—

The Commander-in-Chief desires that in making recommendations for selection for promotion regard should be had to the example set to the soldier. No man, however efficient in other respects, should be considered fit to exercise authority over his comrades if he is of notoriously vicious and intemperate habits.

The extraordinary change of attitude in China towards everything Western is emphasised with a mass of interesting details in the first number of the new missionary organ called Signs of Progress in China. Not only is the white man's form of civilisation rapidly captivating the minds of the Oriental, but there is a widespread humanising of his ideas. The anti-foot-binding movement is making rapid progress. Missionaries all over China report that there never was such a spirit of inquiry as to Christianity as is now shown. The secretary of one of the leading viceroys has written to the Christian Knowledge Society to open fresh depôts for the sale of its publications in the North. The Editor makes an appeal for men and money to prepare and distribute the right kind of books to students at the 206 examination centres in China. £200 per annum would provide literature for the leading minds for a province of twenty millions.

It was sure to come sooner or later. All the same, we are sorry to see that an English syndicate has obtained a concession on a grand scale from the Administrator of New Guinea, Sir William Macgregor. "Its purposes are elastic." It may collect india-rubber, work mines of all kinds, buy, sell, and lease land, etc. It is to have the right to select a quarter of a million acres of land in eight years, provided the Government can so soon place such an area at its disposal. We have every faith in the Administrator, but we are not sanguine that he will succeed in preventing the white men from oppressing and degrading the natives, and from introducing the vices with which new countries are cursed. This great island was taken possession of some twenty-three years ago in the name of Christ by a missionary party of the L.M.S. singing on its shore—

Jesus shall reign where'er the sun
Doth his successive journeys run.

Martyrs have died there. Neighbouring islands, earlier Christianised, have willingly sent teachers and workers to it, and past experience makes one tremble at the thought of the miners and traders and company promoters now casting covetous eyes upon it.

Dr. Hutchinson, of the University of Buffalo, in writing on "Love as a Factor in Evolution,' has remarked with shrewdness and truth that it is not lack of intelligence which keeps the savage a savage, but lack of brotherly kindness. The Bushman, the Akka, the Tierra del Fuegian, often possesses a larger share of intelligence than some of his brethren much higher in the scale. Where the law of kindness obtains to any degree there is more or less of unity and combination, and this gives strength and safety. This line of observation requires to be carried further back than this, because brotherly kindness depends on an antecedent and deeper affection, on the love of God to us and our love to Him. The reason for loving one another is that He has loved us and given his Son to die for our sins.

Lieutenant Hobson, the hero of the Merrimac, which was sunk in the mouth of the harbour of Santiago, is a man of high Christian character and principle. From the Boston Congregationalist we learn that when at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, he was president of the branch of the Y.M.C.A. there. The letter he wrote his sister just before sailing for Key West with Admiral Sampson's squadron breathes the spirit of a real Christian sentiment :—

Feeling that there has been earnestness of effort in my life, ready to accept any consequences, I hope to put aside every thought and bend entirely to the work in hand, to go in for action without any preoccupation or diverting thought, leaving all issues to the God who rules over all, to whom we must refer the mystery of life and the mystery of death.

"Measure the Pattern."

And let them make Me a sanctuary, that I may dwell among them.

According to all that I shew thee, after the pattern of the tabernacle, and the pattern of all the instruments thereof, even so shall ye make it.

And look that thou make them after their pattern, which was showed thee in the mount (Exod. xxv. 8, 9, 40).

And thou shall rear up the tabernacle according to the pattern thereof which was shewed thee in the mount (Exod. xxvi. 30).

Thou son of man, shew the house to the house of Israel, that they may be ashamed of their iniquities: and let them measure the pattern. And if they be ashamed of all that they have done, shew them the form of the house, and the fashion thereof, and the goings out thereof, and the comings in thereof, and all the forms thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and all the laws thereof: and write it in their sight, that they may keep the whole form thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and do them. And I will dwell in the midst of them for ever.

This is the law of the house: Upon the top of the mountain the whole limit thereof round about shall be most holy. Behold, this is the law of the house (Ezek. xliii. 10-12.)

MOSES was commanded to make every material for the Tabernacle according to a Divine model. The pattern of each portion, however small or seemingly insignificant, was the expression, the revelation, of some thought or purpose in the heart of God in providing a meeting-place between Himself and his people. For "the Tabernacle of the Congregation" should rather be translated "the Tent of Meeting." It was not primarily for the meeting of the people with one another but with God.

Every board and tenon and socket, every curtain and covering and vessel, had its own individual significance and intention, and must be made with undeviating exactitude according to the pattern made visible to Moses' inner sight in vision on the holy mount.

But every part had relation to the whole, and must be in due proportion to every other part. Whatever the children of Israel brought beyond the necessity of the case was "too much," and they were stayed from bringing more.

Not only must every individual part be made according to the Divine pattern, but the Tent of Meeting must be reared up according to the pattern thereof which was shown to Moses in the mount. Every part must be in its own appointed place. Chapter after chapter is occupied with minute instructions and directions as to the erection of the Tent, and at the close of the record of the completion of each portion of the work the inspiring Spirit adds, eight times, like the refrain of a hymn, "as the Lord commanded Moses" (Exod xl.).

From the garments of the priests to the carrying of each several portion, everything was foreseen, arranged, and provided for. For example, every precious stone of the breast-plate had its own individual value and beauty and name; but if they had been laid heterogeneously upon a table, the consciousness of confusion, incompleteness, incoherence, lack of order, would have been more obvious than the excellence of each individual gem. But the breast-plate, with its precious stones in their appointed order, was the chief object in the garments of glory and beauty.

If every detail of the Tent typified some truth, some expression of God's love to us, some revelation concerning our redemption, some counsel as to our conduct, is it not as necessary that we should measure the pattern of our faith and of our worship, as it was for Moses to make and rear the Tent of Meeting according to the pattern shown him in the mount? Must we not be as careful that the material, the form, and the structure of the doctrine taught shall be according to pattern, as was Moses in the construction of the Tent, and as was Solomon in the building of the Temple?—for there was a Divine pattern for the Temple no less than for the Tent.

Emphatically everything must be in due proportion. Tent and Temple were planned by rigid calculation of weight and measure and number. There must be nothing superfluous, nothing lacking. And this was required in the worshipper as well as in the place of worship; no one who had anything superfluous or lacking might enter into the congregation of the Lord. How necessary, then, to hold fast the form—the pattern—of sound, wholesome words. How essential to preserve the proportion of the faith.

The history of the Church has been a series of controversies by reason of the neglect of this. At Corinth every teacher—every builder—of the Church had a psalm, a doctrine, a tongue, a revelation, an interpretation; but the architecture was not according to the Divine pattern, and the Church was not built up, was not edified.

To say nothing of the false material—the brick for stone and slime for mortar, the erroneous doctrines—of which Babylonish churches have been built, what caricatures of God's house have been created by doctrines held and taught out of proportion with one another, or even made to antagonise one another.

Leaving the manifold controversies of past ages and coming to our own times, who can look without distress upon the contentions as to Election and Free-will, in which men of God almost un-Christianised one another, and one denounced Free-will and the other denied Election.

It is said that sects are good, for each becomes a witness for some special truth. Is this really so? But if it were, is it according to the pattern made visible in inward vision to those who dwell in the mount with God? Was not the Tent of Meeting, was not Solomon's exceeding magnifical Temple, one harmonious and strictly proportioned whole? Are we not built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner-stone, in whom all the building, FITLY FRAMED TOGETHER, groweth into a holy temple in the Lord—for a habitation of God through the Spirit?

All Christians admit and affirm that prayer to God is equally addressed to the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit—the Triune God. But without questioning here that they are right who adopt and encourage prayer to the Holy Spirit individually, and separate from the Father and the Son, may there not be a disproportion between the teaching regarding the intercession of the Holy Spirit and that having reference to Jesus the Son of God? The air is full of priestcraft and sacerdotalism and sacramentarianism, and not a little is said in opposition to them; but how little do we hear of our Great High Priest, who has passed through the heavens and entered into Heaven itself by virtue of his own blood, and who is able to save them to the uttermost who come unto God by Him, seeing that He ever liveth to make intercession for them!

There are and can be no jealousies, no controversies, in the One and Triune God; but may not these arise among ourselves, through holding various truths in disproportion, thus losing the symmetry and harmony of truth?

"As the truth is in Jesus"—that is God's perfect pattern. There was no lack nor excess in Him; hidden in Him are all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge—He is the fulness of the Godhead bodily. He came into the world by the overshadowing of the Holy Ghost; the Spirit descended and abode upon Him at the beginning of his work. Being anointed of the Holy Ghost, He went about doing good, until, by the same Eternal Spirit, He offered Himself without spot to God, and was declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of Holiness, by the resurrection from the dead; and from the throne of God and of the Lamb flowed forth the outpoured Spirit like a river of living water, and is flowing still, and will never cease to flow.

As we draw near to our Lord Jesus Christ, the Revealer of the Father, to whom in the days of his flesh the Spirit was given without measure; as we study to be workmen needing not to be ashamed, rightly divining the Word of truth; as we meditate on these things, and give ourselves wholly to them, our profiting in all things will appear. Epping Forest Conference.

THE third conference convened by Mr. A. Garstin took place on Friday and Saturday last, when the weather was exceptionally fine and the attendance good. Mr. R. C. MORGAN presided at the opening meeting, when Pastor G. TURNER gave a deeply instructive and helpful address on "Threefold Salvation." Mr. W. R. LANE followed with a practical exhortation on the same subject.

The afternoon gathering was held beneath the trees, and after a short address by Dr. MCKILLIAM, Mr. CHAS. COOK told of his recent visits to Italy, and of his journeys to the prisons of Europe, Africa, and America, in order to supply the inmates with the New Testament. Mr. LEONARD WEAVER spoke of evangelistic work done in Canada and America, and closed with an interesting account of wondrous gatherings and striking conversions he had recently seen in Hyde Park.

Pastor FULLER GOOCH spoke in the evening on the reliableness of the Bible, and evoked much enthusiasm by his manly address on the inspiration of the Scriptures. Mr. C. INGLIS, Mr. J. E. TAYLOR, and others followed, and the first day closed with praise for blessings received.

Dr. T. NEATBY opened the second day's proceedings with an address on "The Believer's Relationship to God," which was apparently much appreciated by the large gathering. Mr. WILLIAM HODSON next spoke, and then a series of short addresses followed, which brought the morning meeting to a close.

The afternoon was devoted to reports of work, China occupying an important place in the programme, and then Mr. WILLIAM WHEATLEY told of work among prisoners at home.

A large audience gathered in the evening, when Dr. MCKILLIAM, Mr. NED WRIGHT, Mr. T. HARRISON, and Mr. LEONARD WEAVER preached the Gospel, and the results were seen in the conversion of some who had been under the sound of the message, one of the friends rejoicing over the salvation of two of his grown-up children.

Mr. Garstin was greatly cheered by the success of this year's gathering; and he will be thankful for the prayers of God's people on behalf of his son (whose presence was greatly missed this year), who has met with a serious accident.

Abolitionist Federation.—The International Federation for the Abolition of State Regulation of Vice holds its Congress in London from July 12 to 15. The numerous delegates from all parts of the world will meet each day at Devonshire House, Bishopsgate-street, and will make reports from their respective countries. Further subjects for discussion will include missionary work in India, as affected by the existence of the Regulation System, and endeavours to revive the system under new titles. Among foreign visitors there will be Mr. and Mrs. Booth Clibborn, and Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Powell; also Mrs. Josephine Butler, Bishop Thoburn, of the Methodist Episcopal Mission Society, Western Asia, and many others are expected.

Ritualism and Rome.

ON Sunday evening last Dr. R. F. Horton, of Hampstead, concluding the eighteenth year of his monthly lectures to working men, delivered an exposition of the tendency and methods of the Ritualistic Tractarian movement in England. At the outset he pointed out that in all the replies which his lecture on "Rome and National Decay" had called forth, no one had ventured to contradict his plain statement as to the moral and spiritual bankruptcy under the sway of Rome, which not only remained undisputed, but has received a striking confirmation in what has recently occurred in the case of Rome's greatest daughter—Spain.

Of the many causes in Romanism which tend to national decay, among the chief may be mentioned the demoralising effect of auricular confession. In February last a priest named Slattery was convicted in Edinburgh of selling an obscene theological work, which was sanctioned by the Romish Church as a guide to priests in probing the depths into which those confessing might have fallen.

The Reformation saved not only Christendom, but also the Catholic Church, by promoting a counter-reformation. Romanism contains within itself a poison which will destroy the life of the strongest nation. From Roman Catholics we learn that the great protagonist of Roman Catholicism in England is the Ritualistic movement. It is through the English Church that the greater propaganda of Romanism is maintained. The avowed purpose of the more avowed Ritualists is to bring the Church of England back to Rome. Walsh's "Secret History of the Oxford Movement" should be read by all. Once its contents are generally known in England a great revolution of opinion will take place. The Tractarian movement was promoted by secret societies on the principle of what Rowe calls "probablism," what Ritualism calls "economy" or "reserve," but what in common English is called "lying." Six of such societies are there described, all "fully and even passionately Roman." To one, the Guild of All Souls, the object of which is to reintroduce the doctrine of purgatory,

646 ENGLISH CLERGYMEN BELONG.

Is it possible that the religion of our Lord and Master can be served by intrigues and deceit? You blaspheme when you call an intrigue the cause of Christ. The only excuse for Newman, Manning, and Pusey is that they were disingenuous on principle. Long after he was convinced of the Papal claims, Newman continued to attack them, throwing dust in the eyes of England for three and a-half years in a Protestant Church. This characteristic appears in all the writings of those leaders whose works have been made plain to us. "Make yourself clear," said the once truthful and upright Ward, as his son records, "that duty justifies deception, and then lie like a trooper!" It was the same with Pusey, who had heard confessions for four years when he wrote his essay on Tertullian against the confessional.

THIS DUPLICITY IS ON PRINCIPLE.

The modern Romish Church was saved by the Jesuits, and has been forced to adopt their doctrine of probablism—otherwise lying.

Pusey himself said that the existing methods of confession and penance presented the greatest danger to the Church, and was the road by which many went down to hell. There are in England to-day more nuns immured in convents than there were in the years before the Reformation. Read McCabe's "Twelve Years in a Monastery," and see the waste of time, the waste of energy, the evil of it all, more clearly than by all the stories of vice and sin connected with the system. You can, at least, demand a Government inspection of all such places. Why am I, you may ask, so eager and insistent on this subject when there are so many social and moral evils to deal with? Because I see the growth of sacerdotalism, and because I want the people of England to understand that there is something demoralising in subjecting the conscience to a fellow man, but something exalting and ennobling in subjection to the will of Christ. Bondage to a priest is slavery; bondage to Christ is liberty: "Be not, therefore, entangled again with the yoke of bondage."

Molly.

By Mrs. HARVEY-JELLIE.

"MOLLY," plain and simple, that was her name, and no one ever heard of any other. She was a sensitive creature; that could be seen by the manner in which she winced at an unkind word, and shrank into silence when treated with cold indifference by some to whom she had done many a kindness; yet none ever heard a reproachful word from her lips.

The old seaman with whom she lived was quite a character in the neighbourhood. His seafaring days were over, but all his delight seemed to be in talking to old and young of the many wonderful adventures he had gone through; and the most eventful of all was that black night, eight years before, when he saved a delicate girl from a watery grave. Her father was coming to London with his motherless child, but perished in the cruel waves.

Jonathan Ansel carried his charge back with him to his cottage, and without a murmur his wife gathered her into home and love.

"You will be our own 'Molly' till someone comes and tells us we have no right to you, my dear," she said.

There was no one to care, and the lonely girl clung to the new-found friends, and by her handy ways became a real help to Mrs. Ansel, from whom she learned the old story of God's love in Christ. They sent her to the school near by, where she made good progress.

But the old woman became weak and helpless, and for the last two years of her life she found happiness in listening to Molly's gentle voice as she sat and read to her from the old Bible. Changes came over the little home, just as storms come one after another.

"Good-bye, my dear," said the dying woman. "You'll tend the old man, and God bless you for it," and sadly they saw her carried away. Two years more, and a sudden stroke laid the sailor low, and in his wandering hours he would call to his mates to carry him aloft, and to cast anchor; and then he would rouse and say "I'm still ashore, give me a word to hold by, Molly and kiss the old man again,' and, trembling with anxiety, she turned readily to the well-worn pages and read, "And there shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light, and they shall reign for ever and ever."

They were dark days, with bitter experiences, when Jonathan Ansel followed his wife through the gate of death, and Molly had to face a cold world; with him all went, the few belongings were sold to clear expenses, and she was left desolate but for a neighbour who offered a bed till she found a place.

But Molly's extremity became

GOD'S OPPORTUNITY.

A lady was handing some coal tickets in that district, and asked who she was. The story was soon told; and the lady said she wanted a young girl to attend to her daughter. "She has a nurse, but I want a cheerful young person to wait upon her when nurse is busy or away," she said.

It was not home, as the cottage had been; painful hours were spent at first, but God's Word was hidden in her heart, and gave her food for thought, so that amid the strangeness Molly soon felt pleasure in being useful.

Weary nights of pain were the lot of the rich girl, for Elsie Vaughan had suffered from a complication of diseases for a year past, and the thoughtful kindness and marked attentions of the new maid called out her gratitude. Many a slight from the domestics caused Molly hours of uneasiness, but to be able to help "Miss Elsie" bear her pain was worth everything. When all had been tried in vain one night, and nurse was tired and gone to rest, Elsie asked Molly to sit beside her, and tell her something to make her sleep.

The dear old folk had always asked for a message from the Bible, but it never seemed to be used in that room, so she told of the sailor and his wife, and then repeated their favourite verses. Again and again this was done; for many hours they left her, seeing she was willing to wait patiently upon the invalid; and soon both nurse and mother became vexed that Molly was always preferred, and in any time of special weariness no one could comfort as she. No hope seemed to be given of recovery, and the many presents lavished on the daughter only mocked her.

Molly was seventeen; Elsie Vaughan only sixteen.

One evening, after trying to cheer her, Molly said, "But you have such a bright, full home, Miss Elsie, and everything you need."

"Yes, all is bright outside of me, but, Molly, I'd rather be you;

THE LIGHT IS INSIDE YOU.

Tell me that verse again—'The Lord is my light and my salvation, whom shall I fear'?" (Ps. xxvii. 1.)

"And the other one."

And Molly repeated, "I am the light of the world; he that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness."

It had been thought that summer weather would bring increased strength, and a chance to get Elsie to the sea, but just when days were longest she drooped, and all thought of it was given up. Mrs. Vaughan saw what a blessing Molly had become to her daughter, yet could not understand; to her the world held all the light she knew of.

"Mother, all the bright things have become dull and dark to me, but through Molly I have found a new light, and Jesus Christ is that light," Elsie said one day. They saw her turn from all below and set her face towards the light of heaven, heard her speak of new joys and hopes, and they wondered at it all.

"The verse the sailor loved I want," she said as the end came, and Molly said softly, "And there shall be no night there"; and before she could say more Elsie interrupted and said, "Mother, I shall be there to-morrow; no more weary days and nights."

"You will be better, my child, I hope," said Mrs. Vaughan.

"I am not fearing to die, mother; Jesus has made it all so easy. Now, Molly, say it again."

"Of course you may," said the mistress, in answer to Molly's inquiring look, holding her daughter's hand; she also heard the words of life.

"You'll miss me to read to, you have brought such a blessing to me; Molly, you'll be kind to mother if she should ever be ill."

"Oh, yes, Miss Elsie, don't you trouble; I'll finish the verse now"; and she read on, "they need no candle, neither light of the sun, for the Lord God giveth them light, and they shall reign for ever and ever."

Before the morning broke over the home the soul of Elsie Vaughan had seen the dawn of eternity.

"Molly, tell me all you used to tell her about the dear old people you lived with, and the Bible they loved, and the words that made my child so happy," said Mrs. Vaughan soon after the funeral.

And the same God became her God, through the same Saviour, for, as she heard God's light entered her soul. For many years Molly lived in that house, and was with her mistress through a long and trying illness, and at her death it was found she had left her faithful maid a small competency. Molly—still known by no other name—has a room not far from where Jonathan Ansel lived; and, although her health is not good, she is a centre of comfort and blessing in the neighbourhood.

"Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, July 10.

"As deceivers, and yet true," etc.—2 Cor. vi. 8.

THIS is the first clause in one of the most wonderful series of paradoxes in all literature. In fact, the whole of this paragraph is unusually elevated in conception and splendid in diction. Let us class together these different conceptions of the Apostle, as held by those who judged him by his outward and inward life respectively.

Judged from the view-point of this age he was a deceiver, intent on some purpose of his own, misleading and hoodwinking his converts. His life seemed to the gay and worldly a prolonged death; to his close associates and friends it was a perpetual chastening. And many must have turned from it and felt thankful that the lines had fallen to them in pleasanter places.

Judged from the view-point of eternity he was known to be true, and building the temple of truth. His inner life was being recruited, deepened, and purified. His sufferings were chastening and pruning him that he might bear more fruit. Amid his outward griefs he was ever drinking at the wells of purest joy; amid his poverty he was enriching the world with the most precious wealth; amid his utter destitution he was handling the imperishable riches of eternity.

The monks of Chartreuse, when they first erected their monastery, made all their windows look in on the small inner court, but had none commanding the sublime mountains and glaciers around. So, too, many lives are always contemplating the trifles of earth's court-yard! Oh, that such would take into view the unseen and eternal! How trivial would much that now agitates us then appear!

MONDAY, July 11.

"Let us cleanse ourselves from all defilement."—2 Cor. vii. 1 (R.V.).

The closing paragraph of the previous chapter tells what this defilement stands for; and, in the enumeration, note the increasing bonds of approximation which each word indicates. An unequal yoke in ill-matched intercourse with unbelievers leads to fellowship, and this to communion, and this again to concord, and this to partnership; whilst the culmination of the entire series is agreement, and the yielding up of the body for the possession and indwelling of idols. Let us beware of the beginning of this awful approximation. It is impossible to stand still; and they who think lightly of marrying an unbeliever may in the end hear words like those which watchers heard spoken in the doomed Temple on the night before it fell into the hands of Titus—"There was, as it were, the rushing of wings, and voices were heard saying, let us depart."

There is not only defilement of the flesh, but of the spirit. It is not enough to avoid the gross sins of outward life. Those of the inner temple and disposition are equally abhorrent to the holiness of God. We must come out and be separate from the latter as well as the former.

The word cleanse is very decisive in the Greek. It calls for sudden decisive action; and if you answer that sin is too closely interwoven with your nature to be thus summarily disposed of, remember that God demands our will only. Directly we are perfectly willing and eager, He steps in and does all the rest. Let us never be content with less than the endeavour to perfect holiness, being urged forward by the fear of grieving the tender heart of our Father, who waits to receive us into the inner circle of his love.

TUESDAY, July 12.

"See that ye abound in this grace also."—2 Cor. viii. 7.

The grace of liberality is as much a gift of God as faith, or utterance, or knowledge, or love. This is implied in our text, and distinctly stated in ver. 1; in ver. 9 we learn that this grace first dwelt in our blessed Lord, who though He was rich, for our sakes became poor, that we through His poverty might become rich. If yours is a grudging, niggard nature, be sure to go out of yourself in yearning and faith towards the royal nature of the Lord Jesus, that it may fill and possess you, realising in you what is impossible to yourself.

Probably there is no greater test of our true religion than our behaviour in giving. How few, comparatively, give in proportion to their income! How few give systematically! How few have learnt the joy and luxury of giving, so that they abound in this grace!

This arises partly because they do not realise that they are stewards of God's property, and that He expects them to devote all they own to Him, keeping back only a necessary precentage for themselves and their families, as a steward might who was farming an estate for his absent master; and partly it arises from mistrust of God, and the fear that some day there may be a sudden falling off of supplies. Oh that each reader would consider that all is God's, and begin by always giving a certain proportion of every pound, so as to be sure of not robbing God of his own. Pray day and night that you may abound in this grace also.

WEDNESDAY, July 13.

"He that supplieth seed to the sower and bread for food."—2 Cor. ix. 10 (R.V.).

In every harvest there is a twofold object. First, the supply of seed for the next autumn's sowing, and then of food for those that sow or reap; so in the spiritual sphere God will not fail either sowers or reapers.

All sowers must eat. However much wheat has passed through the sower's hands, he is not fed thereby. At night he returns hungry to his home. So we, who are engaged in the work of God, cannot live on what we do for the world around. After the most fruitful day of service, we need to take our Bibles and feed our famished souls by meditation and prayer. We must not mistake the glow and exhilaration of the sanctuary for nourishment. They are rather a stimulant. Therefore we may expect God to increase the fruits of our righteousness. Shall Boaz cause handfuls on purpose to fall for Ruth, and shall not God supply our need? Will the Father not give bread to those who are tilling his fields?

All eaters should sow. It would never do for the farmer to live on all the produce of his fields. He must sow a certain proportion of his grain. And nothing is more foreign to the genius of true religion than to be always nursing and ministering to oneself: eating the fine wheat of the Gospel, but not sowing it in other hearts; consuming the consolations of the Divine Spirit, but not endeavouring to pass them on to others. Oh ye who have eaten bountifully, sow bountifully, else ye shall suffer the results of spiritual repletion and indigestion. And note this precious assurance, that God will supply seed for daily and weekly sowing for the congregation and class, and that He will multiply it when sown, so that many thanksgivings will ascend to God.

"Bringing every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ."—2 Cor. x. 5 (R.V.).

The Apostle is planning a campaign, his words glow with the fire of military enthusiasm; but the weapons of his warfare are not carnal, as one has eloquently said, the standard under which he fights is a more sacred sign than that of Cæsar, the territory he invades is more difficult of conquest than any which kept the conquerors of the world at bay. He sees rising before him the lofty fortresses of hostile Error; they must be reduced or razed. Every mountain fastness to which the enemy of Light and Love can retreat must be scaled and destroyed; and all the thought of the human soul which is hostile to the authority of the Divine truth incarnate in Jesus Christ must be led away as a prisoner of war into the camp of Christ.

Mind to distinguish between the proper use of the intellect by the man who recognises its necessary limitations and uses it in the humble and reverent inquiry after truth, and that undue exaltation of the intellect which sets itself on high as the ultimate judge of truth, or which roams wildly, unheeding the Divine control. These are vain thoughts, sensual thoughts, cynical and self-reliant thoughts, sceptical thoughts, proud thoughts, wandering and wayward thoughts. But the Apostle says that however strongly they fortify themselves against Christ they may be brought into captivity. It was so with Paul; he verily thought he ought to do many things contrary to Jesus, but became his humble disciple.

The intellect has its province; but Faith has hers; and while the intellect tends to exalt man, Faith humbles him and leads him captive in the chains of love.

FRIDAY, July 15.

"In perils."—2 Cor. xi. 26.

This enumeration was made before the imprisonment at Cæsarea and the voyage to Rome. How little do we know of Paul's life, after all! Every victory was hardly fought for and dearly won.

These sufferings attest the truth of Christianity. Whenever a doubt crosses your mind with respect to the Resurrection, or any other Gospel fact, say to yourself, "Paul knew everything that could be said against it. He was in the secrets of the Sanhedrim, and if he believed it we certainly may. And he had nothing to gain by his witness. It was to his great loss, and the shattering of his position in Israel, that he became a Christian."

These sufferings approve the genuineness of Paul's character. This age is athirst for biography, it loves to read the story of its great men; but sometimes we ask whether they are just as real and good and pure as we have been led to hope. There is one life, at least, about which no such inquiry can be raised. The severest tests may be applied to this diamond, but it shines only the brighter—a very Koh-i-noor, "A mountain of light."

These sufferings approve the power of the Holy Spirit. Such love had He inspired toward the Blessed Lord in the heart of the Apostle, that he counted the loss of all things gain, and the uncounted sorrows of his lot as light and but for a moment, if only he might win Christ, and know Him, and be found in Him. You cannot explain a life like this apart from the mighty power and indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

SATURDAY, July 16.

"When I am weak, then am I strong."—2 Cor. xii. 10.

We need not discuss the nature of Paul's thorn in the flesh. It is enough that he calls it "a stake," as though he had been impaled. It must have, therefore, been very painful. It must also have been physical, because he could not have prayed thrice for the removal of a moral taint, and been refused. It came from Satan, permitted by God, as in the case of Job, to buffet his servant. It is not unlikely that he suffered from weak eyes, or some distressing form of ophthalmia, hence the eagerness of the Galatian converts to pluck out and give him their eyes (see Gal. vi. 11, R.V.).

God does not take away our thorns, but He communicates sufficient grace. He always answers prayer, though not as we expect. Canst thou not hear the music of these tender words, poor sufferer? "My grace is sufficient even for thee." Sufficient when friends forsake and foes pursue; sufficient to make thee strong against an infuriated crowd and a tyrannical judge; sufficient for excessive physical exertion and spiritual conflict; sufficient to enable thee to do as much and even more work than if health and vigour were not impaired, because the very weakness of our nature is the chosen condition under which God will manifest the strength of his.

Do not sit down before that mistaken marriage, that uncongenial business, that physical weakness, as though thy life must be a failure; but take in large reinforcements of that Divine grace which is given to the weak and to those who have no might.

Home Missions.

Helping Hungry Folk.

A KNOCK at the door. It is late. The house is empty; the office-folk gone home. No one is supposed to come here after 6 p.m. At the editorial desk a special article is being busily indited, and the editorial pen runs on unconscious of the sound.

The knock again. Up from the desk for the twentieth time to-day, and much inclined to groan inwardly, we pass down the chilly passage to unbolt the door.

Peering out into the darkness we presently discover two small, shabby figures by the lamplight that falls on the white steps—figures so small, so shabby, so shy and grimy and pitiful, that we draw them inside, smiling involuntarily at the queer little picture they present.

"I'm Patrick" (Partrick, he pronounces it), "Partrick h'Entwich," explains the elder of the two in a very frightened voice. "I'm Partrick, an 'e's Michael. Kin yer give us a bit o' bread?"

"Partrick" is very small, but Michael is much smaller, about three feet high, with a shock of matted, yellow hair across his dirty forehead, tattered clothes on his poor little person, and a weary, downcast, wee face that looks as if it never could have smiled.

On being cross-questioned Patrick explains that Michael is seven, but that he is thirteen (he looks for all the world as if he were no older than seven himself!), that "Father's bin out o' work nine months an' 'as sprained 'is ankle," that they "'ave bin roun' to all the 'ouses in the row an' on'y got these bits"—and he discloses a very grimy cloth roll of small size from under his coat sleeve, the "bits" contained in which must indeed be appetising!

Poor little mites, waifs of the crowded city; so small, so young, so wise in the sad world's suffering! A good cup of hot milk and bread comforts their hearts, and we send them away well laden with food and cheer, home through the black, cold streets.

How many hungry folk are round us here in East London!—thousands of fathers "out o' work," and little pinched-up "Partricks." How to relieve their pressing poverty when the long, dark, workless winter hems them in between suffering, sin, and the hated "'ouse," is a perplexing problem. At Christmas, in the worst of the winter, when the unemployed are most unemployed of all, we do what we can, by substantial meals in our mission hall and by Christmas dinners in their homes, to help them to "tide over" the hard and hungry season. But so-called "charity" is rather a doubtful blessing. Helping them to help themselves is best. So when our kind and well-known friend Mr. T. A. Denny offered to start a soup-kitchen at Berger Hall, if we would undertake the working of it, we gladly accepted his proposal.

The kitchen was fitted up with the capital modern appliances (steam boiler, two fifty-gallon steam cookers, and one fifty-gallon water boiler), and turned out 600 quarts of substantial, satisfying soup in a marvellously short space of time. It speedily became exceedingly popular, the neighbourhood greatly appreciating "a lump o' bread an' a quart o' splendid, steamin' soup" for a penny.

Would you like to come and see the kitchen hard at work?

It is the dinner hour in Bromley-by-Bow, as the crowd of little children, many of them so small that they can barely reach the counter round which they are pressing for their "twarts to take 'ome to mother," testifies. Tin beer measures, water-cans, broken bedroom crockery, jugs large and small, with or without handles, and even publicans' cans, are among the various utensils waiting to be filled.

"One twart, please."

"Why, pet, it's 'most too big for you to carry! A whole quart? Who's it for?"

"Me," answers a very small girl, with decision. "Me! Mother's sent me for it. She's sent the penny too. An' 'ere's the pickle jar, please, sir."

With a cheery smile and nod that find a wan reflection on the wee, white face of the child, the good manager exchanges for her penny a strong, steaming "twart," which fills the pickle jar to repletion; and the businesslike little woman trots off, carrying her grateful burden by means of a coarse bit of string tied round the neck of the jar.

It is winter. Hard frozen snow lies massed in grimy piles about the roadway, and trodden into thick black mud round the crowded entrance of the hall. Half-starved dock labourers, who in the vain hope of "gittin' took on for a job" have been hanging round the big dock gates since early morning, are pressing in at the door. One glance at their numbed fingers, and faces blue with the pitilessness of the bleak east wind, is enough to make one's heart ache for these men, and warm with gratitude towards the friend who has so generously and freely helped us to start this kitchen.

There is a run on the soup to-day. It is nearly one o'clock, and since mid-day four hundred quarts have been sold. Perhaps the frozen wind and snowy weather have something to do with it; at any rate, the workers' hands are kept busy.

"Aren't you coming in, my man? Don't stand shivering in the cold. Here, bring your soup inside and make yourself at home like the rest!"

The words are hastily addressed in a cheery voice by one of our bright-faced helpers, who is busy with the département de l'intérieur, where by the blazing fire of the hall those who are "consuming their soup on the premises," as the manager would say, are seated complacently enjoying at their ease the big hunches of bread and bowls of savoury brew.

"No, thankee, sir. I ain't a-comin' in. It's fur my wife I wants it."

The worker pauses a moment to look at him with more attention. "I don't recognise your face. Are you a stranger here? I hope your wife is well?"

"No, sir, an' yes. Leastways, it's yes and no. I am a stranger 'ere, an' my wife's werry bad," he answers in a troubled tone. "N'ur'shment the doctor says she must 'ave. I 'ears as you give a good dinner 'ere fur a penny, an' I 'ave walked over from the West India Dock fur to git it."

"Well, you're just in time, for we're nearly sold out. I hope it will do your wife good."

A hearty grip of the hand, and the man was gone—out into the chilly air, and away for a two miles' tramp, bearing his precious burden to the poor sick wife at home, who certainly would get well if a husband's devotion could act as "n'ursh'ment." Love, thank God, is no stranger in London lanes and alleys.

And now one o'clock strikes, and our supply has come to an end.

"Four hundred and twenty quarts in an hour," says the manager; "a good day's work. No, no more, ma'am. Sold out. Though I'm really very sorry!" he adds, as the last comers turn with disappointed faces away from the open door. "Come earlier to-morrow."

With which closing remark we must end our visit to the Berger Hall Soup Kitchen, only reminding you that, though its doors are now closed for the summer season, we expect, all being well, to reopen before long; and that if you missed the privilege of helping last season you may yet have opportunity, and should by all means try to "come earlier to-morrow."

The needs of the work do not cease with the winter, and we heartily wish that you would not only come to-morrow, but to-day, by personal visit or by letter to our headquarters (Harley House, Bow, London, E.), and give a helping hand to the far-reaching mission work that much needs help from you. Gifts would be specially valued just now towards our numerous summer garden meetings and excursions for the East End townsfolk, who weary at midsummer for fresh air—for the sweet country air that is, thank God, so commonplace to most of us.

Lucy E. Guinness.

On Tuesday afternoon last a well-appointed medical mission was opened in connection with Berger Hall and its many-sided work. The need of this agency has long been felt, and it is hoped that it will perform a ministry of beneficence, and lead many to the great Physician of souls.

Colporteurs in Training.

A NEW forward movement has been made by the Christian Colportage Association in the formation of a Home for the training and testing of candidates for the position of colporteur.

For some time past a great difficulty has been experienced in obtaining fit men for the work. Many applicants have had to be rejected who would probably, with a short course of training, have made excellent colporteurs, so that the need for a place of training has become a necessity if the work is to be carried on efficiently in the future.

The old Railway Convalescent Home, at Hastings having been secured for three years, the Home was opened on Friday, July 1, when an interesting dedication service and conference, presided over by Mr. W. H. Seagram, was held in the Railway Mission Hall adjoining, at which many friends from Hastings, St. Leonards, and surrounding district, as well as some from London, were present. On the platform were the Revs. J. A. Jamieson, F. Whitfield, R. S. Woodward, and R. Cowan, Mr. A. A. Head, and other friends both of the Railway Mission and the Christian Colportage Association.

It was explained that the training in the Home will be a simple course of instruction in the great fundamental truths of the Bible, accompanied with advice and suggestion as to how best to meet, from the Word of God, the various difficulties encountered in the work from the sceptical, the careless, and the anxious with whom the men come in contact from day to day.

Part of each day will be devoted to practical colportage work in Hastings and the surrounding villages under the guidance of an old and experienced colporteur, who will be in charge of the Home.

The course in the Home will also be a useful means of testing candidates as to their fitness for the work before being appointed to a district, and give opportunities for teaching the principles of the work.

The deepening of the spiritual life of candidates will have first thought and care, that they may go forth truly consecrated men, possessed by the high aim of the Society, to win souls for Jesus Christ.

The house will also be utilised as a convalescent home for any of the Society's colporteurs needing rest or requiring change after illness, who may not otherwise be able to obtain it.

Information may be obtained from the secretary, Mr. H. D. Brown, 37, Farringdon-street, London, E.C.

South London Christian Union.

A REMARKABLE meeting was held on Peckham Rye on Sunday, under the auspices of this association of Christian workers. The services of the day began with a prayer meeting at 7 a.m., in the open air, at which fully 350 friends were present. There was a time of earnest waiting upon God, and it was an impressive sight to see all these Christians on their knees, lifting up their voices to God for his blessing. The brightness of the morning and the beauty of the natural surroundings contributed to render this early prayer meeting truly refreshing. In the morning Pastor Frank Smith preached an appropriate special sermon at the Peckham Tabernacle, on 1 Chron. iv. 23. At this service many of the friends of the Union were present, and some assisted the pastor in the service.

In the afternoon a large company of Christian workers assembled near the High-street, Peckham; it consisted of members of all the churches and of the many mission agencies of the neighbourhood. These proceeded in procession to the Rye, led by various bands. The London County Council made the most careful arrangements for the reception of the different contingents of Christian friends, and a most enthusiastic mass meeting followed. Addresses of a definite Gospel character were delivered by different Christian workers, including Pastor Frank Smith, Rev. J. Postans, Messrs. Martin, Clarkson, Lamb, Richards, Cook, Kingsbury, Ned Wright, and Mr. Alfred Holness, president of the Union, who presided at the meeting. Letters were read of a most cordial character from Revs. F. B. Meyer, Rev. John Ewing, and Mr. Goddard Clarke, and others who were unable to be present. It is computed that at the lowest estimate 10,000 persons attended this gathering. It was felt by many to be a time of much blessing, and it is believed that the power of God accompanied the Word proclaimed.

On the Blackdown Hills.

HAVING recently returned from a fifteen days' visit to the scene of our labours for so many years, a few notes may not be unwelcome to your readers, whose sympathy and prayers have so often succoured us in the work of the Gospel.

Our purpose in spending a fortnight on the Hills was primarily to seek renewed health to my wife, who for twelve months has been in a delicate state, and a little bracing and rest for myself by the exhilarating air and charming scenery of the neighbouroood. But the rest took the form of further happy work for the Lord and his people, for just before we went Mr. Showell, who labours for the Master at Clayhidon principally, was laid aside by bronchitis, and was confined to his room the whole time of our stay. I am glad to report that Mr. Showell is now better, and able to get out of doors again, though not equal to his full duties.

During our stay we endeavoured to compass as much as possible in the time, and visited five out of the six stations, to find in each place much cause for thanksgiving to God. Our first Lord's Day was spent at Clayhidon and Bolham. The anniversary services had been arranged for that day.

Of late there has been a manifest work of grace going on among the young at Browndown, and quite a number (nearly twenty, I was told) have recently confessed to salvation. This is cheering news indeed. I look back over similar blessing at Clayhidon in years gone by—boys and girls of from twelve to sixteen brought to Christ in great numbers. Now these are our Sunday-school teachers and preachers. At the present time we have nine young men regularly preaching the Gospel on the Hills who were thus brought to the Lord.

We were saddened by the news of the removal from us of one of our most esteemed brethren, converted some years ago at Clayhidon, and who was one of the elders of the little assembly there. His godly and irreproachable life was a telling power to all around, and his death was a triumph. He was ill but a short time with pneumonia, but all who witnessed his home-going said it was like heaven itself to be there—his words, his countenance, his joy, were wonderful. Praise God for such a testimony as his, borne in life and lip to the very end. We could multiply instances of similar blessing.

The Gospel Tent, which I have given into the care of Mr. Glover, as last year, is a means of reaching many hundreds in the villages, and God is richly blessing his work. The following from Mr. Glover will interest many, and lead to prayer and thanksgiving. Writing from near Axminster last week, he says: "We stayed seventeen days at Hewood, and the Lord graciously owned his work in the salvation of souls. Helpful addresses were given at the closing meeting to the converts by several friends. We began here last night, and there is every prospect of blessing."

The work at Bishopswood is very encouraging. The days-chool is prospering, and the meetings cheering. The Mission House is drawing near completion. We still need considerably more to clear it of debt, and would be glad not to have to raise a mortgage. The many needs of the mission are often a heavy burden on us; but we trust in God, who hath promised never to leave or to forsake.

Seaside Missionary Meetings.

SIR,—Many are the ways in which Christians are to-day endeavouring to obey the command of the Saviour to "preach the Gospel to every creature." But how many people there are who know little or nothing whatever about the needs of the millions "in heathen darkness dwelling"! With a view to reach some of those who visit this seaside resort, we held a series of meetings here last August on the shore and the green. So marked was the interest manifested in this effort that we are repeating it (D.V.) this year. (See Forthcoming Meetings, p. 30.) Silloth is within easy reach of Keswick. There is a daily service of steamers to and from Liverpool, and a bi-weekly service to and from Dublin, calling at Douglas, Isle of Man.

Co-operative Outings.

DEAR SIR,—Many of your readers who reside in the suburbs near to open country would doubtless be glad to share their privileges with the children of the not far distant slums if they saw how to do so. May I therefore explain a scheme which has worked well in Hampstead.

Friends interested invite parties of ten to spend the afternoon and take tea with them, preferably in the open, collecting the sum required for return fares and handing it to a chosen secretary.

The secretary having received several such invitations for a given Saturday afternoon, passes them on to some mission in the slums, which collects and sends in charge of one or two adults the total number required of needy children of the sex and ages specified. Each ten of these have their names written on a separate sheet of paper, and wear a bit of colour on their jackets, an eleventh piece of which is pinned on the corresponding list. On arriving at their destination, the groups of ten and their lists are handed over to their respective hosts, who make their own arrangements as to entertainment. All meet at a rendezvous at a given hour, where an opportunity is afforded for a hymn and a few helpful words. Meanwhile, the adults who have brought them have been separately entertained, and now resume charge for the homeward journey. In case of bad weather, arrangements are made beforehand for the loan of some conveniently situated school-room. Members of the various young people's societies are always willing to help in this way if called upon, and the definiteness and simplicity of the service required enables even big boys and girls to entertain such parties.

I will gladly give further details to anyone thinking of setting this scheme on foot elsewhere. Should any who read this like to come up to Hampstead and enjoy our glorious heath in charge of a party of youngsters, let them send me a half-a-crown for the fares, and I will have a party of ten to meet them at Hampstead Heath Station at 2.30 any Saturday afternoon. There are plenty of houses near the heath at which a good tea can be had at 4d. to 6d. a head. We have had as many as 150 at once in this way without a hitch. Cripples and old people can be similarly entertained.—Yours faithfully,

Budgett Meakin.

The Beaufoy Institute.

THE Lambeth Ragged School Society reports a large amount of work at the Beaufoy Institute, Lambeth-walk, S.E., but urges with intense earnestness the claims of such service on Christian young people. More workers are sorely wanted in all such centres, and not least in crowded Lambeth.

The Beaufoy Institute for young men and boys, with the girls' club and the other classes, send most satisfactory reports, and are a great encouragement to the workers. The joyousness of the country holidays report is only dimmed by its reduced capacity. The cooking and sewing classes for girls are doing capital service. The infants' playroom is still conducted with much success. The temperance society and the band of hope do not show great advance, in the absence of sufficient workers. The general mission operations are well reported on. The cripples' classes have proved most encouraging. These few notes indicate the wide range of effort in full and active operation at this busy Lambeth centre in the very heart of a densely populated and very poor district. The hon. sec. is Mr. S. A. Jones, 13, Montrell-road, Streatham Hill, S.W.

Homeless Little Ones.

THE work of care for young children which Mrs Ransome Wallis began as the "Babies' Home" is now being carried on under the title of the Haven for Homeless Little Ones. The work is essentially preventive in character, as the Haven receives the children of women who have made a sad fall or been cruelly deceived; and by its intervention the poor mothers are prevented from sinking into ruin, and in fact sustained in their resolves to lead lives of virtue and usefulness. The children have just been removed from Vine House, Walthamstow, to Walton-on-the-Hill, near Epsom. A fine old residence, known as the Castle House, has been secured, which makes a model nursery for sixty-five of these much to be pitied, homeless little ones. We make brief extracts from the fourth annual report:—

"Of those applying last year we were able to receive thirty-five children. During the year eight children were adopted into Christian families, we lost two by death, and we closed the year with seventy-six. It is difficult to give details of cases or to convey an idea of the sadness of the lot of many who apply. In two cases mother and child were without food, sitting in lodgings, helpless and starving, the mother unable to work on account of the baby, almost maddened by its cries for food. Both were respectable servants, bearing excellent characters except for one fall. Temporary help was given, the baby received immediately, and in each case the mother has gone to service and done well.

"An orphan, a daughter of middle-class people much respected in a Scotch town, came to us in deepest distress. She had only come up to London about a year before, and now nothing but ruin was before her. We advised her writing to her friends, which she did, with the result that she was received home, we taking her child. She soon obtained work to pay towards his keep. We called on her in her Scotch home last summer, and the tears of gratitude of the one who knew of the sad history of that terrible twelve months in London were ample reward to us for the care of the little boy.

"While a few of the mothers give us trouble, the great bulk go on very steadily and well, and most of them are never behindhand with their payments. A short time ago we found that out of seventy there were sixty-one paying regularly, and to the very utmost of their ability. They are most grateful, and prove that they have been worth helping."

During the year the work has developed considerably, details of which may be found in the report, which closes:—"Here are sixty or seventy children cared for and educated, children in peculiar danger of sinking; sixty or seventy mothers helped, advised, and guided—mothers in peculiar danger of drifting further on the rock—on £400, and yet there is a deficiency of £136 this year. If Christian women, especially mothers, saw the working of it as we do, the ruin that comes through 'letting alone,' and the immeasurable good to mother and child by a little judicious help, there would never again be a deficiency in the funds." Communications to Mrs. Ransome Wallis should be addressed: Copthill, Burgh Heath, Epsom.

City of London Total Abstainers' Union.

YOUNG men coming to London business houses are often met by the enticements and allurements of city life, and are in danger of drifting away from temperance principles. The chairman of one of the Union's meetings in the City recently called special attention to this fact, and strongly urged young men, when coming to London for the first time, to associate themselves with some temperance organisation, and such are very heartily asked to join this Union. Facilities are placed at its disposal in many houses of business, by which it has been able to present total abstinence truths to those employed in the large warehouses, and the measure of success given is very encouraging. The work of the union is of a double character—to secure adherents, and to strengthen those who are already in the ranks. The secretary, Mr. F. Gibbon Toller, will at all times be happy to wait upon principals of houses of business with a view to arrange meetings or take pledges from employees. Address, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

MILDMAY ADDRESSES.

Prayer and God's Will.

By Rev. E. A. STUART.

In Col. i. 9, Paul says, "We do not cease to pray for you, and to desire that ye might be filled with the knowledge of his will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding," etc. I remember taking this as the subject of one of my earliest sermons. I noted seven things for which the Apostle prayed: that the Colossians might be understanding, consistent, fruitful, growing, strong, patient, and joyful Christians. A little while ago, looking back on the subject, I wondered whether I had really grasped what was in the mind of the Apostle, and the question that suggested itself was this—What does he mean by the will of God? Does he pray that upon each special occasion, as a difficulty presents itself to them, they may understand God's will for them on that special occasion? Or was there some one definite thing which he realised to be the will of God, and which he prayed that they might understand to be the will of God? I turned to Ephesians i. 9, and there I found a very similar expression: "Having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure, which He hath purposed in Himself: that in the dispensation of the fulness of times He might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are on earth." I have come to the conclusion that this definite thing which Paul regarded as the will of God, and which he prayed that the Colossian Church might know, was nothing less than of Jesus Christ our Lord.

This is, therefore, a missionary prayer for the Church of Christ. It is full of important lessons for the Church. The news had come to Paul of a strange hybrid heresy in the Colossian Church—on the one side the beginning of speculation as to strange mysteries, and on the other hand a going back to the beggarly elements of Judaism and Ritualism. Paul hardly knows how to deal with this heresy, but he feels that if only the Colossians could be so filled with the knowledge of this as the will of God—that the Gospel shall be proclaimed to every creature, all these strange speculations would be seen to be idle, and these Judaistic regulations would be seen to be petty.

Therefore, as a safeguard for the purity of the Church, he prays that they may be filled with the knowledge of God's will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding, or sunesis. In those days the spiritual sunesis would be the girdling with roads of the whole known world, so that the messengers of Christ were able to go from city to city and from country to country. The spiritual sunesis to-day would be seen in to spread the Gospel throughout the world. It would see God's hand in the opening up of doors for the entrance of the truth on every side, in the crumbling away of the Chinese Empire, and it would say that God must have a purpose in all this. It would see in Western Africa, in the opening of the great Hausa land, a wondrous opportunity for us to go there as deliverers from the evils of the drink curse. Seeing these open doors, this wisdom and spiritual understanding would lead us to kneel down and pray the great Lord of the harvest to send forth labourers; and then we would rise up and say, "Here am I, Lord, send me." If this knowledge of the will of God possesses the Church, she will walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing. There will be no haste or excitement, no taking up of fresh schemes or starting of fresh societies, but a steady walk in the line of God's purposes.

A second result will be the growing in knowledge, in love, and in faith. The spiritual life of the Church will be brightened, and deepened, and heightened. There will also be an increase of spiritual strength. When a man gets to see what is God's purpose, it enables him to stand firm against the world. He will also be more patient; keeping on in spite of difficulty and want of success, because he knows he is in the line of God's plan and purpose. Moreover, there will be in the Church an increase of spiritual joy.

The influence of true prayer on the extension of the Church of Christ will be felt in the whole Church rising up to see, as never before, that its great raison d'être is to be found in God's purpose to proclaim the Gospel to every creature. It will upon the world. It will see the world as Christ saw it. It will pray that labourers may be sent into the harvest field. Our Lord Himself prayed this. If the Church grasped this thought, that as we are praying here on earth the Master is praying there in heaven, what a power it would give to our prayers!

The Church will not only pray for more labourers, but that these labourers may be chosen by the Holy Ghost; that He would direct their steps, and lay his hands on them for blessing. Paul, you recollect, again and again made the plea, "Brethren, pray for us." When God had given him success in his work, he attributes very much of the success to the prayers of those whom he had left behind. He says, in 2 Cor. i. 11, "Ye also helping together by prayer for us." The Greek word used here is such a beautiful word. It means "working together with us underneath." The world, he says, does not take any cognisance of your prayers, but by them you have been working together with us underneath. God only knows how in that great day, when we shall see the causes that have produced great results, how many of these causes have been entirely overlooked by the world; they have been found, not perchance in the energy or eloquence or argument of some great missionary, but in some little back chamber where some saint has been pleading with God for the outpouring of his Holy Spirit upon that special servant of his in a distant land.

The Deepening of Spiritual Life.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER.

Leaving on one side the reflex influence of prayer upon persons and undertakings that are its subject upon ourselves, the speaker dwelt on its effects and burden. By prayer in lonely hours, on the moor, by the seaside, on the mountains, or in the sick chamber, we may secure that deepening of the spiritual life of our times which will tell upon the conversion of mankind. The sublime prayer of our Lord recorded in John xvii. cannot be located, nor can it be confined in time application; but its intercession gathers round seven gifts or graces: (verse 3) that they may know God; (11) that they may be kept; (13) that they may drink of the deep well-spring of his joy; (17) that they may be fully sanctified, or consecrated; (21) that they might be one; (24) that they might be with Him for evermore and see his glory; (26) that the love of God might fill their hearts for ever.

Who shall doubt that this prayer of Christ has had its effect, not only upon the Church in her journey down the ages, but upon you and me? We have realised the blessings of the prayer—being led to know God, and being kept in a marvellous manner; we have known Christ's joy, also his sanctifying power; we have felt the drawing unity of the Church, have sat—at times, at least—with Christ and seen the glory which the Father has given Him; and the love of God, like a strong tide, has beat and throbbed in the hearts of hundreds of his children here and elsewhere. Who shall doubt that this deepening of our spiritual life is due to Him who so many centuries ago prayed for us who should believe on Him through the Apostle's word? Do not some of us say, when burst upon our souls, "Somebody must be praying for me." Yes, somebody; though no breath of human lips may be spent on your behalf. Away in the glory the Great High Priest, with an infinite love, is pleading that your spiritual life may be ripened.

I need not dwell upon the fact that the work of our Lord on earth was perpetuated in the glory; in the words of the Apostle, He pleads for us in the power of an indissoluble life. Notice the remarkable parallelism in John xiv. 16 and Acts ii. 33: in the former the Lord intimated that, on his ascension, He would pray the Father to send another Comforter; in the latter we read, "Being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, He hath poured forth this." It is as though, when the Lord passed upward into the presence of his Father, the Father said, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased," and asked what guerdon He would have for his toil and death, his fear and obedience. Then, as we may reverently conceive, the Son asked that He might have the power to his people, as the Father had given the same to Himself. It is as if He said: "Father, let the Divine fulness of the Holy Spirit reside in my human nature—my Divine-man nature as the Head of the Church—that I may be able to dispense that blessed Spirit to all my members." And it pleased the Father that in Him should all the fulness dwell—in that human body; and the Lord shed the Spirit forth.

This is the point to which I come. Directly the Holy Spirit came into the heart of the Church, to be a representative of Christ, and to carry on in the Church the work which the Lord was carrying out on the throne—directly the Spirit entered the hearts of God's children, He set up there an intercession on behalf of the Church like that which the Lord began in his earthly ministry and is maintaining through the ages. Turn, therefore, to Rom. viii., and note the remarkable progression of the three groanings—of creation, of the children of God, and of the Holy Spirit. The creation groaning and travailing relates to birth, even as the Apostle wrote, "My little children, for whom I travail until Christ be formed in you." The Spirit "maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God." We do not know much of this, because we have not given ourselves to prayer. I like that word of the Apostle, "We will give ourselves to prayer," as if prayer was passing over us, and waiting to be taken up by men. So many of us, by giving ourselves up perpetually to various occupations, and to dwelling in the midst of crowds of people—given up to our work and our sermons—have no time for prayer. There is a wonderful illustration of this in the life of St. Paul. We have been accustomed to think of the great Apostle as a traveller, a writer, and a church founder; but do we sufficiently give him credit as a man who laboured in prayer? Take his first Epistle, that to the Thessalonians, and you will find him praying that those to whom he wrote might "abound in love one toward another," and that they might be "unblameable" before God.

Then, following through the series of Epistles in their chronological order, you will note how his prayer deepened and widened, until in the Epistle to the Ephesians he asks that God would teach them to know the love of God which passeth knowledge. Why should we not take these prayers of the Apostle, and, forgetting our own little love and progress in grace, pray them over again for the Church of God? I believe that we should make an immense if we ceased to think about our own sanctification and thought about the sanctification of somebody else. I believe that the reason why some of us make such small progress in the Christian life is that we are always dwelling upon our own experiences, our own progress, our own emotions. Oh, that we could launch out from the shore and let down our net in the deep of God's infinite love, and begin to fish for other people as well as for our own selves!

I cannot forbear, in coming to the Church at large, to turn to one almost unknown saint—I mean Epaphras, of whom we have the marvellous record (Col. iv. 12) that he was "one of you," i.e., an ordinary nobody, "a servant of Christ," one who was willing to be known as a slave of Christ. We read of him: He "saluteth you, always striving fervently for you in his prayers"—always "agonising," the word used being the same as occurs in the story of Christ in Gethsemane—"that ye may stand perfect and fully assured in all the will of God." Paul wished the Colossians to know how much Epaphras agonised for them; two were agonising together. When we preach, or work, or write, there are people around to applaud, and to record in the public Press, and there is the stimulus of external interest and admiration; but work of which the Church of Christ takes no account. The blessing that falls upon the people for whom you pray is not credited to you; if it were, some of us would no doubt start praying!

Mr. Hudson Taylor has told the story of a mission station that was visited with perpetual revival, and he was at a loss to know why. Coming back to England, he met a man who questioned him closely about that station, and this led to an inquiry into the deep interest evinced. The man explained that he prayed for that station more than anything beside, so he just wanted to know how things were going on. God says: "I have set watchmen on thy walls that shall never hold their peace." Does God wonder why we do not intercede? May we not ask Him to set us on the walls, that we may never hold our peace day nor night, so that it may be with us as it was with Christ, who prayed until He was transfigured? Pray for others, and the light that you ask for them will illumine your own face. Be a channel through which the river of God may flow to others, and you will be enriched in your own soul. Pass on, and you will find at length an overplus of fragments—twelve baskets full for your own sustenance in the Divine life.

Intercessory Prayer.

By Rev. G. H. C. MACGREGOR.

I am sure we have all felt that in this Conference there has been a very marked progress in the teaching from hour to hour and day to day. We began by speaking about the basis of true prayer, the foundations on which it rests; and we found that that basis is the character of the God to whom we pray. Then we went on to the encouragements and promises that there are to draw us forth in the exercise of prayer. All this teaching has been gathering itself up that we may be led forward to the theme now before us—the use of prayer for the accomplishment of God's will in the world. The more we know of prayer, the more it sums itself up in this petition—"Thy will be done."

To-night our thoughts are specially directed to the influence of prayer in extending the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ. I suppose almost all here are intensely interested in missions. We sometimes thank God that we live in a day when the missionary cause has such a deep interest taken in it, and when over the whole world missions are making such rapid progress. I confess that since I began to study missions closely what I feel most keenly is not the work done, but

THE WORK THAT IS LEFT UNDONE.

Although one does thank God for the progress made, one is almost heartbroken as one reflects on the enormous regions practically untouched; and on the perfectly heart-breaking apathy of numbers of professing Christians at home. I do not know anything sadder than to look at the financial aspect of missions—for, after all, we must remember that that is a gauge of the interest that Christians take in this matter. When we think that the average annual contribution of the professing Christian is a little less than half a farthing in the pound, it is perfectly awful to think of God's work being hindered so terribly all over the world because people who have money will not give the money. And all the time thousands are every hour passing away into the darkness of a Christless eternity. That is what I feel increasingly.

We come to ask, when we know it to be the will of God that this Gospel should go forth to the whole world, and that the whole world has now been laid open, to hasten on the coming of our Lord. I believe the reason is simply this: God is waiting for his people to learn how to be intercessors. It is of this intercession, and of what is needful ere we can intercede, that I wish to speak for a little. Although we may think it is a simple thing to pray and to intercede, it seems to me that the more we know of it the more awful and difficult it becomes. We must come as little children, and sit at our Master's feet and say, again and again, "Lord, teach us to pray."

WHY MORE IS NOT DONE

First of all, I would like to say in regard to this matter that the work of intercession is beyond doubt the greatest and

HIGHEST FORM OF CHRISTIAN SERVICE.

Salvation, as we all acknowledge, is an essentially unselfish thing. The man who is saved is always saved to serve. But you must have noticed that all Christian service is twofold. Toward man for God it is a service of witness, and towards God for man it is a service of intercession. The whole of a man's spiritual experience might be gathered round the experience of his prayer life; for the spiritual life is essentially a life of communion with God. But you must have noticed that in prayer, with the one exception of adoration, in which God alone is the object, there is nothing higher than intercesions. I believe the highest exercise of which the human soul is capable is adoration—the prostration of the soul before the magnificence and glory of God. Next to adoration, I say, comes intercession.

There are one or two things that make it specially interesting to us, and that lead us to see in it the noblest form of service to which our Master can call us. For example, there is nothing that

BRINGS US CLOSER TO OUR LORD

Himself than the ministry of intercession. That is what He is principally engaged in at present. There is, as we say, the finished work of Christ, but there is also an unfinished work of Christ that He is carrying on in heaven and on earth—on the earth by his Spirit working in our hearts, and in heaven carrying it on Himself. The work He is doing there is that of intercession, and it seems to me that when the Lord would bestow a special honour and privilege upon any of his children He calls them to this ministry of intercession.

There is another thing we may know about it. Its influence and power in connection with Christian service cannot be over estimated. I was speaking lately to a number of theological students, and I said to them: "I would far rather train twenty men to pray than a thousand men to preach." I believe ought to be to teach his people to pray. I would rather be the minister of a hundred people who know how to pray than of a thousand who know how to listen. How often we count it success when people gather to listen; while away in some difficult corner of the city, or in some hidden part of the country, there may be a servant of God who has gathered a handful of people round him, and has taught them to pray. It is not the city congregation with its throng, but the country congregation with its little band, that is shaking the kingdoms of the world, and bringing multitudes to Christ. May the Lord give us ministers a holy ambition to be made the means, in his good and gracious providence, of teaching our people how to pray.

Let me say a word as to the special call there is at the present moment to prayer in connection with missions. You must have noticed that every missionary who writes home says: "Brethren, pray for us." They ask for more labourers, but there is even greater urgency in their call for prayer. It seems to me profoundly interesting and instructive that this should be so, and that God by his missionary servants is calling on his people at home to take up with greater earnestness and thoroughness the ministry of intercession.

For this ministry two things are absolutely needful. First of all there is needed the full and then there is needed a special work of the Holy Ghost upon our hearts. The work of intercession, if I understand it, is not work for spiritual infants, but for those who are men in Christ Jesus. Properly understood, it seems to me not to belong so much to the full Christian life as to the overflowing Christian life. We must let the Holy Spirit have unhindered rule over our hearts. I believe the reason why so few of us have power in intercession is that we are not fit for it. It implies a nearness to God that we do not enjoy, and a surrender to God that we have not made.

If you care to look into Scripture on this point, ask yourselves who are the men in Old Testament times who stand out pre-eminent as intercessors. Abraham, Moses, Daniel, Job are among the men who knew God best in those times, and were fully given up to do his will. These are the very men whom God called and led forward to the sacred ministry of intercession. If we take Daniel, we see how remarkably God dealt with him and trained him for this ministry. His life was crowned in connection with this ministry. The greatest thing he did was at the end of his life. It was when he was engaged in intercession for his people that God made those marvellous revelations to him. But you notice that he did not attain to this power all at once. God had to do a wonderful work in his heart and soul and life before he became the powerful intercessor.

First of all, he was a man whom God had freed from the power of sin in a remarkable way; so that Daniel was a man who lived practically a blameless life. Even his enemies had to confess that they could find no accusation against him except concerning the law of his God. Then God had given him deliverance over self-indulgence. He was a man who had his body thoroughly under control; he would not be dictated to by bodily appetite. He was also a man free from the fear of consequences. When they threatened to cast him into the den of lions, he went and threw his window open and prayed himself right into the den. He was also delivered from all desire for reward. "Thy rewards be to another," he said to Belshazzar. More wonderful still, he was freed from the power of self-esteem. When he revealed the dream to Nebuchadnezzar he sprang at a bound to the very forefront of the kingdom of Babylon, but he could say that it was not because of any wisdom of his.

Have you not felt as I have gone over these points how it is that we are not the intercessors we might be? We have not got this full experience of God's saving power. Of how many of us, alas! it can be said that we are yet under the power of sin. We are God's children and are yet giving way more or less to hugging these to our hearts. God says, "If ye regard iniquity in your heart I cannot hear you." These things are preventing us from being prevailing intercessors.

How many, again, are bound by the power of self-indulgence. We are so glad that there is no definite command to fast, because we would not like to do it. A badly cooked dinner would make us lose our temper. This self-indulgence, love of ease and pleasure, love of sleep, are among the reasons why we wield so little power in prayer. How few of us, too, have got past the fear of consequences, the desire for reward, and that most miserable thing of all, self-esteem. And then, when the Spirit of the Lord leads us out in prayer, is there not often a subtle kind of pride because we seem to have the reputation of having power in prayer? What poor creatures we are! Is it not a marvel and a miracle of the grace of God that He allows our prayers to prevail at all?

For this work of intercession, not only is it needful to experience fully the Lord's saving power, but it seems to me that there is required what I may speak of as upon our souls. In connection with all service, if it is to be of the highest kind, there must be the enduement of the Holy Spirit. What is true of all service is especially true of the service of prayer. It is only when we pray in the Holy Ghost, as Jude puts it, that we know what it is to intercede prevailingly. Have we learned in this Conference what it is to pray in the Holy Ghost? The Spirit dwelling within us must reveal to us the will of God as the highest conceivable good for us and for all men. The Spirit must also tell us what to pray for. I suppose all here who know God know what it is to have the Spirit of God bringing home promises to the heart, and making them the basis out of which our prayer springs. How often our prayers fail, and our intercessions fail, because we do not yield ourselves to the Spirit of God to be taught how to pray, that we may not only ask things that are right, but ask for them aright; falling into line with the purposes and will of God, and making that our supreme desire.

If we so yield ourselves in connection with the ministry of intercession, of what character will it be? Here we enter upon a most interesting subject that might be treated at length. Let me point out what I believe some of the will be. If we have been thus taught of God our prayers will always be profoundly reverent. I have heard intercessory prayers that were profoundly irreverent; no wonder they did not prevail. The soul that is praying under the influence and power of the Holy Ghost will remember the majesty and glory of God, and there will be the lowliest self-surrender and the most absolute submission to God's holy will. Then it will be importunate. It will be the prayer of a man who feels that prayer is the great business of his life. When we have got into the heart of the matter of intercession, the one thing that we are concerned about is that the will of God shall be done on earth. We can always pray for that, day and night, hour after hour, so that our life will become a life of intercession. It will be no spasmodic affair, or a matter of the morning and evening exercise. There will be this continual yearning that the will of God should be done, and his glory manifested forth to men.

There is another point touched upon during the Conference—our prayer will be agonising. Frankly, I will say I do not know what that means, and I will tell you why I do not. Agony in prayer comes from looking out upon the world as Jesus Christ looks upon it; and there are very few of us who have the vision of the world that Jesus Christ has. We do not have that passionate horror of sin that He had, and the awful shrinking from it that He had. Our souls are not consumed with zeal for the glory of God, as his soul was, and so we cannot pray as He did. We cannot know the agony of prayer that He knew, as He wrought out the world's redemption; but the Holy Ghost can teach us something of it, filling our hearts with something of the Saviour's compassion and love for the world, and with his intense, consuming, overmastering desire for the glory of God.

If the Lord made all who are here intercessors of that kind, what would be the result? The word of the Lord would run and be glorified, and

THE VERY WORLD WOULD BE SHAKEN.

From all lands men would go forth to preach the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ in all lands, and as they preached multitudes would be broken down under the power of the Gospel and brought into possession of God's salvation. That day, for which we all pray, would be brought to pass when the number of God's elect would be accomplished and the Lord Himself would return and take his power and reign. Men and women whom God has called to the knowledge of the fellowship of his son Jesus Christ, will you make it a matter of special prayer that as this conference closes God may call you to this sacred ministry of intercession and fill you with his Holy Spirit for this most blessed work?

Power for Service.

By Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE.

In Hebrews v. 7 we read of the Lord Jesus Christ that "in the days of his flesh, when he had offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears unto Him that was able to save Him from death, and was heard in that He feared; though He were a Son, yet learned He obedience by the things which He suffered; and being made perfect, He became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey Him." If time permitted, I would like to pause for a considerable while to consider Him of whom these words were spoken; for the more deeply you enter into their force the more you must be amazed that they are employed concerning God's beloved Son, of whom we read, two verses earlier, that the Father glorified Him, saying, "Thou art my Son, to-day have I begotten Thee."

If the words were spoken of some pre-eminent sinner, calling upon God in his infinite mercy to be tender and pitiful towards the guilty, then I think we could regard the words as natural and convenient; but when we take into consideration that the words were spoken concerning Him who had no sin, in whom the Father was always well pleased I humbly confess that there is a position taken up by this language that is utterly incomprehensible to the mind, and can only be apprehended by the spirit. That the Son should have to endure strong crying and tears, and that though, as we know, the Father heard Him always, He should in this relation be "heard in that He feared," must be to us an amazing fact; yet I think we have before us now a glorious revelation through Him who is our pattern as well as our power, of the real nature, force, and privilege of prayer. The question arises, How shall I pray — what shall I pray for? Turning to our Master we humbly say, and there comes back to us not merely a form of words which He deigned to give to the earl apostles, but also a pattern, a picture of the power of prayer.

Prayer is not simply the outpouring of certain desires, but the very life of the being who prays. It is the expression of the heart towards God, we know; but it is more—it is to the spiritual life what breathing is to the body. We draw in that we may give out, and unconsciously, moment by moment. So by prayer; we receive power, not by constantly claiming the gift or the sensation of it, but by taking what God supplies moment by moment. Where there is a deepening of the spiritual life there must be power for service, and where there is power for service there must be a spread of the Church. The man who would be powerful among the heathen finds that blessing in Christ alone, and is enabled to say, "For me to live is Christ." Here we come to the crux of the whole matter. How far is the Christ of God—not merely the picture before the eyes of our souls, not simply the pattern by which we hope and aspire to get nearer to God—but how far is He our very life-power, enabling us unconsciously and gloriously to be the reflection of Him before the world? It is as men love Christ that they will have power, and as they exhibit Christ that they will carry weight around them and among the heathen throughout the world.

What has Christ taught us concerning prayer, and how is He exhibited to us as the man who was prayer? (Psa. cix. 4). I answer that we have that need to be weighed and considered. First, the Lord Jesus Christ actually did pray, with groanings, with tears, with strong crying, with supplication, unto God in heaven, as if there was a literal necessity for Him to beseech the throne of grace, of which we read in Heb. iv. 16. Secondly, we learn that the Christ of God was heard in that He feared, or as the original has it, on account of his piety, or, as the R.V., "for his godly fear." Thirdly, we find that notwithstanding that He was heard as He pleaded with One who could have saved Him from death—and though it is declared that He was heard, as implying that an answer was given to the full satisfaction of his soul—yet not one pang of the agony he had to pass through was spared Him on account of his prayer; but He had to bear the whole of the agony of which we speak as "the cross and passion" of our Lord Jesus Christ, but supported in it all. As the Apostle said of the thorn in the flesh, that all he had as answer to his prayer for the removal of the thorn was the assurance, "My grace is sufficient for thee," thus was Christ supported during the trial of death.

These facts before us, we are enabled at once to answer

not the question of the atheist, but the true inquirer—who taking up such a case as that of our Master, and applying the parable to each of us, says, "Your Lord prayed to Him who was able to deliver Him from death, and it is said of Him that 'He was heard in that He feared,' and yet He had not one single atom of relief from the agony of the garden, and the shame of the Cross, and all the trial connected with his crucifixion and death." Then the sceptic adds: "You have had a beloved child; you prayed, but he died. I, too, had my sorrow; I did not pray, and my beloved one died. Wherein are you in any sense more blessed than I?" Thanks be to God, we have our answer here. Christ "was heard in that He feared; though He was a Son, yet learned He obedience by the things which He suffered." It might suffice to answer thus—to say that we are being taught obedience by the things we suffer, whether in the loss of our dearest or by the crucifixions of the flesh in this life. But there are reasons to be given yet to every earnest soul, even although the infidel may scoff.

And although we would not too largely advance our blessed privileges as compensatory or rewarding for the holy privilege we exercise in prayer, lest we should be supposed to be egotistical, yet let us remember that our God is good, and never allows one of his servants to seek his face without giving him a due reward; and as we remember that, let us not forget that the Church is made up of individual members, and wherever one is benefited and blessed the whole are likewise blessed, and at length through the Church the world at large is blessed.

In the first place, there can be no doubt that it is by prayer in the deepest sense of the word—that is, weakness casting itself upon strength with the expectation of an answer out of the heart of God's love—that a man meets his true rest, that rest for which the whole creation groaneth and travaileth, and for which

but which is never reached until, as St. Augustine says, it is found in God. "Thou hast made us for Thyself, and our hearts are restless till they rest in Thee." We cannot attain unto rest until we get it in Christ Jesus, who says: "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." We think of justification and pardon for sins, but there is far more than that; hence we immediately hear Christ say, "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly of heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls." When we draw nigh to God as believers, and learn from Him in this picture in the Epistle to the Hebrews, how with strong crying and tears our Lord offered prayer and supplications, then we find how we get rest to our souls in the deepest sense of the word. What is rest but the casting aside of every burden, the laying down at the feet of omnipotent love everything that brings distress and vexation of soul? That is rest in the negative sense of the word.

Prayer, however, is not only pouring out, but drawing in; and as a man lays his burden down, and approaches the Father's throne in the person of the Son, so he draws in from God that strength which comes to all who wait upon the Lord. The man who prays as Jesus did not only throws his burden upon the Lord and finds the strength of God passing into him; he begins to know God, whom to know is life eternal. He not only knows Him by acquaintance with his attributes and character, but knows Him as the friend who sticketh closer than a brother, as the strength-giver and the well-spring of life.

Again, it is in the privilege of prayer such as Jesus offered that men find victory over their foes. How often do we experience failure, again and again repeated; people attend conventions and conferences with the humiliating confession that some sin has mastered them. How shall victory be obtained? By linking the soul to the throne of omnipotent love in prayer, so drawing from God such beauty and holy power that if the world be attractive it ceases to attract because of that occupies the eye of the soul. Is the enemy terrifying? It matters not, for temptation fails in the presence of the omnipotent God; and the man who lives in that fellowship takes the Godhead into connection, and therefore must prevail. Still, a solemn inquiry faces one: If these things are so, how comes it to pass that so little of all this is yet enjoyed by Christ's people? The answer is, We do not pray. Too often we only talk; and, alas! we do not often talk to God as we should—certainly not in the manner of the Saviour, who with great blood-drops, with strong crying and tears, spoke to Him who was able to save Him from death, and was heard in that He feared.

Proceeding to give two or three pictures as to the manner in which children of God should approach their Father in heaven, the speaker quoted (1) Luke xxii. 44, in which it is written of Christ that, "Being in an agony He prayed more earnestly, and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground." Being in an agony is not satisfied by crying out in a moment of terror. To pray as Jesus did is to be in one long agony of soul, that expresses itself at every pore of the being and in every moment of existence. In Rom. xii. 12 we are urged to "continue instant in prayer"; in 1 Cor. vii. 5 we read of Christians "giving themselves to prayer"; in 1 Pet. iv. 7 we are told "to be sober, and watch unto prayer," to be a pattern of abstinence, keeping apart not merely from drunkenness, but from any dissipation of soul that prevents sobriety in the sight of God, praying "always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit."

There is much more to be said of prayer as exhibited in the life of Christ, and the power of prayer as shown in his case. We are not to pass through this world sipping at the sweets of life. What is the chief end of man? To glorify God and to enjoy Him for ever. We do not rise to the dignity of manhood when we simply enjoy carnal pleasures or things connected with the present life. To enjoy God is to live a life expressed by

THE WORD PRAYER.

When a man enters upon this, does he not possess power for service? Not only in foreign lands, but also in our own, blessing comes from the labours of men who are given to prayer.

During his visit in 1872 Mr. Moody preached in a northern town one Sunday morning to large numbers of people, and with no apparent results. In the evening he was favoured with a sense of God's presence as seldom before. At the close of the meeting he asked those who wished to consecrate themselves to God to rise, and nearly the whole of the audience rose to their feet. He sifted them, and found that almost every soul in the assembly joined itself to the Lord. Afterwards the meaning of this came out. A woman in that parish had prayed for years that Mr. Moody might be sent to preach the Gospel in that place. When Mr. Moody arrived in the morning she knew nothing of it; but on learning from her sister, at noon, that the evangelist had arrived she refused food, and continued in prayer that God would give his blessing; and at night four hundred souls joined that church as a result of prayer and preaching.

Farewell to Missionaries.

THE valedictory meetings at Harley House, bringing home friends of missions face to face with men and women about to leave for work in many lands, not only help on the cause of worldwide evangelisation, but are influential in a high degree in deepening missionary interest on the part of Christian people. As the years pass the midsummer meetings to say farewell to outgoing workers have steadily grown in numerical strength and importance, and the gatherings on Friday last, in connection with the twenty-sixth anniversary of the work of the East London Training Institute, were both large and enthusiastic.

There was a strong platform at the afternoon meeting, held for convenience in Harley Chapel, which is quite near to the College grounds; but while interested in the speakers, with their years of experience, the audience must have been largely occupied in thought concerning the young men and women who occupied a lower platform. These were the students from the three colleges of the Institute—Harley, Hulme Cliff, and Doric—whose opportunities lie in the coming days, and for whose usefulness and success in the work of God it is our privilege and duty to pray the Lord of the harvest. Full of energy and bright with promise, these earnest young people are going forth into many lands to "spend and be spent"; and in proportion as such devotion is the subject of serious reflection it should be a stimulus to liberality on the part of those who remain at home, and can advance the work of training them for life and service.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, who presided, spoke of the life-work of Dr. Grattan Guinness in its various stages of development—first, evangelisation in England, Ireland, and the United States; secondly, the equipment of others to carry on Gospel work throughout the world; and, thirdly, the study of God's Word, especially in the exposition of prophecy. He passed on to notice the features of the colleges—that they are prepared to admit young people who have had no previous educational advantages; that they are conducted on lines of true catholicity, members of all Evangelical churches being received within their walls; and that the education and training imparted are essentially constructive — the Word of God is believed in its integrity, the Holy Ghost is acknowledged in his mighty working, and the young men and women are established in a clear and definite Christian faith. In conclusion, Mr. Meyer declared that he could command no language sufficiently forcible and strong to express his admiration of the Institute and its work.

Dr. Grattan Guinness, in a brief address, looked back upon upwards of forty years of Christian work, and acknowledged the good leadings of God in pioneer efforts in several directions — first, among English-speaking peoples; then in Continental countries; and at length in preparing others to take up similar work throughout the world—about a thousand missionaries having already gone forth to labour in forty different lands. Having referred with evident joy to the way his family had espoused the mission cause — a son and a daughter being in China, and the heart of another daughter being in India, not to mention the devotion of his eldest son—Dr. Guinness expressed the conviction that with the opening of the twentieth century the Church of Christ faces a new world, with marvellous opportunities resulting from the progress of the century that is about to close. He called attention to China and Japan, India and Burmah, Central Africa and the Mohammedan lands on the north of what was once called the Dark Continent, and pointed out that all these vast regions have been the scenes of wonderful progress. With greatly changed conditions, the world's need remains the same, and he urged that during the little space of life that is allotted to us we should be diligent in taking the Gospel to those who have been redeemed but know it not—we must bend our backs to the work, put our souls into it, for "the time is short."

Dr. Harry Guinness intimated that a hundred men and women were about to leave the colleges. He announced with pleasure that the lease of Harley House had been renewed, so that there would be no local interruption in the work. The past year had not been without its financial difficulties, but the Lord had provided in marvellous ways.

Brief addresses followed by Principal Hallowes, of Hulme Cliff College, and Principal Mead, of Harley College. The latter was glad to say that the third-year men were going to have the advantage of medical training at Livingstone College. This announcement, of a measure calculated, humanly speaking, to add years to the lives of the missionaries, and greatly to enhance the value of their service, was received with much gratification by all who were acquainted with the important ministry of Livingstone College.

One of the students, Mr. Hodge, and one of the deaconesses, Miss Smith, followed with bright little addresses, and the meeting closed with some earnest words by Rev. George Soltau.

After tea, an open-air meeting was held in the College grounds; and in the evening Harley-street Chapel was again filled. Mr. T. A. Denny presided, and inspiriting addresses were delivered by Rev. James Douglas (Theological Lecturer), Rev. George Hanson (successor to Dr. Pentecost, Marylebone Presbyterian Church), and Mr. C. F. Reeve (Director of Poona and Indian Village Mission).

Burden-Bearing.

Gal. vi. 2.

Bear ye one another's burdens,
Whatsoe'er their nature be:
Jesus said, "In serving others
Ye have done it unto Me."

Bear ye one another's burdens,
Lighter then your own shall be;
Jesus is the Burden-bearer—
He will set your spirit free.

Bear ye one another's burdens,
Thus will life flow smoothly on.
Nor shall vain regrets distress you
When your burdened friend is gone.

Bear ye one another's burdens,
When the heart is bowed with grief,
And the world seems cold and heartless—
Sympathy will give relief.

Bear ye one another's burdens:
Pray beside the sufferer's bed:
Let some blessèd words of comfort
From the Book of books be read!

Bear ye one another's burdens:
Feed the hungry, lead the blind;
Imitate life's perfect Pattern,
Christians ever should be kind.

Thus imparting joy for sorrow,
Naught of good is sacrificed;
Bearing one another's burdens,
We "fulfil the law of Christ."

Our Indian Opium Trade.

A PARLIAMENTARY Commission is, no doubt, a very great and dignified affair. There may be some who think that it settles any subject on which it sits—probably because the wish is father to the thought. Judging from some recent examples, the more factual conclusion would be that it unsettles a good many things but settles nothing. That is how it has worked, at any rate, in the matter of our opium trade between India and China. The House of Commons, after full debate, solemnly decided that this traffic is immoral, and not to be justified. Government action in correspondence with such a decision was called for; and the reply was a Commission. It was not wanted by those who moved for reform. Its conclusions are not at all accepted by them, though if its conclusions were honestly translated into acts a great deal would be gained. As it is, there is nothing to be done but to carry on the agitation till some British Government arises that will have the courage to do right, and to undo, as far as is now possible, the tremendous wrongs we have committed in the past.

We hope the interesting meeting held in the library of Lambeth Palace last Friday afternoon will tend in this direction. Over a company that was fair in point of numbers and undoubtedly earnest in spirit, the Archbishop of Canterbury presided. His Grace is a man who is given to plain speech, and certainly nothing could have been more outspoken than the language he used from the chair on this occasion. So far as he had been able to examine into the matter, it seemed to him that the conclusions in the report of the recent Royal Commission are not to be trusted. Apart from the question of evidence, there were certain principles laid down by pro-opiumists with which he could not agree. "I cannot understand a Christian man (exclaimed his Grace) bringing himself to do a thing that is wrong on the plea that if he does not do it somebody else will. The is to have nothing whatever to do with that which is shown to be necessarily productive of evil. The English nation caused the opium evil in China, and we are responsible for that evil. I also protest against the principle of raising revenue by temptations to evil. In this business of the Indian opium trade we have a double responsibility. It might be right for a Government to pause before interfering with private trade; but in this case we ourselves are carrying on the evil trade. Such a thing on the part of a great Government is, I really think, without a parallel in the whole extent of the world. For my part I protest against having any share in the responsibility of the Government for continuing such an indefensible practice as this.

"There may have been exaggeration in describing the nature and extent of the opium curse, but there remains the overwhelming truth that we have done a great wrong to China, and we are continuing in the same path. We forced this trade on China, and now we say that they consent. Yes, because they have been helpless; in the struggle against it they have always been beaten. It may be that for some time to come they will be unable or unwilling to control the trade in their own country. But for the present, at any rate, we are unquestionably standing in the way and making it impossible for them to do anything. The least we can do is to stand aside and let them govern themselves. Our Government are claiming to stand aloof while other nations are trying to disintegrate China. But we cannot forget that we have in the past poured a very subtle poison into the veins of the Chinese nation, and they would be better able to defend themselves now if it had not been for our acts. It is our duty as speedily as possible to stop this trade."

The following resolution was submitted to the meeting by Prebendary Webb-Peploe:—

That as the habit of opium smoking in China is by general and unquestionable testimony most injurious to the physical and moral well-being of its people; and as the export of opium from India to China has been the main factor in creating this habit, and has also led to the now extensive growth of the poppy in China and so added to the demoralisation of its people, this meeting is of opinion that no considerations of revenue can justify Great Britain in allowing the continuance of our Indian opium trade.

In supporting the resolution, the Prebendary cited a long array of opinions from medical men, missionaries, consuls, and others, showing beyond the possibility of cavil that the opium habit is most injurious and debasing, physically, mentally, and spiritually. This fact has been proved, almost ad nauseam, times without number, and it is not needful that we should quote in detail the utterances reproduced by the speaker. On the basis of them he called for a definite reversal of our national policy, if we would escape the righteous judgment of God.

A speech followed from Rev. Arnold Foster, the well-known Chinese missionary, packed full of weighty statements as to the extent and nature of the opium evil in China, and delivered with a fervour that plainly showed the intense feeling of the speaker. The desolation caused by famine, he said, is not to be compared with the desolation that accrues from the opium habit. In its terrible effects on those addicted to it we see a vision more pathetic and distressing than in the case of those dying of starvation. Mr. Foster analysed the evidence given before the Commission by Chinese witnesses, and showed how it was overwhelmingly against the pro-opium view. A Chinese teacher whom he consulted as to native writings on the subject was asked as to any facts on the other side, and replied,

"THERE IS NO OTHER SIDE."

It is true that one missionary was not opposed to the opium, and that is the one and only missionary whom the commissioners quote. The great proportion of the mercantile witnesses were opium traders themselves, and, of course, they were favourable; but as to the effects of the drug on the people they had little opportunity of knowing. The demoralisation of our statesmen and officials by this connivance at an evil trade Mr. Foster declared to be most deplorable. A very striking instance was given by the speaker of an official who, three years before the Commission, had contributed to a medical journal a scathing impeachment of the drug; soon after the Commission he wrote again directly contravening all that he had formerly asserted. Referring, finally, to the subject as it affects our national reputation, Mr. Foster said that we ought at least to save ourselves, if we cannot now save the Chinese. Lord Salisbury said, in a speech a few days ago, that we ought to exercise our powers of persuasion on the Chinese Government to adopt the course which will most increase their prosperity, and render them safe from their enemies in future. We ought to do our utmost to maintain the Chinese Empire and prevent it from falling into ruins by inviting them into paths of reform and giving them asssistance to increase their commercial prosperity. How this can consistently be done while we continue the opium trade with them it is not easy to see.

Rev. John Gibson, of Swatow, said we must not be discouraged in our endeavours to free ourselves from the disgrace of pandering to the vices of the Chinese. As to delivering the Chinese people themselves, he would altogether despair of that now but for the existence of a Christian Church in the country. There are 80,000 native Chinese Christians absolutely unanimous upon the opium question. He looked forward to see that Church, notwithstanding the difficulties and discouragements, setting its face in every way against the opium vice. Taking the report of the Opium Commission even as it stands, and in view of the fact that they condemn the smoking of the drug (for which purpose twelve-thirteenths of the imported opium is used) it is strange that the Commissioners do not recommend some new and stringent action should be taken to deal with

AN ENORMOUS AND ADMITTED EVIL.

Some weighty words, with the citation of yet further testimony, came from Dr. Handley Moule, who recommended all to read the powerful pamphlet on the subject written by Mr. Arnold Foster, and just about to be published. England must rehear the whole question.

In moving a vote of thanks to the Archbishop, Mr. T. A. Denny observed that throughout this had always been treated by the officials as a wretched money question; yet we call ourselves a Christian nation! He looked upon our action towards the Chinese as the worst form of robbery, so that in pleading for the retention of our revenue from this source we are only using the burglar's argument. We ought to go down on our knees and ask the pardon of the Chinese people, and down on our faces before God in humble contrition.

Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., having outlined the action taken in Parliament in recent years, said the question has not been recently raised there. In fact, all the moral causes in this country seem to be in a condition of paralysis so far as the present House of Commons is concerned. It will need a fresh moral tide to pass over the country before there is much prospect of Parliament moving again in the matter. The fact that the revenue derived from the opium has steadily declined, till now it is only a question of about £2,000,000 sterling, is an element of hope. England could supply this revenue by an additional contribution of a penny in the income tax. A great deal is being said just now as to our trade with China and the importance of retaining it. That trade, however, only amounts to about sixpence per head of the population. The Chinese are small consumers because of their excessive poverty, largely through the consumption of opium. This country has lost in money, on that ground, many times more than India has gained in opium revenue.

In responding to the thanks of the meeting, the Archbishop said he hoped that the agitation against this national evil would not be permitted to grow slack. We must do our utmost to stir the consciences of the English people, and especially in the shape of bringing pressure to bear on the Government carefully to examine into the question for themselves.

North India Medical School for Christian Women.

LADIES who desire to study medicine, in order to use it as a means of spreading the Gospel among the heathen, get valuable training in this school at Ludhiana, which has completed its third year of work. Reinforcements for the teaching staff made it possible for Dr. Edith Brown to take a short furlough in England to recruit her strength. On her return she was accompanied by her niece, Miss Hilda Ashby, sent by friends in Redhill to take up zenana work, and follow up in their own homes patients discharged from the school hospital.

It is a work full of promise, as truths taught in the hospital often make a deep impression upon the hearts of the women patients. For two members of the staff there is no support pledged. Two more are needed, and the necessity of providing additional doctors' quarters is a very pressing matter. Bible study and prayer are not neglected by the students, and many of them show a real growth in grace! Miss Greenfield's hospital report is full of interesting and pathetic details. The hon. treasurer for London is Mrs. Percy Fleming, M.D., 31, Wimpole-street, Cavendish-square, W.

Visitors to Keswick.—Mr. J. T. Budd writes to say that orders for tickets by the excursion which he is organising should reach him not later than Tuesday evening, July 12, at his address, Ambleside, New Barnet, Herts.

FROM OTHER LANDS.

The Northfield Schools.

THE commencement exercises in connection with Mr. Moody's two schools at Mount Hermon and Northfield are over, and those who had the privilege of being present will not soon forget it. Northfield was at its loveliest, and your many readers who have visited it know a little of how lovely it can be. But beneath a June sun, in the freshness of its summer beauty, with a Continental blue sky overhead, flecked here and there by white clouds, and surrounded by the everlasting hills, while the silver Connecticut winds through the valley, Northfield is, indeed, as the garden of the Lord.

The exercises began on Saturday evening with a sacred concert given in the auditorium by both schools. The spacious orchestra was filled with nearly four hundred students; and the sight of the white dresses of the girls on the one side and the black coats of the Hermonites on the other, with the sound of their fresh young voices, was most touching, and many hearts overflowed with thankfulness for what the Lord has enabled his servant Mr. Moody to accomplish.

On Sunday Mr. Moody preached the baccalaureate sermon to the graduating classes. Seats were reserved for the fifty graduates in the front, and just before the service commenced the girls, in white, filed down one aisle, and the young men the other. Mr. Moody took for his text "Therefore choose life," saying his subject had been suggested to him by a sentence he had heard a little while before, "Choose the best from the good." In the afternoon a service was held in the auditorium, when Drs. Pierson, Mabie, and Scofield addressed the students. Mr. Sankey, who had just returned from holding evangelistic services in the U.S. Camp at Tampa, Florida, told of the work being carried on under Mr. Moody's guidance among the soldiers, and also sang.

On Monday afternoon the graduates at Mount Hermon gave their

for which they were most enthusiastically and deservedly applauded. A reception was afterwards held at the house of the principal, Professor Cutler. In the evening a prize contest in declamation took place, and the judges had no enviable office to perform in deciding as to the merits of the contestants, for one and all the pieces were admirably recited.

On Tuesday Rev. George C. Lorimer, D.D., of Boston, delivered the graduation address to the Hermon students. He took for his subject: "Gladstone, as Statesman, Scholar, Christian," and gave a very powerful and interesting lecture. Short addresses followed from Dr. Scofield and others, as well as from former students. The diplomas were then awarded to the graduates, and prizes to the students. Several of the gentlemen on the platform offered to give annual prizes.

Wednesday was the girls' graduation day at Northfield. On the platform of the auditorium were the lecturers for the day—Dr. Faunce (of New York), Mr. and Mrs. Moody, Dr. Scofield, Miss Hall, the principal of the Seminary, and several of the trustees. In the area on the left-hand side of the platform were the teachers, and opposite them the Estey chorus (composed of the best voices in the school), and the alumnæ, i.e., former graduates. After these had taken their places a march struck up, and very slowly, but with military precision, the 350 students, all in white dresses, entered from the two doors at the platform end of the building, marched round until they reached the entrance, where, dividing into two companies, they streamed down the four aisles at the same time, and met in the centre. The effect was charming, and great credit is due to their instructor. After singing, reading of the Scriptures, and prayer, Dr. Faunce delivered the commencement address. He began by speaking of the words "commencement" and "graduation," then of the two rivers which "in this country are remarkable because on their banks are to be found more schools and colleges of Christian learning than anywhere else in the world—the Hudson and Connecticut." He went on to speak of these schools and colleges being founded, not "by the leading scholars of the country, but by men of tremendous moral earnestness, and usually of religious faith." "The aim of modern education," he continued, "is to fit the pupil for the service of his fellow man," and the speaker gave several instances of men who, while wonderfully diverse from one another, yet were united in the possession of a common spirit of service.

The report of the principals of the schools indicate that the past year has been one of the best since the institutions opened. The Northfield Training School for Women also had a very successful session, so that the educational work planted here by Mr. Moody seems to be in better condition than ever, which is cause for great thankfulness to God.

For the next two months Northfield will be busied with Bible lectures and summer conventions.

Poona and Indian Village Mission.

DEAR SIR,—As a lady visitor to India for a few months' trip to Poona, I have been much interested and pleased with the Poona and Indian Village Mission. It seemed well to let the home friends know something of the work, which is growing and increasing rapidly. The Poona and Indian Village Mission is conducted on inter-denominational lines, and has members from all the leading denominations, numbering now over forty. It has its headquarters in Australia, and has, in the chief centres, councils formed of ministers and Christian workers of the various churches.

The director, Mr. C. F. Reeve, with his coworkers have been steadily laying the foundation and doing pioneer work. Last year Mr. Reeve visited Australia and New Zealand. The result was that about 180 candidates applied for the mission field, both ladies and gentlemen, some tried and tested workers; out of these thirty-two were accepted and are now on the field. This large party left the Australian shores last September for Poona; many others who have offered for the Mission are training and preparing at training homes and elsewhere.

There are three stations in the Native State of Bhor in connection with the Mission, besides Poona, the headquarters of the Mission.

The work in Poona is mostly among the English-speaking Europeans, Eurasians, and natives. The Mission have a hall, at which evangelistic meetings and meetings for Christians are held for the soldiers stationed in Poona and the civilians of the town, and Bible lectures are also delivered by Mr. Reeve. The Bible expositions and instruction given to the missionary students stationed in Poona are most helpful.

The village work consists in preaching the Gospel in the villages. Dispensing work for outdoor patients is carried on; this gives a grand opportunity of treating their souls at the same time. Visiting in the villages is encouraging, though slow work and needing patience.

There are three nurses in connection with the Mission, two of whom have been earnestly engaged at plague work daily for some months; much blessing has been the result. Numbers of Mohammedan homes have been opened to the nurses and ladies, who have free access to some of the zenanas, and have a very hearty welcome and anxious inquiries when they are coming again. This is very remarkable, for under ordinary circumstances it would have taken years to get a footing or entrance into these homes.

The result of my few months' stay near the Mission is to give a deeper and fuller realisation of what God can and will do for those who trust Him fully.—Yours truly, E. L. WALLER.

Poona, India.

Scandinavian Sailors.—The situation of the Temperance Home in Poplar with regard to the docks is the best possible, although of necessity in a port like London it is miles away from some of the more distant docks. The annual number of sailors passing through the Home is three thousand, and these include Swedes, Norwegians, Finlanders, Danes, and other nationalities. Scores of men travel to London, after being paid off at other ports, in order to spend their leisure time here. Mr. and Mrs. Welin are in charge of the work.

Notes from Mexico.

IN a recent letter Rev. W. D. Powell, of Toluca, writes of the various agencies of his work. He says:—

"The Toluca Orphanage came into existence some four years ago, largely through the generous help of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Taylor, of Baltimore. It is not denominational, but all the children attend our services sometimes, and fully one-half attend every meeting. Several have been baptized on a profession of their faith in Christ. All the beds are occupied.

"Our new chapel, which cost 3000 dols., is being dedicated free of debt. Our congregations are growing, and the Spirit smiles upon us. The progress of the work is slow, but encouraging. We have been greatly blessed in the work of tract and Gospel distribution. No longer do the people tear the tracts when given to them. I visit the penitentiary every Sunday, and distribute hundreds of tracts and Gospels. I have a cart, and go into the country and hand them out to the people on the highways and in the villages. In this way I have to-day distributed from two to three thousand. Some of my supplies come by post from Christian friends.

"I am also glad to receive decidedly spiritual books in English to be distributed among the workers."

Rescue Work in Sydney.

FOR some years past a deeply interesting rescue and preventive mission has been carried on in and around Sydney, New South Wales. The work was begun in 1882 by Mr. G. E. Ardill, who still directs it, with the help of a committee, including many influential Christians in the colony. There is a lying-in hospital, a babies' home, and an all-night refuge; and many devoted hearts are thrown into the efforts to win the erring and shelter the weak, and such as are in moral danger. Like all other philanthropic organisations, the Sydney Rescue Work Society (for that is the name of the undertaking) has suffered from the financial depression prevalent in Australia. But, somehow or other, the work has gone on nevertheless, and, in fact, has grown considerably.

At length it has been thought wise, and indeed found imperative, to seek the co-operation of all who feel keenly for the deceived and degraded among the female and juvenile population, and in the course of her travels the wife of the director has come to England, hoping to find some who may take a practical interest in this uplifting work at the antipodes. The work is known to Mr. Henry Varley, and has the kind word of Pastor Thomas Spurgeon. It is hoped that the Society will soon be able to erect three more cottage homes in connection with the efforts among the young, and by the help of Christian people, to place the entire work on a better footing. Mrs. Ardill's stay in this country will only extend over a month, and she will be glad to hear from retired colonists, and to embrace opportunities to address drawing-room and other meetings. The treasurer of the work is Mr. George Verey, 376, Pitt-street, Sydney, N.S.W. Communications to Mrs. Ardill, or Mr. Verey, may be addressed to our care.

Genoa Seamen's Institute.—Large gatherings of men assemble regularly at this Institute, but the work is sadly in need of a more airy and commodious mission-hall. The men show their appreciation of the work by contributing an increased amount to the funds. Several letters are in hand not only from seamen and officers, but also from parents and relatives of sailors, which bear testimony to the useful results that have followed upon the work done at this Institute. There are reading-rooms, a room for correspondence, rooms for games, and last, but not least, there is the mission-room, in which divine service is held on Sunday evenings. In this room, too, on Wednesdays magic lantern views are shown, while some interesting story is being read either by the chaplain or by some person who takes an interest in the work. More than a thousand British ships came to Genoa last year. Mr. Blake's visits to the vessels have been appreciated by officers and men, and he has induced a large number of sailors of all classes to visit the Institute. The hon. sec. is Rev. R. Langton Douglas, 26, Via Milano.

Child-Life in Heathen Lands.—V.

TO-DAY I want to take you to Central Africa—we may almost call it the land of Moffat and Livingstone and Stanley. There is no need for me to describe it geographically, I am sure. Everybody knows what an enormous country Africa is, and has heard something of the various races which people it.

Some of the African natives are stalwart, well-knit, clever folk; others are small in stature and timid in character. Stanley writes a good deal about the "pigmies" he met with in his memorable journey, and alludes to them as very shy and retiring. But I must not forget that you are waiting to hear of the boys and girls who find a home there. Home-life in Africa amongst the children is totally unlike home-life in England. You will not, therefore, expect that what I shall write about will at all resemble the happy surroundings amid which you spend your days.

A little child is the raw material out of which grown-up people are made. It can be fashioned into a lovely vessel fit for the Great Master's use; or, if the workman is an unwise or an unskilful labourer, what an ugly, distorted life may be produced! It is upon this raw material that missionaries are hard at work in the depths of the dark continent of Africa.

Would you like to enter one of the "homes" of these natives? Come then! It is just a bare hut, in which each family lives by itself. For family life is very dear even to these dark-skinned men and women. Look round and you will see many

CURIOUS CUSTOMS AND STRANGE THINGS.

The mother feeds her baby in a very queer way. The little thing sits on her knee, and with her left hand "mother" holds its head, while with the fore-finger of the right hand she takes some pottage and thrusts it down the child's throat, as they have no spoons. The baby screams and struggles, but all to no purpose; the affectionate parent does not desist until she has packed her offspring to her entire satisfaction. During this feeding operation the elder children are playing in the dusty village like so many animals, without any clothing whatever.

They hardly require clothes, however, for the climate is so warm, and custom does not burden them with dresses, or sailor-suits and knickerbockers. And at night. Well! there are no cosy white beds, soft and snug. The girls and boys simply lie on the mud floor, needing no tucking-up, with only the black covering nature has supplied.

I have heard of a little girl who fled from her burning village, which had been "fired" in the night by enemies. She was known by the name of Kataii. Her father was killed, and her mother was taken for a slave, but with a few other people. They wandered about in the forest for some time; at last they were compelled to throw themselves upon the mercy of a slave merchant called Kalunda, because they could not travel any further, being worn out with fatigue. They asked the chief to give them food and a house to live in until they were rested, and could go on their journey again. The crafty old Arab said, "Oh yes, come in, and I will protect you."

Some time after the Arab died, and his wife called the people together and told them that they were all her slaves, and when they objected she beat them severely. Kataii in the night slipped away from the village and ran for her life, hiding in the forest for three nights where lions and other wild beasts abounded. Would not you have been dreadfully alarmed? In a few days she found a mission station and asked for protection. When she arrived she was so tired that she could answer no questions; but after receiving a nice new cloth to wrap herself in, and resting for a while over a meal, she was able to tell her story of childish sorrow and terrible disaster. As she wished to stay with her newly found friends, she was sent to the lake to be taken care of by a missionary's wife.

And what came of it all? This Kataii to-day is earning to become a faithful child of the Lord Jesus Christ, and is happy and contented in her new home.

These African bairns have no notion of sin; they cannot, therefore, see any need for a Saviour. They are taught to worship the departed spirits of their dead chiefs, whose lives have been wicked and fierce. They think that the "spirits" understand all the frailties and difficulties of mankind, and can therefore afford help if they pray to them.

Are you not thankful that you have learnt better and truer things than these? You know how real the friendship of Jesus is—how pitiful his love—how deeply interested He is in everything that interests you, and how qualified He is to be your very own Saviour. I think you are looking into his face and saying: "Dear Jesus, I would love Thee, as Thou dost love me. Help! O help me!"

A Peep into the Uan-Chi School.

TENDER and pathetic is the story, as recorded in the sacred volume, of the gentle Jesus, who, when on earth, took the little ones into his arms and blessed them; and, when others forbade this, He answered, "Forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of Heaven." Does anyone think that these dusky—yes, and dirty-faced—little urchins of China are not as precious to the Master as the daintily robed, golden-haired "tot" at home? Does not his tender heart of love yearn over them, and would He not have them gathered from the highways and hedges and told of his love? And who shall say that in the day when He makes up his jewels some of these little Chinese children shall not compose some of the brightest gems of his crown?

This school is practically new, but at the present time is very encouraging, although it has had many trials. It was re-opened after the Chinese New Year's festivities with

TEN BRIGHT, PROMISING PUPILS.

The attendance has been good, excepting in very inclement weather, and has continued to increase till we now have an attendance of fourteen. It is an ever-increasing joy to see the interest they manifest, not only in their study, but in the Bible truths taught, and the prompt answers with which some of them are ready.

One of these, a dear little fellow of some nine summers, and whose name means "a great treasure," is most faithful. Early in the morning, and often before another child arrives, his voice is heard in study—the Chinese children all study aloud—and should the weather be foul, or any other cause arise which might prevent others from coming, we are sure of our little friend. Formerly he could only come on rainy days, or when there was nothing claiming the attention of the older members of the household, as his business was to "k'an men"—watch the door. Recently a wife has been purchased for him, and his business has been passed over to her, thus leaving him free for study.

One of our most recently enrolled pupils has entered under very trying circumstances. His father is a confirmed opium victim, his mother bitterly hostile to the Gospel; consequently she was most unwilling that her son should attend a Christian school. She endeavoured to frighten or prejudice him by telling him that in case he did come we would take out his heart and eyes to make medicine. However, he determined to know for himself, and accordingly came. He has proved to be one of the brightest, most promising pupils we have, and is eager to hear the Gospel story. He not only attends school regularly, but quite frequently attends evening worship in the chapel. Need I say that, as yet, he has lost neither head nor eyes?

Another of our little friends, who has seemed much interested, and has given undivided attention to the Gospel story, told one of our ladies that he had been beating, rather than worshipping, the idols, and that he had told those whom he had seen worshipping them that they were only the work of man's hands and they could not hear their petitions nor help them. Oh that these little hearts, that receive so trustingly the sweet, simple story, may continue to know it as the ruling power of their lives!

On Saturday we give them a special exercise in singing, which they thoroughly enjoy, and sing loudly and lustily, and not infrequently do we hear them, out of school hours, on the street and in the chapel, singing the songs they have been taught in the schools. Our hearts go out to those dear little ones most tenderly, and we long that they may not only know the temporal benefits of this school but that they may learn to know the Friend of little children in a real saving way, and that through them doors may be opened for the wider spread of the precious truths we have come to bring.

"Elijah on Carmel."

1 Kings xviii. 30-40.

Golden Text.—"And when all the people saw it, they fell on their faces, and they said, the Lord, He is the God; the Lord, He is the God."—1 Kings xviii. 39.

The Famine.

FOR three years the famine had raged. All provisions were being exhausted. People were impelled to ask themselves why God had sent this scourge; they had appealed to Baal in vain, and now they bethink them of the God of their fathers.

Lesson: The beneficent purpose of all suffering, sometimes on account of sin—to bring us back to God in repentance. Sometimes to teach us a lesson we could not learn without it. Lessons of cleanliness and sanitation taught by plagues and epidemics.

Illustration.—Text written on vase, then placed in oven to burn it in. You can never wash it off after that. So God sometimes burns his message into our hearts.

Bearding the Lion in his Den.

When the people had arrived at this stage God sent Elijah to Ahab to tell him the cause of the famine. Brave thing to do.

Illustration.—Luther going to trial before the Diet of Worms, warned by a friend that if he went his life would be in danger. Luther said: "Were there as many devils in Worms as there are tiles on the housetops, I would go."

Ahab tries to put the blame on the prophet who had given him due warning; but the firebell does not cause the fire, or the lighthouse the shipwreck.

The Call to Carmel.

Having so far succeeded with the king before he has time to consult his idolatrous wife, he demands that the people shall be brought to the top of Carmel, that they may decide whom they will serve.

Teacher should study the map, and so be able to give a picture of the multitude—some in chariots, some afoot—travelling across the picturesque and fertile plain of Esdraelon to Mount Carmel; the royal procession from Jezreel on the opposite side of the plain.

On Carmel's crown now swarms a countless throng,
With one brave soul to stand 'gainst millions in the wrong.

The Priests of Baal (40).

Baal. — Name under which the sun was worshipped.

The worship consisted in certain obscene and cruel rites—offering of human sacrifices in the fire. This was considered the god of fire, so that Elijah's test should have seemed advantageous to the priests of Baal.

These priests maintained by Jezebel—she and Ahab led the people into idolatry. Elijah's treatment not cruel. Weeds must be rooted up. Destroyers must be exterminated.

Whenever evil is uprooted some individuals suffer (those who lived by it), but the world is the better for men who have the courage to attack the authors of wrong.

Repairing the Altar (30).

This was one of the altars that had been thrown down by the command of Ahab. This act on the part of Elijah signified—

(1) That he was a builder, not a destroyer. A reformer is usually regarded as a man who knocks down or pulls up by the roots. (2) That he called the people back to the God of their fathers. (3) That he called upon them to restore the altar of God in their own soul, upon which they should offer a broken and a contrite heart.

Elijah took every precaution so that they should not suspect any fraud on his part (33-35).

The twelve stones indicated that the twelve tribes were worshippers of one God. It brought back the minds of the people to the long and glorious history of their race—made glorious by the God of Elijah.

Elijah's Prayer (36, 37).

"At the time of the evening sacrifice" (36), about three p.m. From former habit this was the time when they would be most receptive of holy influence.

Elijah's prayer commenced with a sentence that would remind the people of God's promise to their ancestor Abraham.

His was not a selfish prayer, not for his own aggrandisement, but that God would use him as the medium through which he would manifest his presence.

It was all the work of God, and not merely a cleverly planned device of Elijah's.

Lesson.—Only those who are doing God's work have a right to expect his favour and presence. We cannot expect God to help us in a bad cause. We can be sure of his help in doing our duty.

The Decision of the People (39).

They cried, "Jehovah, He is God."

They fell on their faces in token of their worship and reverence.

They were led up to this not merely by the fire, but by the preceding circumstances of which the fire was the climax.

There was no answer to such an argument. God still works with purifying fire on the children of men, destroying what is evil in the individual and in society.

The God that does this let Him be God.

The supreme argument for Christianity is its cleansing and inspiring power.

The strongest argument lies in the good institutions which have been due to Christianity. The noble lives it has produced.

Christianity invites this test:—

"O, taste and see how gracious the Lord is."

Teacher should urge his scholars to come to a decision. "He that is not for Me is against Me." Only two sides in the battle of life. Whose side are we on?

For Sunday-school Teachers.

(See I.S.S. Lesson for July 10.)

"THERE shall not be dew nor rain these years." It is true, snow remains perpetually on the heights of Lebanon and Hermon; nevertheless, what we here call rivers are only creeks or streams; in some of them no water is to be seen from May till December, although in the winter time they may roll with terrific rush and noise. The Jordan has never been used, and some judges say it cannot be used, for purposes of irrigation on account of the unusual depression of its bed. In a word, rainfall here is the acknowledged regulator of the prices of food materials. More rain, more food, and vice versâ, and even a mere scarcity of rain in one year causes much pain and distress. Great, therefore, must have been the punishment of the idolatrous inhabitants of the land when God withheld from them during forty-two months the blessings of rainfall.

"A handful of meal in a barrel, and a little oil in a cruse." Although not so frequently as in the days of my childhood, yet women can still be seen making unburned clay barrels, either by the roadside or on the flat roof of a house. A certain yellowish kind of earth, mixed in suitable proportions with chaff, straw, or stubble, is made into vessels to hold from two bushels to six bushels of wheat, ground or otherwise. At the lower end it is about 18in. or 24in. in diameter. The walls are about 1in. or 2in. thick, and are raised piecemeal to the height, say, of 12in. or 15in. a day, or every second day, and as soon as the sun has baked one instalment then another is added on; then it is whitewashed by a solution of white clay, carried into the house, filled with flour and covered with the earthenware trough which holds the bread for the family. This, no doubt, is what is translated "barrel"; while earthenware jugs, or jars, for holding the usual sweet or olive oil, which is used both for food and for illuminating the house at night, are common.

On the evening of January 5 nearly every family makes many pounds of meal into dough, and instead of baking them as usual they fry them in oil, and use them as ordinary food for the following day or days.

Not only girls and women, but also boys, can be seen threading their way with bent backs, picking up pieces of fuel in and round about the village; hence the connection between the meal in the barrel, oil in the cruse, and the gathering of sticks.

A leading thought. Elijah's instructions to remain by the brook Cherith, and his subsequent use of the meal and oil at the widow's house, together with our Lord's use of the five loaves (John vi.), and similar incidents in Holy Writ, show how clearly and closely God adheres to the natural law which He has instituted. He does not despise and fling overboard the handful of meal, drop of oil, or the five barley cakes, but He blesses them and makes them last for a long time and suffice for a great multitude.

The C.M.S. Centenary.

IN connection with the centenary of the Church Missionary Society, which is to be celebrated next year, a meeting was held on Sunday afternoon, by permission of the Duke of Westminster, at Grosvenor House, W., to hear addresses by the Archbishop of Canterbury and others "on the position of foreign missionary enterprise after ninety-nine years, and the outlook of the coming century." Another object of the meeting was to call attention to the special centenary funds now being raised to consolidate, develop, and extend the work in all parts of the world.

Sir John Kennaway, M.P., who presided, said it was a new departure to convene a Sunday afternoon meeting, but it was made because of the urgency of the need and the difficulty of approaching their friends. A work of great magnitude had been done by the Church Missionary Society during the past century. Its income last year was nearly £340,000, but more help was needed. There was great need everywhere, and it was felt that as England sent her sons all over the world to colonise and to govern she should send her Christianity also.

The Bishop of Victoria, Hong Kong (Dr. Hoare), delivered an address on missionary work in Mid China. That work, he said, was full of encouragement. He had seen missionary churches growing in China at a rate of progress, numerically speaking, which was perfectly amazing. Speaking as an eyewitness, he could testify to the reality of the work and the genuineness of the converts with whom he had been permitted to deal. Though they had not perfect churches, there was a very genuine work going on amongst the converts. They suffered persecution of every kind, and there were few Chinamen who became Christians without suffering loss in one way or another. A marked evidence of their reality was the way in which they themselves spread the Gospel amongst their fellow countrymen.

Dr. Neve described the suffering and loss of life which was occasioned by the ignorance of the natives in Kashmir and elsewhere, and the need which exists for medical missions. Mr. Eugene Stock, editorial secretary, stated that the Society had now eighty young missionaries under training for service in different parts of the world, all of whom would leave this country before October.

The Archbishop of Canterbury thought those who stayed at home were apt to think that the work ought to go on very much more rapidly than it did. Yet here was a Society which began just 100 years ago on a small part of the earth's surface—on the western coast of Africa—and in the course of the century spread far to the east and far to the west, which had its missionaries in America and in Australia, and had them still more numerous in China, Japan, and India. The work had been steadily growing from the beginning. If the income of the Society were doubled its work would be doubled also. He did not think they could lay too much stress upon the imperative duty which was cast upon the Church in these days, and he thought the time was not far off when it would be felt that no Christian was leading a Christian life who did not care for the preaching of the Gospel to the heathen.

Missionary Conference.

A LARGELY attended Conference of friends of missions was held on June 24, at Devonshire House, Bishopsgate. Among the speakers were Mr. Fred. Arnot, Dr. McLean, Dr. Neatby, Mr. W. Stuart, Mr. Carné and others. Interesting accounts of work done in Demerara, India, China, and Australia were given. Much earnest prayer was offered for the Lord's work in foreign lands, whilst a deep spiritual tone was manifest in all the meetings. The death of Mr. Willie Gammon, of Central Africa, was reported, and sympathy and prayers asked for the relatives of this beloved missionary. Accounts, cheering on the whole, were given by the brethren and sisters from foreign stations, and an earnest appeal followed for labourers for India.

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

Messrs. Inglis and Manton Smith.

A VERY encouraging mission has been held at the Polytechnic, Regent-street, by Messrs. Charles Inglis and J. Manton Smith, the first these evangelists have taken together. On Sunday, June 19, the first day of the mission, it was most cheering to see the people streaming into the large hall in the afternoon. At the evening meeting every seat in the large hall and on the platform were occupied.

Mr. Manton Smith gave a very telling address from the words, "As many as were touched were made perfectly whole," and sang an effective solo—"Just one touch as He passed by."

Mr. Inglis, following on, picked up the thread of Mr. Smith's remarks, and at the close of his address upwards of thirty inquirers were found seeking the Saviour, in the Marlborough Rooms. Night by night through the week large audiences gathered, and each night the Lord set his seal to the work, and seekers found salvation.

On Saturday night a change was made in the meeting, in the shape of a song service, entitled "Homeward Bound," taking up the theme of life as a voyage from earth to heaven, the chair being taken by Mr. Robert Mitchell. The audience was a large one; the Polytechnic choir rendered efficient service, and altogether it was a very impressive occasion.

But the great day of the feast was on Sunday, the 26th. In the afternoon the people flocked in great numbers. Both Mr. Smith and Mr. Inglis spoke with intense interest, and worked together as if they had been united in service for many years. Mr. Manton Smith's solo, "My Lord and I," words which were sung by the Huguenots 300 years ago in the rocks and caves of France during the persecution, had a special interest. At the evening service the building was crowded in all parts. The power of the Lord was present to heal; and at the after-meeting numbers of seekers yielded up their hearts to Christ.

There were many regrets that the mission could not be continued longer; but, unfortunately, this could not be arranged. During July Mr. Inglis will be preaching at the Polytechnic, Mr. Manton Smith conducting the Gospel meetings on Sunday evenings in the Polytechnic Châlet grounds on the Lake of Lucerne. M. S.

Irish Evangelisation Society.

THE past year's work of this Society has been fruitful in spiritual blessing. Meetings were somewhat less in aggregate number than before, owing chiefly to the fact that three of the evangelists were laid aside by illness for a time; and it is feared that this was caused to some extent by over exertion, as means only permitted the sending of one man where two were really needed.

At a mission held in one district the attendance steadily increased to 250, two-thirds of them Roman Catholics. The hymn tunes were sung and whistled in almost every part of the town. A young man being asked to sing at a party, treated his friends to a hymn learned in the hall. Concerning the change which the Lord has been pleased to bring about through meetings in a wooden hall at Listowel, a leading Protestant testifies "Had an angel come to tell me that such bright conversions would take place, I could not have believed it." The sympathies of the people went out to the evangelist, who was privileged to carry the living water to many, and, as one wrote, "friendships were formed which will be perfected in glory." At the close some whose means were very limited denied themselves to aid in sending on the Gospel message.

Among other places where good work was done in co. Leitrim, a movable hall was used at Manorhamilton. One Roman Catholic told a crowd of his co-religionists that they should listen to the preaching. He had done so, was greatly benefited, and would allow no one to prevent him listening, for he heard nothing but the "pure Gospel," and he wished it were preached everywhere. His testimony had great effect. The mission services held at Palace Anne, co. Cork, were in every way successful. The gathering of 200 to 300 persons' night after night during the harvest season for nearly six week was no common proof of far-reaching influence nor could the straight and forcible putting of the power and guilt of sin and the urgency and present possibility of salvation be without result.

If those who desire the best good for Ireland could furnish means, this blessed work might be largely extended, instead of having to diminish its operations in view of so many open doors. Mr. James Barton, Dundalk, is hon. sec.

Evangelistic Movements.

Mr. William Forbes closed on Friday a week of open-air services at Inverness. Large numbers of men assembled nightly in front of the Town Hall. On several evenings a second meeting was held in the Y.M.C.A. Hall.

Gospel meetings have been held in the movable mission hall at Dollingstown, Lurgan, by Messrs. Peatt and Crozier, of the Irish Evangelisation Society. Similar meetings have been held in Saintfield Parish Church by Rev. J. P. Cushing, superintendent of Irish Church Missions.

The committee of the Evangelisation Society, as well as others interested in the Gospel, have cause to be thankful in connection with two missions held on Romney Marsh, one at Brookland, and another at Brenzett. Much blessing has been given through the addresses of Mr. J. H. Cooke.

During June the preachers at St. Giles' Christian Mission Chapel were Mr. James, Mr. S. Harrison, and Mr. Bright, the blind evangelist. Quite a number of the lads from the homes went into the inquiry room seeking "the way of salvation." We are continually receiving into fellowship those who have professed faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.—W. W.

Mr. John Coates, of the Ross Bible Carriage Mission, has held a successful tent mission in Tetbury. The attendances have been large, and God's blessing has been great, both on believers and the unconverted. Many professed conversion. The Lord has given Mr. Coates great tact for helping the unsaved, which, with his earnest zeal, makes him a most desirable evangelist. — T. Napoleon Smith, Baptist Pastor.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

PRAYING TO THE HOLY SPIRIT.

Dear Sir,—Will you allow me through your columns to thank the numerous correspondents who have so kindly written their agreement to the great importance of following the guidance of Scripture as regards praying in the Holy Spirit, instead of to the Holy Spirit?

Some quote well-known writers and leaders of Christian thought; yet in these last days it is very necessary that one's actions should be ruled by that "Scripture which cannot be broken." So, when we pray, let us "enter into our closet, and when we have shut the door, pray to our Father who is in secret."—Very truly yours,

Alex H. Hutchinson (Major-Gen.).

CHRISTIAN UNION FOR SOCIAL SERVICE.

Sir,—At a time of important development and enlarged opportunity for service our committee must bespeak again the co-operation of the Christian Press, hitherto most readily given, in making known to the churches the need of Christian brothers for the help of the unemployed and other sufferers of our colony at Lingfield. After two years' experience we understand at once what we need and the difficulty of securing it. The men who come to us for help are seldom able to work on the land without close and constant guidance, while many are, through mental and moral enfeeblement, dependent for a chance of recovery upon strong Christian sympathy, advice, and example. Hence the need of the class of men called "Christian Brothers," in the proportion of one to every four or five of our colonists.

The position is inevitably somewhat rough and hard. The Brothers live with the men generally by day and night, and home comfort in such circumstances is not to be thought of. Thus no man is fit for the work who is not prepared to "endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." At the same time we are careful to put no needless burdens upon these honoured helpers, and to give them as much liberty and relief as is consistent with order and efficiency. Immediate remuneration is small, being £1 a month besides the supply of all necessaries and a suit of clothes annually; but we have now a wide and increasing prospect of well paid employment in connection with great public institutions for those who prove their competence by a year or two of faithful service in the colony and make good use of the opportunity for training which it affords.

We are asking for a rare thing in the combination of common-sense enthusiasm which will not shrink from work of many kinds, and a communicable knowledge of agriculture or other useful industry. The newness of the work has led in some cases to misunderstanding and disappointment, yet we believe there are in the churches fit men by whom such an opportunity of serving Christ and humanity would be eagerly welcomed. Applicants should write to the hon. director, Rev. J. L. Brooks, Training Colony, Lingfield, Surrey.

We have already secured gifts amounting to nearly £1700, which warrant the immediate building of the director's house, with an annexe for thirty crippled children and their attendants, and a dormitory for forty men, with sanatorium and a room for the Brothers, all of which will cost £2300. Memorial stones will be laid on Saturday, July 16, by the Bishop of Hereford and Dr. Monro Gibson. Tickets for Lingfield will be provided on application to me at half the usual fares, the train leaving London Bridge at 2.25, Victoria at 2.30, and Croydon at 3 o'clock. A substantial tea will be provided (at 6d.) after the ceremony. We hope old friends and many new ones will take this opportunity of seeing the colony and meeting for conference about the great interests which its represents.—Yours faithfully, J. F. B. Tinling, Hon. Sec.

The Grove Mission, Southwark, has issued a special report of its philanthropic work, showing what has been done among the widows, poor children, aged sick, cripples, and hungry men, women, and children. Help is much needed. The treasurer is Mr. John W. Weston, 31, Park-street, Southwark, S.E.

Oxford Letter.

THE preacher at Mansfield on Sunday week was Dr. Whyte, of Edinburgh, and although most of the undergraduates had gone down the chapel was crowded. The sermon was beautiful in its simplicity and intense in its spirituality. Devout hearers must have gone away feeling that God had indeed spoken to them. Prayer was the subject, and Dr. Whyte urged that it should be secret and deliberate. "Pray with willingness, with diligence, with sober-mindedness, with imagination, and with intercession. Spend a day now and then with God; put off your dearest friend, and converse with God."

The first meeting in connection with the proposed C.M.S. Exhibition to be held in Oxford next year was held on Friday. When it is remembered that some thousand stewards will be required, whose duty will be not merely to exhibit, but to give information concerning the different parts of the mission field, some idea of the work resting with the conveners may be obtained. Much blessing has followed the effort in other large towns, and prayers are asked for God's blessing on all the arrangements.

At the Oxford Diocesan Conference held last week the Bishop of Oxford refused permission to a High Church vicar to discuss details of ritual in the course of his speech, and interrupted him with these words: "I cannot hear this; do not go into these details, which are exceedingly offensive to a great many."

The Town Hall was filled on the afternoon of Sunday week by a united gathering of the various societies connected with the P.S.A. The Principal of Wycliffe spoke a timely word on the obligations of public worship. He said it seemed as if Englishmen in our great cities were forgetting the privileges and obligations of public worship; some did not attend church or chapel unless at a marriage, baptism, funeral, or perhaps a harvest festival. The P.S.A. is undoubtedly doing much good, but there is danger lest the members substitute it for church attendance.

Obituary.

REV. THEODORE W. J. WYLIE, D.D.

News has just come to hand of the death of this well-known servant of God, at Philadelphia, Pa., U.S.A., the city of his birth and life-long labours. Dr. Wylie was the son of the Rev. Samuel B. Wylie, D.D., Pastor of the First Reformed Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia, and Vice-Provost of the University of Pennsylvania. He was chosen first as assistant and then as successor to his father; and what is remarkable, and perhaps without a parallel, the father and son were each privileged to celebrate their ministerial jubilee in the same church. Together they ministered to the one congregation for a century. Dr. Wylie was aptly and faithfully described by Dr. Hoyt, at the funeral service in the Wylie Memorial Church, as "the most devoted of Christians, the most faithful of pastors, the most courteous of gentlemen."

MR. BRAINERD RADCLIFFE.

With much sorrow we record the sudden death of Brainerd, eldest son of the late Mr. Reginald Radcliffe. Writing from Waterloo, Liverpool, on Thursday last, his mother, Mrs. Radcliffe, says:—"I ask the prayers of your readers in the sudden and almost overwhelming calamity that has come upon us in the death of our beloved eldest son. He was in London last week on business, and on Sunday spoke twice at a meeting in Waterloo. He closed his evangelical address by earnest entreaty to men and women, boys and girls, to come to Jesus, and finished his earthly ministry with these words:—

Jesus, I will trust Thee,
Trust Thee with my soul.

On Monday morning he went to his office in Liverpool, burst an artery in his stomach, was got home with difficulty, and passed peacefully away on Tuesday, soon after seven p.m. He leaves a widow and six children."

The Spitalfields Lodging-House Band reports on another year's work in these haunts of the homeless and hopeless. Services are held every Sunday evening with cheering results. Among the poor little children, also, good work is done. The various endeavours to rescue the fallen have been the means of saving many. The superintendent is Mr. C. Pateman, 87, Old Montagu-street, Whitechapel, E.

Items of Interest.

Home.

The London School Board will require for the year £1,872,729, just over 1s. in the pound.

At a meeting of the executive of the Liberator Relief Fund it was stated that the total amount raised is nearly £80,000. There are over 500 annuitants.

The Press Bazaar in aid of the London Hospital, opened by the Princess of Wales, accompanied by the Duchess of York, has been a great success, some £10,000 being realised.

Rev. Dr. Story has been appointed Principal of the University of Glasgow, in room of Principal Caird, resigned. This appointment creates a vacancy in the Chair of Church History.

Donations to the extent of nearly £96,000 have been received towards founding a Birmingham University. All parties and religious denominations will, no doubt, heartily support this desirable movement.

The Council of the Royal Geographical Society have decided to raise a fund of not less than £50,000 for an Antarctic expedition to be sent out under the auspices of the Society. It will also contribute £5000. The Government hold out no hope of assistance.

Mr. Goschen has stated that there was no expenditure which was received with so much enthusiasm by the taxpayer as that of the Navy. Since he had been at the Admiralty he had sunk the politician in the administrator. Seldom in the history of the country had there been a more momentous period than the present.

The London auxiliary of the United Kingdom Alliance have arranged for a fortnight's mission by Rev. Leonard M. Isitt, of New Zealand, extending from Sunday, October 23, to Friday, November 4, and including four Sunday services, a special reception, six large district meetings, and three Exeter Hall demonstrations.

The decision of the Court of Appeal in the Tynemouth case, that municipal authorities could not spend public money on opposing renewals of licences has been widely discussed, and now a call for funds to take the case to the House of Lords is being made. The circular inviting subscriptions is signed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, Rev. Dr. Clifford, Mr. Arthur Chamberlain, chairman of the Birmingham Licensing Bench, and other influential gentlemen. The hon. treasurer of the fund is Mr. Alexander Guthrie, of 3, Fenwick-street, Liverpool.

At the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Assembly, held at Newport recently, the Moderator reported having received the following letter from the vicar of St. Paul's in that town:—"Rev. and Dear Sir,—I understand you were rather straitened for sufficient accommodation last Monday night, and write to say that if you are likely to require a larger building for another service during the present session you shall (with the consent of the churchwardens) be most heartily welcome to the use of St. Paul's Church. Trusting your present gathering will be richly blessed of God,—J. T. Wrenford, Vicar." The spirit of Christian charity thus shown is surely worthy of the highest praise.

The Coal Trouble.—The South Wales Associated Coalowners have resolved to form a society to ensure mutual protection of owners against liabilities under the Workmen's Compensation and Employers' Liability Acts.—The Yorkshire coal trade is threatened with a general stoppage; pit lads and pony drivers demand 10 per cent. advance. Already 5000 hands are idle.—Mr. Ritchie has consented to appoint a "conciliator" in the South Wales dispute. May peace and concord soon be established.

Charitable Contributions.—Further donations increase the Indian Heroes' Fund to about £3500.—Additional contributions to the Duchess of Teck's Memorial Fund leave only about £1000 to complete the sum required.—The relief fund in aid of the families of persons drowned at the Blackwall disaster reaches £2096.—By the will of Mr. Charles Evans, of Highgate, £50 each has been bequeathed to several missionary societies and hospitals.—£1000 from Mr. W. D. Cruddas to the Church Missionary Society.—25gs. from the Queen to the Royal Ear Hospital, Soho.—By the will of Sir Robert Rawlinson it is expected that St. Thomas's Hospital will benefit to about £35,000.

The Y.M.C.A.

The Hazelwood Home of Rest for young men reports that since its opening 25,492 have benefited physically and spiritually by the home. While it is a holiday and recreation resort, the spiritual welfare of the residents is ever held in view, and many testify that it has been a means of much blessing in every way.

The Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. combined for two special meetings in a large tent at Blackburn, on Wednesday and Thursday evening, June 29 and 30. Special addresses were given by Mr. A. K. Yapp, travelling secretary for Lancashire.

A meeting was held in the Assembly Room, Accrington, on June 28, to consider the advisability of forming a local branch of the Y.M.C.A. Most of those who took part expressed themselves as favourable to the movement, and it was ultimately decided to adjourn the meeting for a few weeks.

Plans have been approved for an imposing new building by the committee of the Cardiff Y.M.C.A., and the work of erection will very shortly be commenced. An entire outlay is contemplated for site, building, and furnishing of some £15,000. The building will be situated in Station-terrace, adjacent to the premises now in temporary occupation by the Association.

The summer conference of the North Midland District Union was held at Huddersfield on June 29. Delegates were present from Sheffield, Leeds, Derby, Lincoln, Nottingham, Barnsley, Wakefield and other centres. An eloquent address was given by Canon Bardsley, vicar of Huddersfield, and papers were read on "Visitation of Members," by Mr. Thomas Moffatt (Leeds), and "The Relation of the Y.M.C.A. to the Churches," by Mr. F. C. Bennett, travelling secretary. The programme also included a quiet hour at Fernay Hall, and an open-air demonstration. The Mayor entertained the delegates to luncheon in the Town Hall.

Foreign.

Renewed anti-Semitic disturbances have taken place in Galicia; twenty Jews have been done to death, and whole districts fired.

The Philippines.—Recently published statistics show that British imports from the Philippines are thirty-three times greater than those of Germany, and her exports to the islands more than three times greater.

Newfoundland.—Sir James Winter, Premier of Newfoundland, has arrived in England to seek to obtain a Commission of inquiry into the matters affecting the relation of Newfoundland with the mother country, and also the effect of the French treaties in hindering the development of the country's resources.

The War.—The latest news from Cuba tells of the destruction of Admiral Cervera's fleet in an endeavour to escape from Santiago Bay. General Shafter has demanded the surrender of Santiago itself. There are at least 1000 dead and wounded, as the result of the recent attack, in the American lines, and a large number amongst the Spanish forces. Both armies were distinguished by remarkable bravery. We trust that some steps will soon be taken to promote peace; the issue of the conflict cannot be doubtful if prolonged.

Personalia.

Gipsy Smith has celebrated the completion of twenty-one years' evangelistic work.

Prediger C. T. Lipshytz left London on Saturday for a two months' mission tour among the Jewish populations in the South-east of Europe.

Rev. Robert Herbert Story, D.D., Professor of Church History in the University of Glasgow, has been appointed Principal of the University, in room of Principal Caird.

Mr. and Mrs. Wiggan, the well-known evangelists, have received a testimonial in recognition of their fifty years of Christian work. It takes the form of £150 devoted to the purchase of part of a house for them.

Rev. John Patrick, D.D., of Greenside Parish Church, Edinburgh, has been appointed Professor of Biblical Criticism in Edinburgh University, in succession to Professor Charteris, who recently resigned the Chair.

Rev. John M'Neill is to take up his residence during the month of August in Stonehaven, and has intimated his willingness to occupy the pulpit of the Free Church during that month. With the town full of visitors, the popular preacher should draw large congregations.

Messrs. Weaver Brothers.—These brethren desire to state that a notice recently appeared in The Sunday Companion announcing that they had taken the superintendence of the Barnwell Theatre Mission, Cambridge. This report was entirely erroneous, and did not originate from them, and it was contradicted in the succeeding issue of the paper. The Barnwell Mission, of course, remains under the charge of Mr. Vawser, and Weaver Brothers continue their evangelistic work in different parts of the country. Last Sunday evening they commenced a mission at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, with a very large attendance.

Derby will shortly lose a very hard-working and Evangelical vicar through Rev. W. Martin having lately accepted Earl Spencer's offer of the rectory of Brington.

The Princess of Wales and Princess Christian attended a concert which was given in Stafford House, the residence of the Duchess of Sutherland, in aid of a church in a poor district of the Potteries.

The foundation-stone of a new English church has been laid at Dusseldorf by Bishop Wilkinson, as an offering from a resident family who for many years have taken a keen interest in the English community of the place.

The Bishop of Worcester makes a fresh appeal for church extension in Birmingham, stating that "no other city, apparently, has made so little provision in the way of church accommodation in proportion to the population."

Bishop Adelbert, John Robert Anson, D.D., formerly of Qu' Appelle, British North America, has notified his acceptance of the residentiary canonry in Lichfield Cathedral vacant by the death of Archdeacon Melville Horne Scott.

At the Mansion House a meeting was held in the interests of an endowment fund to support the English Church at Valetta, Malta, which was built out of the private purse of Queen Adelaide at a cost of £20,000. From £10,000 to £20,000 will be required.

The Bishop of St. Albans has received an anonymous donation of £1000 towards his special Church and Mission-room Building Fund for London over the Border. This makes the fourth gift (including £2000 from a "London Merchant") to meet the offer of a friend to give £1000 (in five years) if nine others will give a not less sum, allotting it if they please to any particular church or churches.

An official statement has now been issued that as soon as the advance upon Khartoum has effected its purpose the C.M.S. will be prepared to open up missionary work there. It is probable that, in the first place, a "preliminary expedition" will be sent from the Egypt Mission to Khartoum, and that the special form of work undertaken will be a medical mission; but at present everything depends upon whether the Society can get men to go there. The money for the proposed mission has been in hand for some years, the "Gordon Memorial Fund," raised some twelve years ago, being still in hand. The committee of the Society are causing it to be known that they will welcome offers of service for the Khartoum Mission.

Rev. A. Rowland preached last week in connection with the centenary of Mortimer West Church. The story of its origin, as told at the celebration, is a wonderful memorial of the power of humble but faithful men—turf cutters and mole catchers—and of the service of men of whom the world knows nothing.

A "Village Aid Auxiliary" has been formed in connection with Ipswich District of Suffolk Union in order to bring the churches into mutually sympathetic and helpful relation by arranging for evangelistic services, open-air meetings, special lectures, lantern services, etc., occasional supplies, and the sending of a visitor to help the pastor in a Sunday service, as might be thought desirable; facilitating an interchange of pulpits, and otherwise aiding each other's work.

At the fifty-fifth anniversary of Lancashire College a letter was read from Principal Scott, who was prevented by illness from attending, in which he stated that of the eight men who leave the college this month seven have accepted invitations to vacant pastorates. Professor R. Mackintosh, in reporting on the work of the session, mentioned that Professor A. S. Peake, of the Primitive Methodist College, Manchester, had been appointed teacher of Hebrew and Biblical exegesis at Lancashire College also.

At the annual meeting of Yorkshire United College Rev. Eric A. Lawrence presided over a large attendance. Dr. Simon stated that there had been thirty-five students attending the college during the year. Mr. Mark Oldroyd, M.P., in addressing the students, said to fill a pulpit in these days requires a whole man. The resources of a minister cannot be too large, nor his equipment too perfect. Intellectual power, accumulated knowledge, mature judgment, ripened experience, may each find a place on the altar of consecration.

Lewis (Southport).

The Bible Christian (Methodist) Connexion has just lost the first name on its list of ministers by the death of the Rev. John Gannon, who was born in 1815, and entered the ministry in 1837. He was elected president of the conference in 1859, and again in 1876. He was for many years governor of the Connexional College at Shebbear, Devon, which under his management was greatly enlarged.

The United Methodist Free Church Conference will be held this year at Lincoln. The new chairman is expected to be Rev. E. D. Cornish, of Manchester. Missions are likely to occupy much attention at this Assembly. The progress on some of the foreign stations has been marked throughout the year. Especially is this true of the missions at Ningpo and Wen-Chow in China. The recent gift of a Buddhist temple near Ningpo is only one indication of the impression that is being made on the Chinese mind. A missionary party, consisting of Dr. Swallow, Miss Abercrombie, and Revs. G. W. Sheppard and H. Wilson, sail from Southampton on September 12. Revs. F. Baron and A. J. Ellis go at an early date to Jamaica, and Rev. James Proudfoot, superintendent of the missions of Sierra Leone, who is here on furlough, returns to Freetown in October. No further news has come to hand in relation to the missions in the hinterland of Sierra Leone. It is known that the missions at Tikonko, Naitafoo, and Mappohir have been destroyed, but it is not known whether Rev. C. H. Goodman, who was in charge of Tikonko, is living or not. Tidings of his whereabouts are awaited with much anxiety.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE horrors of war are too plainly in evidence again, the scenes at Santiago, by land and sea, being, perhaps, as terrible as any ever witnessed. Yet there do not appear to be evidences of any deliberate cruelty on either side. The Spaniards have not mutilated any Americans, as was once asserted ; and the Americans certainly spared no endeavours to save the Spanish sailors who threw themselves from the flaming ships of Cervera's fleet. The strange inconsistency of war is that men will blow a ship up, and then exert themselves to save its maimed and drowning crew!

Graphic descriptions of valour appear in the daily papers, both parties in the conflict distinguishing themselves under the inspiring enthusiasm of patriotism. Of the Spaniards it is said :—

> At no time did the Spaniards give any indications that they intended to do otherwise than fight to the last. They showed no signals of surrender, even when their ships commenced to sink and great clouds of smoke pouring from the sides showed that the vessels were on fire.

While of the Americans who charged up the slope against a storm of death, it is recorded :—

> They started on the double-quick, but no troops could face such a terrific fire without annihilation. They staggered, then threw themselves on the ground, then started again, and again threw themselves prone, but on and up they went until with a cheer they sprang over the trenches which divided the contending forces, leaving the hillside strewn with their fallen comrades.

These vivid war pictures bring us face to face with the ghastly thing itself. But this wonderful courage, this cool defiance of death, this supreme determination not to endure the shame of defeat, can but be admired. The pity is that it has not found expression in saving men's lives rather than destroying them.

The politicians of unfortunate Spain seem incapable of guiding her destinies any longer, and waste their breath in vain perorations about the national honour. There is nothing more tragic than this kind of blindness to simple and obvious facts—unless it be the bravery with which the soldiers of a corrupt and unworthy Government throw their lives away at its bidding. Spain will need the prayers and sympathy of the world when the war is over.

The International Congress on State Regulation of Vice, which meets this year in London, will be memorable by the appearance on the platform of Exeter Hall this evening (Thursday) of Mrs. Josephine E. Butler as president of the great meeting. Advancing years, frail health, and many trials in her sacred cause have not abated the ardour of her spirit nor shaken the steadfastness of her faith in the guiding principles of that cause or in the certainty of their ultimate victory. She relaxes no effort, and—surer sign of trust in God—she makes no haste. In the current number of The Storm-Bell she says :

> No mournful word shall escape the lips of those whose hope and faith are unassailable, being rooted in Him who said, "I saw Satan fall like lightning from heaven," and whose kingdom established, and His will done on earth, will be the dethronement of the oppressor and enemy of mankind.

The Secretary of State for War is of opinion, writes his secretary, that the best way of promoting morality in the Army is "to induce officers to give their best personal efforts in the direction of raising the moral tone of the men, both by precept and example." The missing link here is, Who is to induce the officers? We quoted last week from "a memorandum" from the War Office pointing out what company officers ought to do. All will depend on whether the officers higher in rank set a good example to those lower down.

It was at the suggestion of Mr. D. L. Moody on the occasion of his memorable visit to Dublin in 1874, that the Christian Union buildings were erected upon the site of the old Metropolitan Hall, for the carrying on of united Christian work. A necessity has now arisen for a large expenditure on the roof of the Metropolitan Hall. After careful examination by qualified architects, it has been found essential, owing to some structural defects, to replace the existing roof by a lighter and more suitable one. This will be a costly matter, but it is absolutely necessary for the safety of the buildings, and when carried out, it is believed, will greatly improve the appearance and add to the comfortable use of what may well be described as the Exeter Hall of Dublin. The buildings generally will also require a thorough repainting and renovation. The total cost of these works will be about £2000, towards which £500 has been contributed by local friends. The chairman is Mr. David Drummond, 58 Dawson-street.

The Prince of Wales last week administered a sharp rebuke to the inhabitants of well-to-do suburbs of London, for their indifference to the interests of the poor in their vicinity. He attributed this indifference mainly to two causes. First, there is great ignorance of the condition of the districts in which the poor live ; and, secondly, a disinclination to ascertain the facts by personal inspection, and sometimes even to admit the existence of such miserable districts in close proximity to their own homes. The Prince made honourable mention of exceptional individuals who work on behalf of the poor with praiseworthy energy and zeal ; but his charge is broadly true. It is one of the increasing problems in great cities how to awaken the higher public spirit of the wealthier inhabitants in view of the segregation of the population into class suburbs. "Out of sight, out of mind," is a proverb only too applicable to this matter.

Perhaps the most serious aspect of this lamentable state of things is the religious. More and more it is becoming difficult to find workers who are willing to remain in the poorer districts to carry on the work of the churches there, while suburban churches are crowded with men and women of experience whose talents are lying idle and useless for lack of employment. The Settlements that are started here and there are doing something to remedy the evil, but they are sadly undermanned ; and they cannot take the place of churches and mission halls. It is of the utmost importance that preachers should keep the crying needs of the congested districts for evangelisation and religious education before their congregations. Those who "take their ease in Zion" in view of this state of things need a thorough uprousing.

Some excellent advice was given by Rev. J. W. Ewing, M.A., of Peckham, at the Baptist Students' National Union last week as to the best method of retaining the young people in Church life. There should, he said, be a fourfold tie binding the pastor and his young people—the personal tie, "let them honour and love him" ; the doctrinal tie, "let them know something of the doctrines they are asked to believe and have a reason for the faith that is in them" ; the experimental tie, "lead them into personal union with Jesus Christ" ; and the practical tie, "give them work to do." The ministry that fulfils these conditions is not likely to fail of enlisting the interest and the enthusiasm of the young life around it, especially if the last two conditions are made permanent. Conversion must lead to service if it is to be permanent and real. When it does it seldom fails to be both.

The Catechism projected by the National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches for use in teaching Scriptural truth to the young is well on its way to completion, and will be published in the autumn. It will contain positive teaching on the doctrines of the Church, the ordinances, and the ministry, and give young people who are about to go out into the world materials whereby they may be able to test and refute the sacerdotal heresy which is spreading so fast. The Free Churches have, in this matter, learned a lesson from the Ritualists, who have shown themselves wise in their assiduous endeavours to indoctrinate the young under their charge in their distinctive teaching. If Evangelical Christians are to meet and master theerror, they must see to it that the children under their charge are filled with light and knowledge from their earliest days as to the essential simplicity of the Faith.

The following message was recently dictated by an aged Christian on his dying bed to his daughters, two of whom are missionaries in the foreign field :—

> It has been laid on the heart and conscience of one upon the confines of another world that there is a most solemn and awful responsibility resting upon all professing Christians in relation to the great command of our blessed Lord given to the apostles and disciples to "go into all the world and preach the Gospel." This was done up to the third century, since which time only a comparative few faithful ones have continued, and that great command has been treated almost as though it had never been uttered. There ought to be a wailing throughout the universal Church, until, like Matthew at the receipt of custom on hearing the Master's call, each one should instantly obey.

The Parliamentary Committee on Money-lending has at last completed its labours and issued its report. It is too often the fate of such reports to be consigned to the waste-paper basket. In this case it is to be hoped it will end in stringent legislation on the lines suggested. The recommendations are in the direction of checking and making difficult the mischievous occupation of usury, and by visiting with severe punishment any attempt at extortion; while the rate of interest, it is suggested, should be restricted within certain reasonable limits. If Parliament can translate these recommendations into laws it will be doing a truly humanitarian act, by lessening the number of the harpies that fatten on the misfortunes and credulity of confiding people.

The sad revelations in the courts last week, which resulted in the sentence of a fashionable doctor to seven years' penal servitude for illegal practices, unmask a perilous tendency in modern society. The "revolt of women against maternity" is an appalling symptom of the worship of ease and pleasure which growingly marks the wealthier grades in the community. Such a movement strikes at a fundamental law of nature and of God; and if it became general would imperil the future destinies of the race. A similar movement helped to hasten the downfall of Greece and Rome; it is fast throwing France into the second list of Powers; and it would in a generation or two settle the doom of the Anglo-Saxon nation to a certainty. The significant rider of the jury, in giving their verdict, deserves the earnest attention of all makers of public social opinion.

The Church Association has come forward, not a moment too soon, with a rousing pamphlet on the present crisis in the Church of England. In the course of 120 pages it gives facts and figures of serious significance, with Romish illustrations thrown in, which to the Protestant mind cannot but justify the title of the publication, AN INDICTMENT OF THE BISHOPS: showing how the Church of England is being Corrupted and Betrayed by them and (indirectly) by the Prime Ministers. (1s. net. Church Association, 14, Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C.) It is declared that the bishops have made friends with the enemies of the Protestant Reformation, and appointed such to positions of dignity and influence:—

They have appointed twenty-nine supporters of Ritualism as archdeacons; and thirty to residentiary canonries, with handsome salaries attached to each of them. The enormous number of 316 supporters of Ritualism have received hon. canonries from the bishops. Their lordships have presented at least seventy members of the Romanising Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament to livings in their gift, and have given them £13,439 every year to work their will amongst 246,203 immortal souls.

The bishops have appointed the large number of forty-one friends of the Ritualistic cause as Examining Chaplains of candidates for Ordination. In connection with the subject of Ordination, the Bishops are guilty of a serious misuse of the powers entrusted to them, by recommending for the study of candidates for Holy Orders a large number of books which teach Popish doctrines under Episcopal guidance, advice, and recommendation. The future clergy are, in certain English dioceses, expected to study works teaching —1. Purgatory. 2. Intercession of Saints. 3. Seven Sacraments. 4. Extreme Unction. 5. Transubstantiation and the Real Presence. 6. The Eucharistic Sacrifice for the Living and the Dead. 7. Reunion with the apostate Church of Rome. 8. Reunion with the corrupt Eastern Church. 9. Auricular Confession. 10. Prayers for the dead. 11. That the English Protestant Martyrs were mostly "fanatics." 12. The praise of the Oxford Movement. 13. The alleged benefits of Convents. 14. Priestly Mediatorship.

The Council of the Church Association appeal to the Protestants of England, and ask them to do their duty in this weighty matter. Unless the bishops do their duty, they ought to be turned out of office, and faithful men placed in their room.

Our readers will also note with satisfaction the forcible letter of Lady Wimborne (see page 25) which appeared in The Times of Monday last. Her action will no doubt induce an interest in quarters otherwise hard to reach.

Amid the blatant cries that sacerdotalists raise against the use of the term Protestant, it is well to ask, Against what errors and corruptions did the Reformation churches protest? Until that is clearly and unmistakably shown we are not much helped. Nor need anyone who goes into the real question at issue be long in uncertainty. The ultimate principle of Protestantism, as Dr. Dale shows in his illuminating little book on the question, is—the right, and the duty, of private judgment in religion. It is the right of every believer to receive the truth direct, without intermediaries of priest and sacrament. It is the duty of every man to do so. That is the Protestantism of Luther and Calvin and the great thinkers who shook Europe with their mighty words and gave a new meaning to the Gospel. As Dr. Dale put it:

The whole controversy between ourselves and Rome turns on whether the intercourse between God and man is direct and immediate, or whether between Him and us there are priests and saints, and the decrees of the councils, and the authority of popes.

Here is the pivot on which everything turns.

Though Romish practices find high favour in many directions, and the Reformation and its story seems to be much forgotten, there are signs of a revival of interest in the great events of the sixteenth century. A contributor who is connected with a Men's Own Meeting in East London, informs us that Foxe's "Book of Martyrs" is coming into favour. Fifty men in one meeting recently made selections from a list of forty books, representing various types of literature; and Foxe's famous work was in greater demand than any other book. Next came lives of Gordon and Livingstone. We would not exaggerate the significance of such a matter as this, but nevertheless we are glad to note it, and trust that it augurs well for the coming days.

The Truth-seeker.

THE DISPENSATIONS.

IT is sad beyond expression to observe the destructive character of some of the least critical theories of Bible exposition. In the name of Dispensational Truth men are practically blotting out many portions of God's Word; believers who are earnest beyond their fellows in contending that "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness," are advocating schemes of interpretation which neutralise the effect of "true sayings of God." For instance, an esteemed correspondent writes to us:—

It was pointed out to me some time ago by a Spirit-taught man of God, that "The soul that sinneth it shall die" was dispensational truth, and belongs to the dispensation of the Law.

Hence, our correspondent calls upon evangelists who have hitherto quoted these words from the prophecy of Ezekiel—whether with the emphasis indicated by the context (ch. xviii.)* or as expressing a general truth—to guard against the repetition of "a very serious mistake."

First, we would remark that if truth belonging to "the dispensation of the Law" was by Divine inspiration applied to the times of the Prophets, it cannot be unscriptural in these last days when, through the mouths of Christian evangelists, the same God is contending with a like race of sinful men. "All Scripture...is profitable...that the man of God may be throughly furnished." Secondly, we would remark that, although the words of Ezek. xviii. 4, 20, may belong to the days of the Prophets, and find their parallel in the warnings of the Law, they likewise have also their precise counterpart in New Testament teaching. If the Apostle Paul wrote, "The wages of sin is death," it cannot be out of date or improper, in enforcement of that solemn denunciation, to use any and all the threats of the Old Testament, and to speak them as "the Word of God which liveth and abideth for ever."

A theory which would limit the application of Divine principles, and which leads men to qualify God's words, cannot be a safe guide either in Bible study or testimony for Christ. What is called Dispensational Truth has assuredly come to this, when in its name the moral law is surrendered; and the Gospel of Matthew is referred to the time of our Lord's sojourn on earth, and (passing over this dispensation), to come into operation again during "the missing week" of seven years at the end. Let us distinguish between things that differ, and we shall not confuse the Levitical with the Mosaic, the temporary with the essential, the material husk with the spiritual kernel. When God speaks it is for us to listen; things spoken to others are for us also, and "written for our admonition." "Whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning (teaching, or instruction), that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope" (Rom. xv. 4).

Two widow ladies were once in our hearing comforting one another in their bereavement by repeating Old Testament words. They were of the school of exposition to which we have referred. We said, "But you think those Scriptures are Jewish." They severely resented the observation, and wisely refused not to be comforted by those passages, although they "belong to the dispensation of the Law."

We knew a brother in Christ, many years ago, who held that all the Old Testament from Gen. xii. (the call of Abram) was Jewish; that Matthew, the Hebrews, James, 1 and 2 Peter, and the Revelation from chapter iv. were also Jewish. Pursuing his studies on the same line, he consistently and logically went on to believe that the Epistles were exclusively Roman, Corinthian, Galatian, Ephesian, and so on; so that he had nothing left for his own soul's food, nor any word in season to speak to him that is weary. He died in darkness, having cast from himself the Word which is a lamp to the feet and a light upon the path; he died in weakness, having divested himself of the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God.

A brother whom we esteemed very highly in love for his work's sake, said to the writer, then a young Christian, that the Old Testament promises were Jewish. In reply, 2 Cor. vi. 16—vii. 1 was quoted, where the Apostle says to Gentile Christians, "Having, therefore, these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." The elder acknowledged that the promises could not be claimed for Israel exclusively, for the Apostle had previously said to the same Corinthians that "all the promises of God in Christ are Yea, and in Him Amen, to the glory of God by us" (2 Cor. i. 20).

Are dispensations eternal? Are they not like scaffolding, which is removed when the building is complete; or like the "forms" in school, graduations for educational purposes, which have no continuance after the education is complete?

These observations are offered in no dogmatic or controversial spirit, but with a simple desire to ascertain the truth for ourselves and others. M.

* The prophet's argument is that "the soul that sinneth it shall die." Not the son for the father's sin, nor the father for that of the son.

God's Methods with Man.

ACCORDING to Scripture, God is "not the author of confusion, but of peace"; and in the words of the poet "order is Heaven's first law." As in the physical world, so in the moral and spiritual spheres, God has his times and seasons. If Theistic inquiry and poetic speculation bring before the mind an "increasing purpose" running through the ages, certain it is that Christian confidence is satisfied with nothing less, but rests in the assurance that God is performing a mighty plan, which, though He "moves in a mysterious way," will at length be instrumental of the greatest good among men and eventuate in the highest glory to Himself.

To be truly profitable, the study of prophecy should always keep in view the declared purpose of God. It is as we view the consummation that we come to understand the process aright. It is, moreover, as unwise to consider prophecy without regard to the Divine method as it is improper to interpret a passage of Scripture with the eyes closed to its setting and context. "God, having of old time spoken unto the fathers in the prophets, by divers portions and in divers manners, hath at the end of these days spoken unto us in his Son." In other words, there is method, as well as mercy, in the progress of Divine revelation and the unfolding of the dispensations.

These considerations have been admirably applied by Rev. G. Campbell Morgan in his book, GOD'S METHODS WITH MAN*. Ten in number, the chapters were originally spoken as lectures, and reported in a condensed form in our columns. Many who read them in part will be glad to peruse them as a whole and gathered in volume form. Though in general occupying the position of a Futurist interpreter, Mr. Campbell Morgan expounds the Scriptures with considerable independence, and without undue confidence on controverted points. "I simply desire," he says in the preface, "to enunciate what I believe to be the teaching of the New Testament. The final court of appeal is not any man's interpretation, but God's Book; and I may have something yet to learn upon certain points."

Throughout his pages Mr. Campbell Morgan contrasts man's ways with God's; human failure is set alongside Divine progress. This manner of study yields results of great interest and far-reaching importance. The hope of the Lord's return stands out boldly in the programme of God's method; and the present dispensation of the Spirit is held to be "an unmeasured interpolation" in prophetic times. In a chapter on "The Coming of Christ," Mr. Campbell Morgan says of Acts i. 7:—

> The expression "times and seasons" is no haphazard one; but in the mouth of Jesus, and from the pen of the apostle, it refers to the whole providential arrangement marked out by God from beginning to end, and upon which this dispensation is an unmeasured interpolation—certainly there is no measurement for the latter in Scripture. Continual pushing on and pulling back of dates has done more than anything else to bring this blessed truth into discredit. What, then, are we to do? Comfort one another with these words—the Lord Himself shall come. The duration of this age being known only to God, all his redeemed ones are to be ever living according to the Divine will, with their eye upon its consummation—the coming of the Master.

Mr. Campbell Morgan devotes two chapters to what is designated by Futurist interpreters as Daniel's "Missing Week," and its events, as he reads the oracle. Other sections, less controversial and more fundamental in their teaching, deal with "The Golden Age" and "The Purifying Hope." Here the treatment is buoyant, as befits the majestic theme. In a chapter on "After the Thousand Years" hearty acknowledgment is made of the helpful character of Mr. G. F. Trench's book bearing that title.* As a work easy of comprehension, and presenting views of prophecy that take due account of the great principles of Divine providence as they relate to the order of the world and the blessings covenanted to God's ancient people and the Church of Christ, this volume deserves many readers. Its reverent tone and practical suggestiveness will commend the book to many who are disposed to distrust prophetical expositions.

Old Testament Notes.

"ABRAHAM was rich in silver and gold."—Genesis xiii. 2.

The placing of silver before gold, evidently because regarded as the more precious metal, is very valuable as an indication of the great antiquity of the materials employed in the compilation of the inspired narrative. Under the early Egyptian dynasties silver was appreciated as of more value than gold; and so, when both were mentioned, silver was specified first. This practice continued, so far as texts hitherto known, up to the time of Thotmes III., but in his inscription (in Lepsius, Denkmäler III., 30, b 10) the names are reversed. This no doubt was because after the Hittite wars silver began to be common in Egypt, probably coming there as a tribute, for the Hittites had large silver mines in Asia Minor, and their treaty with Ramses was written upon a silver tablet. The Egyptian name for silver, "white gold," shows that it became known to them subsequent to gold.

The elegant enlarged edition of the "Aids to the Student of the Holy Bible," edited by the Rev. C. J. Ball, M.A., which has just been published by the Queen's Printers, contains a photogravure reproduction of a relief bearing a portrait of Hammurabi (Amraphel), King of Shinar, with an inscription relating to him; also one of an inscribed cylinder of Arioch, King of Ellasar. In his account of the picture, Mr. Ball gives particulars of all the cuneiform text allusions to the kings spoken of in Genesis xiv. These are in addition to Amraphel and Arioch, Chedorlaomer (or Kudurlagamar) King of Elam; and Tidal (or Targal, the equivalent of the Babylonian Tudghula) King of Guti. Since, however, the volume was in the press, two other important documents have come to light, adding to our knowledge of these early monarchs, and confirming the translations previously given of texts relating to kings and cities associated in the confederacy spoken of in Genesis xiv. Both of these new texts have been published by Mr. Ball in the "Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archæology." One of them is a letter from Amraphel to Siniddina, King of Ellasar, in which direct reference is made to Chedorlaomer; in fact, the latter contains the advice of a reward to Siniddina for his valour in a campaign against Chedorlaomer, who was King of Western Elam. The other is a despatch from Amraphel to Siniddina in reference to a gang of workmen, half of them men of Ellasar, whom the former monarch was sending to the latter to be employed upon some important piece of work.

In Habakkuk i. 15-17 we read of men being caught by Chaldeans in a net. The text, which is not satisfactorily rendered because difficult to understand, has now been explained by an archaic Babylonian monument. To render this the more clear, it will be better to quote first M. Renan's translation of the passage in Habakkuk, made by him before the monument came to light. "They (the Chaldeans) catch them in their net, and gather them in its meshes. Then they rejoice and exult; therefore they sacrifice to their net and burn incense to its cordage. Shall they (be permitted to) empty their net to again (in it) swallow up the peoples without pity?" Now among the fragments of the great bas-relief of King Eannadon of Telloh, known as the "Vulture Stele," is one which is thus described by M. Heuzey: "Here is an extraordinary picture. The field of the relief is crossed and recrossed by lines or bars, interlacing each other, forming a lozenge-shape pattern like a trellis, or the meshes of a gigantic net. In this sort of net (or cage) are thrown, pell-mell, naked men, struggling and seeking to pass their heads through the meshes. They are of the same type as the dead and wounded who are being devoured by vultures upon all parts of the battle field. The colossal figure of the king, or deity, is connected with these. They are the unfortunates whom he is about to exterminate with his awful mace—particularly one of them, who, endeavouring to escape, has already protruded his head through an opening. A reminiscence of the Bible comes vividly to mind where Habukkuk compares a vanquished people as being captured like fish by a Chaldean." JOSEPH OFFORD, Missionary Prayer Meetings.

A FEW SUGGESTIONS.

MANY times I have been asked by earnest pastors and workers at home, How can we best help the missionaries on the field, when we meet together to pray and praise?

Since it is a real difficulty with some, I venture to make a few suggestions to guide any who may be seeking light.

Firstly. Let me urge upon each and all the great need to be more in prayer for the native Christians. Out of the many missionary prayer-meetings I attended, when at home, the native Christians were only remembered in two or three gatherings. Most faithfully the missionaries were brought to God, and prayer and praise given for any news of direct blessing, etc.

Secondly. Plead with God that the power of the Holy Ghost may come upon the native churches. We desire to see this, so that from these mission centres in heathen lands may go forth men and women of faith to reach their brethren and sisters who are still in darkness.

Thirdly. Pray that we as missionaries may always find our spiritual refreshment and stimulus in God. We often miss the stirring and helpful contact that many of the home conferences and conventions afford the weary souls; and unless we are much with God, down we go.

Fourthly. Plead especially that the passion for souls may not be lost. Contact with heathenism is awfully deadening, so we need your prayers on this line very much.

Fifthly. Ask that we may not trust too much to our fellow-workers. It is possible to rest in the arm of flesh too much, and in God too little. The only "full satisfaction" is in the Triune God. Our loving Father never fails. "Jesus is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever," and the Eternal Spirit changes not.

Lastly. Plead that each one may be kept happy and faithful. The joy of the Lord is to be our strength. The work will often depress and discourage. The heathen and Christian members will perchance disappoint the brightest hopes. But to remember that we are sent of God, that the seed sown is living eternal seed, and that Jesus himself is coming again, will make many a dark day bright and change defeat into victory.

Colportage in Scotland.—At the recent meeting of the Glasgow Colportage Society Mr. Graham, superintendent, said in his report:—"Our work during the past year has not been marked by any outstanding feature, but it has gone on quietly and steadily. The average sales of each colporteur amount to over £131, and that sum is chiefly made up of sales varying from a penny to two shillings. The need for colportage is greater than ever. Facilities abound for purchasing cheap literature. To create a desire for a purer and more elevating literature, which will lead people to a higher life, is the work set before the colporteur—to bring Christian literature to the doors of the people and induce them to buy it. In his daily rounds he gets entrance into homes that are shut against ministers and missionaries. The work carried on through the Bible Booth was very successful. Glasgow Fair, Kilmarnock Fair, Paisley Races, Dumbarton Shows, Ayr Races, and Lanark Races were visited."

FROM OTHER LANDS.

Scripture Union in Japan.

ONE of the features of Christian work which struck me most in Japan was the marvellous way in which so many of our specialised forms of activity had "caught on," such as Y.M. and Y.W.C.A.'s, Temperance, Christian Endeavour, and kindred societies, as well as unions for policemen, postmen, and other classes.

Among these none showed greater signs of life than the Scripture Union, whose prominent depôt faces the Shim-Cashi station in Tokyo. Besides its supplies of Bibles, tracts, and Christian literature generally—and Japan has native Christian periodicals in considerable numbers—it was the centre of police and other special work, its superintendent being a converted policeman. Indeed, the local Railway and Post Office Missions owe their existence directly to the Scripture Union, which last year had a membership of close on 12,000.

By means of organised house-to-house visitation in co-operation with the local churches and foreign missionaries in some of the principal towns, several hundred thousand portions, specially printed for the purpose, have been placed in the hands of the people, to say nothing of the 120,000 picture leaflets annually granted by the Children's Special Service Mission. The members' subscription is but twopence a year, though that represents a quite disproportionate purchasing power in Japan, and to meet the cost of cards and printing supplementary funds are continually needed from abroad.

The active centre of this work is Mrs. Whitney, of 3, Avi Cho, Akasaka, Tokyo, daughter of that Bible lover Mr. Bevan Braithwaite, of London; and she is surrounded by many earnest and capable workers, native and foreign. To detail all that has been accomplished within a year would occupy too much space, but it may be found in the last report from the C.S.S.M., 13A, Warwick-lane, London, E.C.

Among those unable to subscribe their quota are the inmates of the prisons of the northern island of Hokkaido, who are permitted to have Bibles and follow the readings, with the result that from a thousand to fifteen hundred of them have at different times become readers. There is also a special branch for the blind, who use the raised point system under the direction of a native lady. As a suggestive and zeal, I must repeat one story from the travelling secretary's report. It is of an aged farmer's wife, herself unable to read, who, besides collecting her household for daily worship, getting who can to read the Union portion, carries with her a Bible with a mark at John iii. 16, which she requests anyone she meets to read to her. Then, having questioned them as to its meaning, to set them thinking, she explains what it really does mean. "In this way," adds the report, "a great many in the village have become Christians and readers of the Bible."

But the story of the beginnings of this great work is even more instructive than the recital of its success, for it was through the simple invitation of an English girl in London to another English girl from Japan to join the Children's Scripture Union, which she did. On her return to Japan she tried to get her foreign friends to join, but meeting with poor success, she turned to the natives, with the result that within a year 1800 had become members, and the Bible societies were induced to print a special edition for their use, 2000 copies being sold off at once. That was sixteen years ago, and though the girl who was thus led to establish the Union of "Friends of the Bible," as it is called—Seisho no Tomo—has since been called home, the result of her labours remains and grows, for of her it will ever be recorded, "She hath done what she could."

The Veddahs of Ceylon.

SOME months ago we published an appeal on behalf of a newly commenced mission to the Veddahs. As the result of that appeal some help reached Rev. Joseph West, who writes to us from the Wesleyan Mission, Batticaloa, Ceylon:—

The mission is one of great difficulty and expense, owing to the distance from occupied mission centres of the district where the Veddahs live; but more so because of the roving habits and utter destitution of the people we are seeking to save. The Veddahs are scattered all over the forests of Bintende, some living in the rudest huts made of bark and grass, others, farther away still, having only rock shelters or trees in which to rest. We are trying to help those of the nearest hamlets first, and hope gradually to get them to come together in suitable settlements, where they may acquire land for cultivation, and be cared for temporally and spiritually. During the past few months, however, we have scarcely done anything but relieve the distress of the people, who have been in the very throes of famine.

The poor folk live on the produce of the chase and of the forest, and when a bad season comes—when edible produce is scarce, and the monsoon rains pour down and game cannot be caught—the forest is one huge forcing house for malaria, and there is nothing for them but to lie down and suffer, if not to die, victims of hunger, fever, and dysentery. Nothing can be done for the permanent good of the people until they can be settled in some place where they can be cared for and trained in habits of regular industry. It is here that the greatest of our difficulties confronts us.

We borrow encouragement in our effort from our great success amongst the coast Veddahs, as they are called, who live in villages fringing the shore from ten to forty miles north of Batticaloa. These have been longer under civilising influences, and respond very readily to efforts made on their behalf. Five years ago we opened a mission in a small Veddah village called Kaluvenkerin. Our difficulties there at first seemed almost insurmountable; but now we have a school of over forty pupils, who at the Government examination last year, when thirty were examined, took 94 per cent. of passes; and, better still, we have a most hopeful church of over thirty Christians, nearly all of them Veddahs.

We are seeking assistance from the Government in the shape of grants of land and financial assistance towards well matured philanthropic or educational plans. But preliminary help is wanted to sustain the mission over the time of preparation, of getting to know the people and their ways, and of winning their confidence. An annual income of about £100 is necessary effectively to do the work that is before us. Before all who love the Lord Jesus and believe that our work is to carry out his plans, to "seek and save that which is lost," I confidently lay its needs.

Communications may be addressed to Mr. E. A. Walker, Supt. of Telegraphs, Colombo, or to myself.

The Philippine Islands.

GREAT interest now centres in the fate of the Philippine Islands. They are numerous, rich in all natural products, and inhabited by eight or ten millions of people. These are mostly converts to Roman Catholicism, but under Spanish neglect and misgovernment are as poor and superstitious as they were before Romanism reached them, and more discontented, almost as ignorant and immoral, and longing to be free. Their persons, cattle, fruit trees, shops, weights and measures, and games are heavily taxed. "The officials fatten—the people starve." "The roads are few and bad." "There is no justice"; and in most districts "the whole administration is rotten from skin to core."

The great power in every village is the friar. The most appalling feature of their domination is the use which they undoubtedly make of their position to effect the ruin of the simple and superstitious native women and girls, who blindly follow their bidding. Spanish misrule and superstition are responsible for all this; and now retribution comes, as it always does to nations who are cruel, oppressive, and unjust.

Work in the U.S. Army.

MR. D. L. MOODY, chairman of the evangelistic department of the Army and Navy Christian Commission in America, though he was unable to go south himself owing to the near approach of the summer conferences at Northfield, has nevertheless been hard at work collecting money and choosing the men most fitted for reaching the soldiers and sailors. He believes this war is a God-given opportunity for preaching the Gospel to thousands of the young life of America, and one that ought not to be allowed to slip. Consequently, no sooner were the camps formed at Tampa, Mobile, and elsewhere than such men as Major Whittle, General Howard, Ira D. Sankey, J. H. Burke, and others less known in this country, were on the field uplifting the banner of the Cross. Most remarkable is the success that has been theirs in the conversion of souls, proving that the Holy Spirit is at work in the ranks.

Perhaps a few extracts from letters received by Mr. Moody will do more than anything else to give an idea of what is being done. Major Whittle writes: May 17.—"The fields are white for harvest. It is a moment of opportunity. May God help us to wisely and zealously improve it." May 18.—"Over 200 men asked for prayer in the meetings last night." May 23.—"We had a grand day yesterday with the soldiers. About twelve services in all were held, and many were blessed. About 8000 soldiers heard the Gospel." May 30.—"I preached four times yesterday, and was much blessed. One hundred or more asked for prayer." June 10.—"We are having grand meetings, with conversions every night. The men are very tender and responsive. Last night numbers professed to accept Christ at both meetings." June 16.—"I called on a dying lieutenant this morning, who says he was led to God at the first meeting held by me in the camp. I did not know about it at the time, but my heart was full of gratitude to God as this dying man's face lit up in recognition of me, and his hot hand pressed mine while he drank in John vi. 37; Matt. xi. 27-29; and Isa. xli. 10, and told me that he did in his heart trust in Christ. We sang to him, 'My faith looks up to Thee,' and commended him to God in prayer...He has a wife and five children. He was a travelling man, and an ungodly one up to the night of May 27. The doctor said there was no hope, and he would die to-day. If God has been pleased to use my coming here to save that one soul, I will praise Him through eternity."

A new Army hymn-book has been compiled by Mr. Sankey, and adopted by the chaplains. Already over 30,000 copies have been given away, and the call is constantly coming for more. The book is most popular with the soldiers; and one man, who has become a Christian, on being asked how he was converted, replied, "It was the singing of those hymns. The boys got hold of some hymn-books, and they kept singing these songs till they sung me to Christ." Bibles, Testaments and volumes from Mr. Moody's colportage library have been circulated by the thousand. "They are eagerly sought after, thoughtfully read, and carefully preserved." One of the happiest ideas of this movement was that of placing in every regiment, as fast as funds permit, a large tent, furnished with comfortable chairs and tables, where the men can go to write letters—stationery being supplied free—read the many religious periodicals with which it is provided, and play such games as checkers, etc. Arrangements are being made for the sale of temperance drinks to counteract the evil tendency of the canteens with which the camps abound. Each tent is in charge of a Y.M.C.A. worker, and many an opportunity he has of speaking a helpful or warning word. The men are delighted at the interest taken in them, and their appreciation of these tents is shown by the fact that from morning till night they "are always taxed to their utmost capacity." The prayers of God's people are asked for our brother and those associated with him in this important work.

Major Whittle writes to us: "We now (June 24) have nineteen field tents among the 50,000 men concentrated at Chickamanga, Ga., used by the men as reading and writing-places during the day and for meetings in the evening. In many regiments revivals have broken out, and scores of men are being converted to God. I have never seen a more genuine work of God's Spirit than here among our soldiers."

Spanish Evangelisation Society.

THE new report of this Society states: "During the year 1897 our agents have been carrying on their work in the face of a good deal of opposition, specially directed against the Evangelical schools. The Romanists appear to be fully alive to the importance of the work among the young, and do all they can to thwart it. Sr. Jiménez, of Huelva, mentions the Freethinkers and Carlists as being the chief opponents of his work. These, he says, 'are modern equivalents of the Sadducees and Pharisees of old time.' The Carlists are of all Romanists the most intolerant, and would fain bring back absolutism and the Inquisition. Through the kind help of friends we have been able to recommence the mission in Granada, and Sr. Barroso has been working there since April of last year, besides regularly visiting our stations in the Vega. Sr. Blanco, of Cadiz, has been sent to work in Cordova for the Irish Presbyterian Mission, the Irish mission giving us the services of Sr. Carreño in our Seville station.

"Besides his work in Cordova, Sr. Blanco takes charge of our minor missions in the province of Cordova. We have been able to meet all expenses for 1897, and, in addition, to reduce by about £90 our overdraft on the bank. There still remains a debt of £249, which we are very anxious still further to reduce during the current year, so as to set our hands free for more aggressive evangelistic work when the present troubles in Spain are over."

The secretary and treasurer is Miss R. G. Peddie, 14, Viewforth-terrace, Edinburgh.

Evangelical Soldiers of Italy.

NEARLY opposite the Church of the Agostino in Rome, within four plain walls adorned with texts, Sr. Cav. Capellini ministers the Gospel to a room full of soldiers. Difficulties are not wanting, but Prince Umberto ordered that, while safeguards are to be taken against political plots under the garb of religion, no soldier is to be hindered from worshipping God according to conscience.

Regiments are quartered at Rome, and then exchanged for others in the provinces, and thus the Word of God is continually brought into contact with new drafts of men through the Chiesa Militare. This evangelisation of the army means influencing all classes, from relatives of the Pope to the peasant; and in all parts of Italy, in Calabria, Sicily, the Basilicato, and Sardinia centres of evangelisation have arisen by means of converted soldiers.

The Military Mission has had of late years to pay rent for the use of the neighbouring Wesleyan church, as also for the small Martin Luther Club. A special effort is being made to collect a fund to provide necessary premises; and the hon. sec., Miss Anna M. Stoddart, 35, Antrim-mansions, Englands-lane, London, N.W., will gladly give further information.

The Missionary Bureau.

WRITING from Para, Brazil, on June 1, Dr. James A. Graham, who recently went with his young wife to Brazil, in connection with the Missionary Bureau, says: "We arrived here on May 12, and spent two weeks getting our baggage through the custom house and making arrangements for our ascent of the Tocantins River, a 1200 miles journey in canoes. We were a little damped to find out that Chief Sepe had sent his cousin down the river for us, and that the latter had been bought up by the Roman Catholics, who had sent him with a band of friars up the river Araguay for a journey lasting a year. They seemed to be aware of our project. We set to work to find how we could get up the river, and found that a Portuguese trader would take us for four contos—£100. We cannot pay this, so our present plans are to go up as far as we can pitch our tent, and evangelise in the immediate neighbourhood, and to take the first opportunity of finishing the seventy days' journey to Ipeabanna, the central village of the Cherente Indians."

Those who have taken a practical interest in the good work done in the past by the Missionary Bureau and by the Missionary Pence Association will be glad to learn that the two organisations have now been amalgamated with the title "Missionary Pence Association and Information Bureau." The new society will continue to maintain the work of collecting funds for missions, providing information, and furthering the labours of volunteer workers whom the large societies are not able to send out. The treasurer is Mr. John Jackson, and the secretary Mr. W. Roger Jones, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

"He Gave Himself."

THE STORY OF A HERO.

IN a corner of France, some few years ago, lived a very poor but hard-working woman who had lost her husband in battle, and who was left with five children to maintain by her own unaided efforts.

"Alas!" condoled her neighbours, "we pity you; but so many of us are in similar positions that we cannot afford to help you."

"'My help cometh from God,'" replied the widow. "I know He cannot fail me; and you remember his promise?"

"No," was the reply, "we have forgotten. But it is well to be you, to have such trust. Take care you are not disappointed."

The widow turned away, she saw they did not understand. "They don't know, Lord," she said, under her breath—"they have not tried Thee. Wilt Thou reveal Thyself to them, gracious God?"

The widow's eldest son, Jean, was now growing up, and when an illness rendered his mother incapable of working he took the burden of the family upon his brave young shoulders and became the breadwinner. The neighbours looked on in amaze.

"I thought," said one, "that when the widow Berthelot was laid aside we should see a crumbling of her trust. But no; yesterday, when I went in to see her, she reminded me of a promise from her heavenly Father, as she said. But I laughed at her."

"What is this wonderful promise?" asked another.

"'Leave thy fatherless children, I will preserve them alive; and let thy widows trust in Me.' I think those were the words."

"They are good words indeed," said the other. "We shall see if they are true."

Meanwhile, the widow and her children were very happy. Jean was like a little father in the home—all there loved him, and all knew how ill he could be spared by any one of them; for his generous, loving heart and willing hands made each think—"Surely, life in our humble home would be a hard thing if our beloved Jean were withdrawn from it!" And his mother, so proud of him, watched him lovingly.

Then a terrible truth burst upon all in that little home. Jean was getting to an age when he would be called upon to serve his king and country as a soldier; and then, alas! the widow lay awake at night, brooding over the terrible possibility of her beloved son, the family mainstay, being drawn for the conscription!

"My Father," she would cry, "Thou knowest all—our poverty if he were gone, our helplessness! Thou hast given us, through him, the comforts of food, home, clothes—Lord, let not this thing be, that he draw the fearful fatal number! Spare him to us!"

A perfect faith would ask only that God's will be done—but God teaches us often that perfect faith through suffering. "Three years' separation!" was the widow's one thought. "Ah, but he may not draw a soldier's number! God grant it!"

At last the dreaded day for the drawing of the lottery came, and the widow Berthelot felt that her heart was breaking. She prostrated herself before God in agonised prayer, and besought Him as a "Father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows," to withhold this cup of bitter agony, and to let her boy remain at home. The neighbours heard her pleading. They said among themselves: "Ah, now we shall see! 'Tis hard to be the widow Berthelot."

Evening came, and Jean returned. He sat in a corner of his humble little home, and the neighbours flocked to hear the news.

"Mother," cried the poor boy, "be brave, dear heart. In three years I shall be with you again—but, I have drawn a soldier's number."

The poor mother threw up her hands and fell prone to the earth. The children ran hither and thither screaming, thinking she was dead, or that something terrible had happened.

Jean raised his mother's head, and bathed her temples and hands. "Mother, mother," he cried, kissing her, "it is I, your son Jean; I am still here, mother; but look at me, and all will be well." But the pale, worn features showed no sign of life.

The neighbours crowded round the door and into the room—and over the hum of their voices one heard the crying of the children.

"It is as we thought," said one woman—"God does not hear, and He does not care. I'm glad I never asked Him for anything."

"You might be a better woman if you had," ventured an old man.

Presently a strange youth pressed through the little crowd, and saw the fainting woman—his curiosity was aroused.

"Why is this?" he asked. "I am from a strange town and have not heard the news. I had a mother once, but she died, and looked as this poor mother looks. But she has a noble son."

They told him the sad little story.

"She did not think God would let him draw a soldier's number," one said; "but he has, and she is like that."

Pity stirred in the heart of the strange youth; he was alone in the world, but this other lad had a mother, and it was killing her to lose him. Unhappy thought! she would be left alone in her weakness. He would go, and spare her. He marvelled at these thoughts in his breast—he had never felt them before, and they seemed to be outside of himself. He grew ashamed of the weakness he felt, and left the place very quietly. But he could not proceed; he had to turn back, and, half ashamed, with a foolish air, he slipped back silently into the little room.

"Look here," said he, trembling and pale with agitation, and gazing at the drawn, agonised face of the slowly recovering mother, "tell her that her son need not go. He is still hers to support her in her weakness. Tell her I will be a substitute. I will go for her son." Tears stood in his eyes as he spoke, and when he had finished he moved nervously away.

They made the poor mother hear at last, and then she sprang to her feet and clasped her hands, saying:

"My Father, Thou hast redeemed thy promise! 'While they are yet speaking, I will hear,' Thou saidst, and it is so. I thank Thee, Father, for this great mercy."

The neighbours began to move away slowly.

"After all, there seems to be something in it," said one. "Widow Berthelot is not to be pitied—she knows a God who hears."

Wonder, confusion, amazement, joy filled many hearts in the little village—this, they said, was a miracle.

"A stranger; and you will go for my son, whom you never knew!" cried the widow, taking the hand of her earthly saviour.

"Yes, I will go," said he; "it is God, whom I have slighted, who is sending me—He has answered your prayers in me."

And so all was well. Again there was peace in the peasant home, and Jean remained as its head, beloved and loving—ransomed for those he loved, by a stranger!

And his substitute went to serve in his stead, and possibly gave his life in fighting for his country, for those whom he delivered never heard of the brave youth again.

It is a beautiful story—one would not wish to belittle it by comparing it with any other story; but there is a grander, greater, more beautiful sacrifice even than this. Will you think of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, who, as St. Paul reminds us in Gal. ii. 20, "loved me and gave Himself for me"? He, the Son of God, the Eternal King, came to earth to ransom such rebellious, disobedient strangers as you and me! Was ever love like unto his love?

Wouldst shape a noble life? Then cast
No backward glances towards the past;
And though somewhat be lost and gone,
Yet do thou act as one new-born.
What each day needs, that shalt thou ask;
Each day will set its proper task;
Beware no fellow one thou hate:
In God's care leave thy faith and fate.

The Foundations of Prayer.*

By Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE.

WITHOUT controversy, great is the mystery of prayer: its meaning, its manner, its measure; its place, its power, its purposes. Whatsoever attribute we think of in connection with prayer, the deeper will be our marvelling, our sense of wonder and of awe, as we attempt to apprehend all that it involves. I, for one, am humbly prepared to confess that there are a large number of questions connected with our subject which, as it seems to me, can never be accurately answered by man; and for this we may be glad and not grieved. Were it not so we should be placed on a level with Deity.

No subject is more inscrutable, though the simplest in itself, than true prayer; therefore for any creature to say that he had met all the difficulties connected with it would be to arrogate to himself the very attributes of Deity. It is perfectly certain, however, that the more spiritually minded a man is the more competent is he to deal with this matter; and while there are philosophical and metaphysical difficulties connected with our subject, there is for almost every one of them, and it is not God's will that any man should remain in darkness or ignorance on such points. As we rise from spiritual infancy to manhood in Christ there must be certain questions in this connection for which we feel bound to seek an answer; but, at the same time, to the very close of our life upon earth I believe we shall do wisely to turn to a spiritual consideration of this subject rather than to an argumentative or metaphysical one.

As we approach the subject step by step the first thing to meet us is the unquestionable fact, which must be admitted by the most blatant rejector of God's revelation, that prayer would seem to be an instinct almost universal in man. It matters not how degraded, how utterly uneducated or barbaric his condition, man must pray. There is, on the part of the creature, an enforced confession of his own weakness, and that he desires to obtain something from a being or power, whether idolatrous or really superior to himself. This, in its essential simplicity, is perhaps the plainest definition of prayer, whether it comes from fear or from desire—namely, weakness leaning upon strength.

It is a remarkable fact that while Christians, taking the Church of God at large in the broadest and most world-wide sense, confess that they ought to be creatures of prayer, they are very largely put to shame by those who are infinitely below them in privilege and opportunity. Even the Mohammedan's fatalist creed never hinders him from prayer, and he is, for the most part, to the believer in Christ. Many may feel cause of shame, as they read 1 Kings xviii., to see the way in which the priests of Baal called upon their god, though he was but an idol, from early morning till the time of the evening sacrifice, cutting and wounding themselves that they might draw an answer from the god they approached.

When we turn from the field of barbaric ignorance to that of inspiration, no man can deny that in this blessed Book, however little apprehended, there is one great subject that seems to pervade every page, after man's fall, and that is the privilege, power, and duty of prayer. It has been said that prayer is mentioned 131 times in the Old Testament and 140 times in the New; and I think that, incidentally if not directly, it finds far more frequent expression. But if in this Book prayer is set before us 270 times as a power which the creature is called to use as a means of drawing nigh to God, it cannot be ignored by any reader.

In proportion as God's revelation of Himself became larger the demand for prayer was greater and its potentiality seemed to be increased. With Abraham it was a matter of promise. Under Moses it was a glorious fact for fifteen hundred years that men might draw nigh to God and obtain much from Him; but this was not so much the power of prayer as obedience connected with law. But with the Gospel prayer is the central power of the whole dispensation; no man may call himself a believer unless he exercises this most magnificent power before God. In Psa. cix. 4 there are no such words in the original as "I give myself unto," but it is unquestionably the Lord Jesus who speaks by prophetic utterance; and in the sense of desolation which comes to Him as He turns to man He is able at once to recognise that his true position, power, and very person are summed up in the one word prayer. Christ's example teaches us that prayer is the very life-breath of all God's children.

Further, prayer is a natural law—I hardly like the expression, it has been so perverted—in the spiritual world. Turning for a moment to the philosophical side of the subject, we are met by the assertion that prayer is an impossibility in a universe where there are fixed and definite laws. We are taught that the laws which govern the universe being entirely unalterable, we cannot expect that God, however great and glorious He may be, can change anything that is taking place either in this world or in the unseen one simply because a worm of the earth draws nigh to Him and pleads for a blessing. We may, as believers in inspired truth, answer that by saying that the Lord and his apostles told us, "Whatsoever ye shall ask believing, ye shall receive"; but that, for the moment, is not to the point. We have to inquire, Is it unphilosophical or improper, as a matter of argument, to look for the answer to our prayer?

Men will say that foreknowledge is an evident attribute of God, and where it exists it must be absolute. Therefore, as the powers of God are infinite, He must have settled long ago what should take place. It is impossible, they say, that your feeble breathings should affect laws absolutely unchangeable. To that we make answer, first, that

FOREKNOWLEDGE IS NOT FORE-ORDINATION.

The former may be an attribute of ourselves to a certain extent. We know, almost to absolute certainty, that the sun shall rise to-morrow, that heat will melt certain substances; but our knowledge does not affect the actual event. Again, we are told that God's absolute foreknowledge running parallel with his omnipotence there cannot be any change in regard to the future. Now we know the absolute nature of certain laws by experience, such as those of gravitation, heat, and cold; but does it not remain for us to discover whether our knowledge exhausts all the law by which this world of ours is governed?

It is a law of nature that fire should burn; but we see three men walking with a fourth in the fire, and not a hair of their heads is singed. A higher law than that of nature has been introduced; and when the Son of God comes into that fire what we have hitherto observed as natural law passes evidently out of sight. We have yet to learn what are the laws by which God not only calls creatures into existence but continues it.

Turning from the natural to the spiritual, it follows that in that infinite state may be two beings who can assimilate thought and approach each other in some way which we do not understand. That being so, is it not equally true concerning our world that a spiritual Being from without may approach the spirit of man, and, by some mysterious power, communicate to him and with him, according to God's will? If that be true, then there is a law in the spiritual world that touches upon the material, though you and I cannot see its working; and the law in the spiritual world may be and must be infinitely higher than the common law which is seen in the working of the material universe.

At once we have an answer to all difficulties about prayer. Who shall say whether God has not laid it down as a principle in the workings of his unchangeable law that one of the elements—perhaps the chief—which should operate to bring about spiritual results is that man should approach Him in the attitude of prayer? Our knowledge of natural law being founded upon observation, who has the right to deny that, in the spiritual domain, man has found out the secret by which all his being is governed, and that is prayer; so that when a man prays he is not transgressing, but is carrying out, the law by which God is pleased to operate in the unseen world; and that the Holy Ghost, being the very in putting into our thoughts the true desire, conveying to our souls the words that should give utterance to those desires, or permitting us to pray with groanings which cannot be uttered, is putting us into the very sphere in which the law of God should work, and we are becoming subject to law the moment we pray.

Turning from the metaphysical and philosophical view altogether, let us approach the subject as those who take God's inspired revelation for our guide. Bible students must be acquainted with many passages, such as Exodus xxxii. 10; Deut. ix. 14; Jer. vii. 19, which affirm that God seems to have been, on certain occasions, compelled, as it were, to ask his creature to forbear to use the power of prayer lest He should not be able to carry out his apparent purpose.

Again, in John xiv. 12 our Lord opens out to the believer an extraordinary field of power and opportunity; and to whatever you attribute those words you are compelled to allow that Jesus affirms concerning the believer that when He, Christ, was returned to the Father, the believer should do something even greater than the Son had done. While the Lord Jesus was here upon earth He PLEADED FOR THE WORLD AT LARGE.

Upon the cross He cried to God for his enemies, and seems to have lived in pleading intercession for the whole human race; but the moment He expired we are taught by fact, if not by declaration, that He ceased to have to do with his enemies. He describes Himself as going to the Father to prepare mansions for his people, to be their Intercessor. He left the Holy Ghost to come and deal with the world through words and thoughts put into the hearts of God's people. To the saints are given the privileges which Christ exercised when He was mortal man upon earth; and so our intercession is to prevail before God for the great mass of the outside world. It is a wondrous thought that the world is almost at our disposal in prayer. It is an awful honour; let us seek to use it aright.

Upon what basis should we rest our expectation of an answer to prayer? I may say to encourage those who shrink from prayer because they lack refined language and proper form, that it is possible God, in his infinite mercy, does let a great spiritual law operate in some mysterious way even with the heathen, so that their poor, ignorant cries bring an answer from the fountain of love in heaven. But what shall we say of those who simply pour out a stream of mere words without force, meaning, or earnestness, from the Buddhist with his praying wheel to the Ritualist who pays a choir to drawl out words called prayer, in which no single person in the church can join? Or, from the one extreme, to the poor, ignorant, wretched bond-slave of the Romish priest, one who numbers his Paternosters and his Ave Marias, caring nothing for their meaning?

The real spiritual foundation of prayer is, first, a belief that God is, and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him (Heb. xi. 6). In the progressive revelation of God to man there came a time when man was to draw nigh to God as to a Father. When, in the Old Testament, that term is applied to God, it is always in connection with Israel as a nation and not with any individual. It was only when the Lord Jesus was revealed as the Son of man to make us sons of God that this glorious truth began to be put forward, to be completely revealed as soon as the Holy Ghost was given. This point may be studied fully from John's Gospel, and I only stay to refer you to the early words in chap. i. 12, coupled with the later ones of xx. 17.

We come to know God as our Father in the deepest sense, through which took Him to the Cross and brought Him through the grave into resurrection life. The Holy Ghost has come; and He it is who, by his all-quickening power, gives us the life of the sons of God. In that life we draw nigh to God; the Holy Ghost working within us indites our prayers, and they become fit for God's acceptance in the power of the Lord Jesus' precious blood. Thus the foundation of true prayer to a Christian soul is this—the Holy Ghost indites, man utters, the Son presents, and the Father accepts it.

Ah! brother, we have a power that angels may envy. Said John Eliot: "Prayer and pains, with faith in Christ, will do anything." While we plead with God to get what is well for ourselves, let us think of the poor world, and remember the words of a young poet no longer with us:

> They little think, the high and great
> Who lead the country, sway the State,
> How much of safety and success
> To soft words breathed in gentleness
> By simple lips, is due,
> And to the pleadings of the faithful soul;
> For God in heaven will save the whole,
> For the sake of the faithful few.
> And the spell of poor men's quiet prayers,
> Is brooding o'er us unawares.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, July 17.

"The communion of the Holy Ghost."—2 Cor. xiii. 14.

HOW often these words are uttered without any real appreciation of their depth of meaning! The word communion signifies having in common. It is used of our fellowship with one another (1 Cor. x. 16) and with God (1 John i. 3). The bond of such fellowship is always through the Holy Spirit.

How wonderful it is to have the privilege of this Divine fellowship! That we need never be alone again, that we can at any moment turn to Him for advice and direction, that we may draw on his resources for the supply of every need, that it is impossible to exhaust or even tax his willingness to counsel and succour, that there is no kind of service or suffering into which He is not prepared to enter with us! Surely, if we would but give ourselves time to realise this marvellous fact, there would be no room for the despondency which at times threatens to deprive us of heart and hope.

Of course, we must be very careful of the tender sensibilities and holy disposition of our Divine confederate. We cannot ruthlessly grieve Him by our harshness or impurity at one moment, and turn to Him for his succour and direction at the next. Such Divine union as lies within our reach certainly demands on our part watchfulness, a tender conscience, a yielded and pliant will, a heart which has no other love, no affection nor idol inconsistent with the Spirit's fellowship.

MONDAY, July 18.

"It was the good pleasure of God...to reveal his Son in me."—Gal. i. 15, 16 (R.V.).

If you have truly believed in the Son of God, it is certain that He, by the Spirit, has taken up his abode in your heart. But perhaps He is hidden in the deeps of your nature, as the young Josiah in the heart of the Temple. He is, therefore, unable to exert that influence on your inner thought and outward life that He should. Is it not befitting that you should ask the Father to reveal his Son in you? He has been revealed to you as the Divine Substitute, but not in you as the source and spring of holiness.

Beneath the body with its physical existence, and the mind with the play of intellect, lies the spirit of man, like the most holy place in the Temple of old. That is the shrine in which the Shechinah of Christ's presence shines, and in which we can hold fellowship with Him face to face. Alas! that so heavy a veil of unbelief, of absorption in the world around us, of inattention, hangs between Him and us! Would that the strong hands which rent the veil in twain when our Saviour died would rend in twain all that deprives us of this inspiring and most helpful vision of the Son, so that we might anticipate the eternal years!

But such revelations are only given that we may better help others. Not for selfish enjoyment, but for ministering help. Hence the apostle says, "that I might preach Him among the Gentiles." Be pleased, oh Father, to give us that revelation, that we may speak as those who have seen the great sight, and need no further conference with flesh and blood!

TUESDAY, July 19.

"I have been crucified with Christ, yet I live."—Gal. ii. 20 (R.V.).

Clearly Paul intends us to understand that the life of which he was the centre had been nailed to the Saviour's cross, and that Christ's life had been substituted for it. Some have spoken of this real life of Christ in the soul as being mystical and untrue, but there can be no kind of doubt that it is the constant affirmation of Christ and his apostles. They speak little of motives and influences, and much of a man being indwelt by God in Christ.

Death the gate of life. It is obviously so in nature. Once each year nature lies down in its grave, sleeps in unbroken repose, and steps forth again with the glory of a freshly renewed beauty. Often the overclouding of one faculty has been the signal of the quickening of all the rest. The blind Milton becomes the author of the "Paradise Lost." Death of a twin-soul will often give to the survivor a new impulse toward a spiritual and transfigured affection. We cannot be possessed by the self-life and the Christ-life at the same moment. The I and the not-I are as mutually contradictory as Jehovah and Baal. One must die. And wherever, by God's grace, we erect the cross and assign our own life to its nails the Spirit of Christ will breathe life and power.

In the flesh, but not after the flesh. We live our life in the flesh, as aforetime, doing the duties of our ordinary existence with careful precision, but we are no longer controlled by the selfish principle which too long dominated us. The attraction of earth is overborne by the mighty pull of the eternal and unseen. The rush of the whirlpool is unable to prevail over the throb of the steam-propeller within.

Not I, yet loved and ransomed by the Son of God. Each of us is distinct to his loving eye. He does not bulk us all together as a mass, but singles each out for the gift of Himself, his prayers, his blood, his ceaseless thought.

Thou art as much his care, as if beside
Nor man, nor angel, lived in heaven or earth.

WEDNESDAY, July 20.

"That we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith.—Gal. iii. 14.

"The promise of the Spirit" is the invariable term for the special Pentecostal gift, and this is to be equally received by faith as the forgiveness of sins and eternal life. To me this text once came as a perfect revelation. It was the clue to unravel perplexity, the point around which truth held long in solution suddenly crystallised. Before this verse spoke to my heart it had been my constant endeavour to feel the Spirit's presence as the sign of my having received; but now it became clear that one might receive by simple faith God's very richest communications, even though the emotion tarried long. Mind how you lay the emphasis. It should be thus: that we might receive the promise of the Spirit by faith.

The several stages of reception have been stated thus, and we adopt the series with very slight modification, in the hope that many who may read this page shall adopt it as their own.

There is such a blessing.—Yes, and there can be no doubt of this, for it pleased the Father that the fulness of the Holy Spirit should dwell in Jesus for Him to communicate to each member of his Church.

It is for me.—At Pentecost Peter said, This promise is for as many as the Lord our God shall call.

I have not received.—It is very important to realise what your standing is. Paul's first inquiry of the Ephesians was to ascertain whether they had or had not.

I would give anything if it might be mine.—Because of the life, and love, and power it would bring into your life; and the immense increase of power over others—there is no sacrifice you should be unwilling to make.

I do now in humble faith receive.—There may be no coronet of flame, nor rush of wind, nor flash of joy, but if we have put ourselves in the right attitude towards God, and opened our hearts to receive—He who taught us to hunger and thirst must have bestowed.

THURSDAY, July 21.

"Until Christ be formed in you."—Gal. iv. 19.

Christ is in us, if we truly believe in Him, as the sap in the vine, the air in the lung, the steam in the engine; but He may not be formed in us.

Is it not possible that the indefinable sensation of joy and pain, of yearning and unfulfilled desire, are all attributable to this deep-seated process? Christ is being formed within our hearts, dispossessing the old evil self-life, and taking its place.

O Jesus Christ, grow Thou in me,
And all things else recede;
My heart be daily nearer Thee,
From sin be daily freed.
Make this poor self grow less and less,
Be Thou my life and aim;
Oh, make me daily through thy grace
More meet to bear thy name.

The mention of travail in this connection suggests that this in-forming of Christ does not take place apart from suffering. And probably it is at times when we are in a furnace of pain that the Christ in us grows most quickly. "When my pain became unbearable," says one, "I became conscious that there is a part of our being which no physical pain and no mental anguish can disturb. And there came to me such a sense of God—so enfolding, so assuring, so satisfying—that I could as well doubt the shining of the sun." The Comforter had come—Christ was being formed within. The marble was chipping away that the image might grow and become permanent.

FRIDAY, July 22.

"Ye may not do the things that ye would."—Gal. v. 17 (R.V.).

This is a notable rendering of the R.V., which throws a flood of light in the entire passage. A.V. has it, "Ye cannot do"; it is truer and better to say, "Ye may not do." It is always possible to go back and to fall under the tyrannous power of the evil self principle the flesh, either in its more debased or refined form; but as long as we are led by the Spirit, live in the Spirit, and walk in the Spirit, He energises against the flesh, keeping it in the place of death, and allowing the life of Christ to work freely through our nature.

In Christian ethics there must be, first, the definite acceptance of the Cross. Directly we become Christ's, we are called on to surrender ourselves to his death. Secondly, there must be the perpetual yielding to the indwelling grace and power of the Holy Spirit. He will deal with the self-life in the very roots of your nature. When the antiseptic influence of carbolic acid is in the atmosphere it acts against the microbes of disease, so that they cannot do as otherwise they would in infecting healthy bodies with disease.

When the baleful effect of the self-life is arrested, the fruits of the Spirit appear naturally and easily. Note the distinction between work, in which there is effort, and fruit, which swells so imperceptibly and silently on the branch—pressed out from within. Each of these fruits is a variation of the first, which is love. Joy is love on wings; peace, with the wings folded; long-suffering, love in the sick-room; goodness, in business; meekness, in society; self-control, in the regimen of habit for the sake of others.

SATURDAY, July 23.

"Let no man trouble me, for I bear branded on my body the marks of Jesus."—Gal. vi. 17 (R.V.).

As a slave was branded with the initials of his owner, so was Paul. It was his pride to count himself the slave of Jesus, and to regard the scars which had eaten into his flesh as the brand-marks of his Master. Why should men try to deflect him from his course, when he was so absolutely implicated in the service of the one great Master, Christ?

The Service of Jesus.—It is founded in his blood, by which He purchased us to be his own, but it must be accepted by the glad consent of the will. We must awake each morning as his property, take his commands for the day, and lie down at night only satisfied when He has said, "Well done."

The Brand of Jesus.—The dislike which our religion engenders; the losses to which principle compels; the averted look, the distant manner on the part of those who could not make enough of us when we lived the life of the world—these are as much his brand, the brand of his Cross, as the weals of recent scourgings on the apostle's flesh.

The Peace of Jesus.—"Let no man trouble me." My heart has cast her anchor, my soul her foundation, my life her aim. If He is satisfied I am content, though the world is in arms. If He is with me I have good company, though all forsake. The Master said, "Trouble her not."

Lord, as thy temple's portals close
Behind the outward-parting throng,
So shut my spirit in repose,
So bind it here, thy flock among;
The fickle wanderer else will stray
Back to the world's wide-parted way.

W. E. Gladstone.

The Church at Play.

By Rev. J. ANDERSON WRIGHT, Dewsbury.

IN one of his thoughtful and thought-compelling sermons Rev. F. W. Robertson thus describes the root-difference between the Jewish and Christian religions: "The spirit of Judaism is separation; that of Christianity is permeation. To separate the evil from the good was the aim and work of Judaism—to sever one nation from all other nations, certain meats from other meat, certain days from other days. Sanctify means to set apart. The very essence of the idea of Hebrew holiness lay in sanctification in the sense of separation. On the contrary, Christianity is permeation—it permeates all evil with good, it aims at overcoming evil by good, it desires to transfuse the spirit of the day of rest into all other days, and to spread the holiness of one nation over all the world. To saturate life with God, and the world with heaven—that is the genius of Christianity."

All this we frankly allow. The light is invading and scattering the darkness. The permeation of evil with good is indubitably in process, and we thank God for it. To see a Bright in the House of Commons, a Faraday in the laboratory, a Shaftesbury in the sphere of social reform, a Samuel Morley in business must have given a fillip to the faltering believer of an earlier generation. And in our day it is a wonderful tonic to faith to note how many honoured names in politics, science, educational and municipal life, in connection with schemes of social advance and betterment, and in commerce, are those of men who are avowed, devout followers of Jesus Christ and warmly attached to one or other of the Christian churches.

But while all this is so, is it not also painfully evident that the contrary process is at work, that our good is being permeated with evil, that on some of our sweetest and most sacred things the blight of worldliness is fastening? To carry religion into the world is one thing, to bring the world into religion is another. Christians must go into the world; but let not the world come into them. The Christ-spirit must pervade every department of human life and activity; the world-spirit must not enter, much less pervade, any department of Christian thought and action. The Church of Christ must lay a gentle yet strong hand on the world; but she must shake off the proffered hand of alliance and friendship held out to her by a world that is now as ever alien to God and contemptuous of his truth. This, it may be said, is

THE IDEAL POSITION FOR THE CHURCH.

True, but are the churches of to-day perceptibly advancing towards that goal? If thorough-going spirituality be the inexorable requirement of the Divine head of the Church, then we may well be alarmed when we look at what passes for Christianity and for Christian churches in these times. There is the open, unblushing support of amateur theatricals, tableaux vivants, and balls; there are churches in which bazaars, social evenings, at homes, and entertainments flourish amazingly, while prayer-meetings, preaching services, and other meetings of a distinctly spiritual order languish, and are only kept from utter extinction in many cases by the attendance of a few devout aged people. It is not easy to try to resist the inrush of the pleasure-loving into our churches, of men and women, youths and maidens who evidently have no serious aim, but are simply bent on emotional and social enjoyment. In many cases the difficulty is accentuated by the tradition of pleasure which has been handed on from past times—"We have had such things for fifteen years. Are we to give them up at your dictation?" Woe to the reformer!

It may be too heroic to set oneself to stamp out these hurtful institutions. Some of my brethren for whose opinion I have the deepest respect may be prepared to argue in favour of their retention as an integral part of church life, under certain restrictions and safeguards. Recreation of some sort is a necessity to me, and there are gatherings and pleasures that are not only perfectly innocent, but really helpful, imparting a richness and fulness and breadth to one's life. But there are enervating and unspiritual things that must be reduced to a minimum and carefully watched, or the tares will choke the wheat; every precious thing will perish. For three reasons this must be done.

First, because the Church's mission and constitution require it. No provision is made for these secularities in the charter and programme of the Church as it comes from the unstained hand of her Head and Lord. "Preach the Gospel to every creature, and teach them to observe whatsoever things I have commanded you." There is our work. That is our excuse for seeming narrowness and ungenerousness. The Church is founded and commissioned to save men, not to amuse them.

Secondly, these methods cannot be worked with success by the churches. We cannot compete with the theatre and the ball-room if we try. Richter says no tongue is eloquent save in its own language, and certainly the Church of Christ is far from eloquent in the tongue of the devil. Sooner or later the miserable half-way compliances, the hesitating, trimming pleasures of the outside world which the churches offer, pleasures tinctured mildly with a hymn and bearing the faint odour of a prayer, will be seen through and discarded in contempt. Those who will have pleasure will go, in the end, to where they can have it in the undiluted form. And the Churches will have helped them there!

And a third reason is, that all this kind of thing is propagating a false and most mischievous view of the Church's functions and work. It can hardly be questioned that multitudes of people to-day are coming to regard the Churches, not as Divinely created and Divinely authorised institutions for saving men and women from sin and despair, and instructing those they have thus rescued in the highest truths, and training them for the noblest kinds of service; but rather as purveyors of a somewhat higher and than can be found outside. George Eliot says: "If you would understand some people's misery you must look at the standard of their happiness." And when the thoughtful pastor sees that many of the persons he meets in his church parlours and school-rooms have no higher idea of happiness than that afforded by curious songs or inane and clownish recitations, and fomented by cakes and coffee, he may well wonder what must be the barrenness and wretchedness of such lives when withdrawn from these excitements and intoxications.

May I, therefore, suggest with all modesty, one or two ways in which we may resist these encroachments? First, let us preach against them. Let us handle such texts as "Love not the world," "Come ye out from among them, and be ye separate," "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them," "If any man will be my disciple, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow Me," "Be not conformed to this world," "Lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God." Let us give these much-neglected texts thoroughly up-to-date illustrations and applications. There may be some loss of popularity, but we do not enter our pulpits to win popularity. Charges of narrowness will be hurled at us, but the hand of Christ will be laid on our heads in sweetest approval and blessing. And men and women in real heart trouble will find us out and thank God for our unfaltering, uncompromising message. The Church will immensely gain in the end by our faithfulness. The chaff will fly away, the wheat will remain. Anyhow we are prophets of God, and we must be true to our great designation and calling.

My second word would be: Let us ourselves be above suspicion in these things. Says Spurgeon: "Despite the popular idea that ours is a snug retreat from temptation, it is no less true that our dangers are more numerous and more insidious than those of ordinary Christians. Ours may be a 'vantage ground for height, but that height is perilous, and to many the ministry has proved a Tarpeian rock." And again, in the same lecture, he says: "It is with us and our hearers as it is with watches and the public clock—if our watch be wrong very few will be misled by it but ourselves; but if the Horse Guards or Greenwich Observatory should go amiss half London would lose its reckoning. So is it with the minister: he is the parish clock. Many take their time from him; and if he be incorrect, then they all go wrong more or less, and he is in a great measure accountable for all the sin which he occasions."

This earnest warning of one of the greatest doctors and noblest saints God ever gave to Christendom every minister of sense will lay to heart. In all the free social movements of his church, in all his intercourse with his people, and in all his relaxations and recreations he will endeavour to be without reproach.

A Question.

Where hast thou spent thy day?
Amidst the din and whirl of busy life?
Perchance in conflict with the false and bad,
Or in communion with the sick and sad,
Or 'mid rude scenes of harsh and wordy strife?
But—hast thou been with Me?

Where hast thou spent thy day?
Out in the verdant fields or mountain side,
With loving friends and happy faces near,
Or on the wave-washed cliff, devoid of fear,
Watching the flashing spray, the rising tide?
But—hast thou been with Me?

Where hast thou spent thy day?
Upon the silver sands, where the wide sea,
Unruffled by the balmy summer air,
Blends with the dim horizon, faint and far;
The sea-worn wreck a resting-place for thee?
But—hast thou been with Me?

Where hast thou spent thy day?
In the dark workshop, or the busy mart;
Or crowded court with careworn suitors filled;
Or in the silent ward where voices stilled
And gentle footfalls, speak the anxious heart?
But—hast thou been with Me?

Low at thy feet—my Lord—
Too oft by me in daily life forgot—
I seek thy pard'ning grace, thy Spirit's power
To bind me close to Thee each passing hour;
Nor hear at last The words—"I know thee not,
Thou hast not been with Me."

F. Gahan.

Dr. F. E. Yoakum's Healing by the Lord.

THE brother whose picture we give to-day is tall, steady of nerve, clear in complexion, the picture of robust health, in all senses a choice specimen of the human family. He is Dr. Finis E. Yoakum, and we present our readers with his testimony, as rendered last year at the annual convention of the Southern Californian Christian Alliance, to the work of God in saving him from what, without Divine interposition, would have been certain death. After reading Acts xxviii. 1-9, the Doctor said:—

I am forty-five years of age. I have been practising medicine for twenty-three years. My present place of residence is Los Angeles. I am in good health, strong, and able to do more work than in any former period of my life.

In 1894 I was practising medicine in Denver, Col. Riding on a Broadway car in that city, July 18, on my way to organise a Class-leaders' Association, I got off, at 8 P.M., at the crossing of Cedar-street. A drunken man was driving a horse furiously down the street at the time, and when I was fifteen feet away from the street-car the shaft of his buggy struck me two inches to the left of the spine, breaking the seventh and eighth ribs, and hurling me forward. The concussion was such that the horse was thrown backward on his haunches, and before it could recover itself a policeman, who was on duty at the crossing, had arrested the driver.

The blow I received sent me to the ground, breathless and speechless. Two carloads of people, one on either side of Cedar-street, saw the rundown, and the conductors and passengers of both cars came hastily to my assistance. When I saw them coming there flashed into my mind the Scripture: "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear Him." I had perfect peace and calmness in my soul.

I was lifted upon my feet by the two conductors, one of whom pressed his hand upon my breast over my heart, while the other sustained my back. By this means I was enabled to breathe, but not to speak. I was, as you may imagine, in great pain. They carried me into a store near, and physicians were sent for. In an hour the ambulance arrived. I had not then recovered speech. The doctors placed me carefully in the ambulance, two of them riding with me, their hands resting upon my breast. I was driven five miles to my home.

The Street Car Co.'s physician had hastily visited my home, and had informed my wife of the accident, and that the Doctor's corpse, most likely, was coming; that it had been telephoned to him that I was fatally injured.

When I arrived home I was still unable to speak, and could only breathe intermittently. The pain on breathing was indescribable. The doctors bandaged, plastered, and poulticed me. At the end of eight days they thought I was greatly improved, and permitted me to sit up. I was dressed, and went into the parlour. The exertion caused me to sneeze violently. This brought back the same sensations as I had experienced eight days before. I became breathless and speechless.

The doctors concluded I was dying. They thought that hæmorrhage had taken place in the pleural cavity—which contains the heart and lungs. Their opinion was that a first hæmorrhage had taken place when I was struck by the shaft of the buggy, and now a second hæmorrhage had set in. They decided that the only thing that could be done was to cut out a part of the seventh rib. This was done, seven or eight doctors being present, the chief surgeon operating. A large quantity of blood was let.

Two days afterwards the surgeon met the attending physician, and said he was watching the papers to see when Dr. Yoakum's funeral would take place! The physician replied: "That crazy Yoakum says he is not going to die; but we know he will." I was many times given up for dead; my friends expected my decease hourly. The wound the surgeon made kept open about four months, discharging a pus of offensive odour.

I was impressed to come to Southern California, against the wishes of my friends and relatives. Here the wound closed up externally, and my health continued to decline, fever never leaving me for eight months. My side grew larger and larger, filling with this pus.

Now to go back a little. The night before the surgeon performed the operation upon me I had a vision. I had the same vision twice before—once when I was converted, twenty-seven years previously, and the second time when I obeyed Rom. xii. 1, which was four years before the accident. In my vision I saw the Lord, walking in the cool of the trees. His words to me were: "Be of good cheer; I will renew you; you will not die. Do not fear; only trust Me, as you did when you were converted and sanctified." The words of the vision have never been erased from my memory. Amid the discouragement of thirty-two doctors pronouncing my case hopeless and death certain, I never lost courage, but believed I would be healed.

I could not sleep except under morphine, and every breath caused me great pain in my body. It was impossible for me to climb three steps without resting. It seemed the grave was opening before me, and my wife, nurse, and friends expected every day the end to come.

Dr. Finis E. Yoakum.

Two months before my physical healing the doctors said my left kidney was over large, and that death from blood-poisoning was imminent. The pain was so great that in my loneliness, with my wife sick in an adjoining room—in my utter helplessness and utter necessity—I cried to the Father to "Take me home"; that the pain was greater than I could bear. While lying there, waiting for Him to answer my prayer, a great warm hand was slipped under my left side and firmly pressed on my back; and from that moment I knew that my kidney-trouble was healed, and I have never been troubled since with any ailment of that kind.

Two months after this I heard of the Christian Alliance, and that they prayed in Jesus' name for the sick. Mr. Mullens, of our city, telegraphed to my brothers in Texas that if they wanted to see me alive they must come immediately, as prostration had set in. Next day I told my wife, if she and the nurse would dress me and put me on the car, while they prayed at home, I would go where they prayed in Jesus' name for the sick.

I went down to 107½, North Main-street, Los Angeles, and with the help of two brethren, resting three times, I was taken into the hall. Brother W. C. Stevens asked me my desire. I said I came to be healed in Jesus' name. After a few words of exhortation, they anointed me, laid their hands on me and prayed, claiming the fulfilment of the promise recorded in James v. 15, "The prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up." My pain was more than I could endure—every joint seemed to be pulling asunder, every bone breaking. I told them I must go home.

Two brethren helped me downstairs. I suffered greater pain than I had known since I was first stricken. At the foot of the stairway there is a flag-stone three inches above the pavement, and as the brethren let go of me I stepped upon the flag-stone with my right foot, with my left foot toward the street below. Somewhere between the flag-stone and the pavement—three inches below—the Lord made me a free man. He delivered me from the power of the devil; the prayer of faith did save the sick, the Lord did raise me up!

As I went from the curb-stone to the carriage, my whole thought was to go home and tell my precious wife; and as I went staggering into the house, light-hearted and free, my wife looked up and said, "Darling, how is it?" "Wife," said I, "I am well." I expected to hear her shout "Glory!" but instead I observed the most incredulous expression upon her sweet face; as good as to say, "Poor fool! those people told you to say you were healed, and now you believe it." I said, "Wife, get me some beef-steak and bread, quick"; for I was hungry, the first time for months. It was the first time I had asked for something to eat and really desired it. She speedily prepared it; and oh, how sweet—how sweet it was! I then said, "Wife, fix my bed, I am sleepy."

It was many months since I wanted to go to bed when I was up, or desired to get up when reclining. I slept from nine o'clock that night until eight next morning, and awoke feeling that I was indeed healed of the Lord—made "every whit whole." That was February 5, 1895. When I was stricken down I weighed 225lb.; when I was healed, I weighed 100lb. Three months after I was healed I weighed 190 lb., having gained just one pound a day! Now I weigh 228 lb.—three pounds more than I weighed when I was injured. I want to state that my heart had become displaced, and that the doctors pronounced my left lung entirely gone. The morning after my healing I felt my heart beat 52 to the minute, when previously it had been running from 120 to 160 per minute.

My nurse, Brother Lindsay, said to me: "What about that pus, Doctor? Will you not have a surgeon to take it out?" I had never thought of the pus poisoning my system; and I asked for the Holy Spirit to guide me. Quickly I looked up and said: "Brother Lindsay! I have taken Jesus as my Physician, and I now take Him as my Surgeon." Immediately there was a gurgling sound, and the pus came out through my bronchial tubes.

I have been examined repeatedly by physicians, and they have pronounced my left lung in as good condition as anyone's; I name especially Dr. W. Exline, of Denver, Col., who was with me for four months. He examined me ten months after I was healed, and publicly, at the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Los Angeles, pronounced me a well man; and said that nothing but the unseen Hand could have thus marvellously restored me.

The Fount of Life.

"With Thee is the fountain of life."—Psalms xxxvi. 9.

Fount of fire, eternal flame,
Now and evermore the same,
Light of life, we bless the name,
Shedding brightness o'er us.

Son of God, our hearts inspire,
Grant us tongues and thoughts of fire:
Lest our souls in worship tire,
Shed thy brightness o'er us.

Son of Man, our footsteps guide,
Grant us light at eventide,
Lead us where still waters glide,
Shed thy brightness o'er us.

Light of love, arise and shine,
Spread abroad thy beams Divine;
Till the sad dark earth is thine,
Shed thy brightness o'er us.

Accompaniments of Prayer.*

By Rev. W. H. GRIFFITH THOMAS.

I WANT to deal with five aspects of prayer as suggested by five words brought before us in the original of the Epistles. Unfortunately our English version cannot give us the distinctions in every case between the words which are brought before us under the general terms of prayer, supplication, or intercession; but there are at least five different Greek words used to describe what you and I understand as prayer, and each has its own point of view which we do well to emphasise.

Taking the lowest and simplest view of prayer, it is a sense of need. The substantive or verb which represents that thought occurs forty-two times, and we find an instance of it in Eph. vi. 18. It would be well, even for the most mature believer, to come back from time to time to this simple and obvious idea. When we kneel down, do we realise our need? Is there, for the time being, a vacuum, so to speak, in the spiritual life, which we feel must be filled by the Spirit of God?

Prayer is also an expression of desire, as represented by another word used in seventy-four passages, and equivalent to our "ask": see Philippians iv. 6. This attitude of the petitioner is prompted by need; so that prayer, as we know, is "the soul's sincere desire, uttered or unexpressed."

There is a Greek word used only once in Heb v. 7, in connection with our Lord, and implying

THE SPIRIT OF HUMILITY.

It was originally used for the olive branch which a suppliant had in hand as he came towards a king or some superior from whom something was desired; and then it came to be applied to the prayer symbolised by that offering. Thus it implies the attitude of the believer who wishes God to be propitious to him, and therefore comes looking for peace through the blood of the cross. It is very remarkable that the Apostle should use concerning our Lord, in relation to his prayer, this word connected with an olive branch. It implies what the Epistle to the Hebrews suggests from beginning to end, namely, the perfect nearness of the Lord to ourselves in his humanity. Being made like unto his brethren in all things, He comes before God as a suppliant; and, as we should, in the spirit of humility.

Prayer involves the idea of consecration; and the word bearing that sense occurs as verb or substantive one hundred and twenty-five times in the New Testament, that is in the majority of passages. It involves our heart's surrender as we express worship of God in prayer; and from its frequent occurrence it clearly marks the normal attitude of the believer in his relation to God in prayer. We have an Advocate with the Father, One who is ever turned in the direction of the Father; and you and I are pictured as ever turned to God in the attitude of surrender, submission, consecration, dedication. If we are right with God in this aspect, our prayers will be acceptable; but "if I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me."

The fifth word brings before us the thought of

and that word occurs only twice—1 Tim. ii. 1; iv. 5—in each case rendered by the word "intercession." In the course of years the latter word has somewhat modified its meaning. When we use it now we limit the idea to praying for someone else; but that was not what the word meant when the Authorised Version was given to us. The Greek verb associated with that noun occurs some four or five times—Rom. viii. 27 and 34; xi. 2; Heb. vii. 25. It implies familiar speech in prayer, as when friend meets friend and at once starts unreserved conversation. What glory this gives to the thought of prayer! In the familiar speech of fellowship we make known our wants to God.

There are other Greek words and phrases not clear in their use in relation to prayer, therefore I avoid specifying them; but these five are clear and unmistakable as indicating (1) a sense of need, (2) an expression of desire, (3) a spirit of humility, (4) an attitude of consecration, and (5) a privilege of fellowship. By the aid of Dr. Young's Analytical English Concordance, these points may be found out for yourselves without any knowledge of Greek; and you may then work out in detail any ideas suggested by the usage of the words.

In the second main division of our subject we have a fivefold action of the soul in prayer, suggested by different words or verses in the Acts and Epistles.

First, prayer is unceasing (Rom. i. 9; 1 Thess. v. 17). How is this possible? If you realise the five aspects of prayer, you will see that it is not limited to particular times nor even to words. Prayer in its fulness is not only an action, but an attitude. One has said that whatever may be the attitude of the body, the soul should ever be on its knees. The exhortation to pray without ceasing came up for consideration at a certain meeting where grave and reverend seigneurs could not understand what it meant. A servant-maid gave her testimony that when she rose she at once thanked God for preservation during the night. As she dressed she prayed to be clothed in Christ's righteousness; as she washed she prayed to be made clean through the blood of Jesus; as she went to her work she asked that she might do it heartily as unto the Lord. Thus she found that during the day she could turn almost everything into prayer. The reverend doctors felt that the girl had given a commentary, which was hardly capable of improvement, upon the text.

Then prayer is steadfast; and the Greek word conveying that idea is used in Mark iii. 9, Acts i. 14, viii. 13, Rom xii. 12. It is a putting forth of one's whole strength in order to wait steadfastly upon God in prayer, and embraces both activity and passivity.

Prayer is agonising (Gal. iv. 12). We should not associate with the word the idea of pain or suffering. It is when St. Paul speaks of agonising in prayer it is the putting forth of all his strength, vigour, and strenuousness. No doubt our Lord suffered pain, but it is not expressed in the word agony. Removing the thought of pain is helpful, as showing that there is nothing terrible, awful, or sad connected with prayer; but that there is everything earnest, strenuous, determined, and decided. We are to put forth spiritual muscle and moral fibre in order to pray acceptably.

My next word is intense (Acts xii. 5). It is a stretching out, and implies the intensity with which we nerve ourselves to our very utmost in prayer. It is said of our Lord that, "being in an agony, He prayed the more earnestly" (Luke xxii. 44), like a bow drawn to its full strength and length.

I can imagine someone feeling very hopeless about prayer as they think of those four words, and saying: "This emphasises the human side of prayer to such an extent that the thing is beyond me. Not only are my past prayers rebuked, but the future is discouraging." But God knows our need, and only shows us the human side in order to discover to us the Divine. My fifth point meets all your need, and is not a word, but a phrase—"in the Spirit" (Eph. vi. 18), not the human, but the Divine Spirit (Jude, verse 20). It is because we are living in the Holy Ghost that we are enabled to pray unceasingly, steadfastly or actively, strenuously, and intensely.

My last main division deals with the fivefold accompaniments of prayer. First, we have confidence (1 John v. 14). The word is often translated boldness, and thus occurs four times in St. John's first Epistle—twice in relation to the present, twice with regard to the future, as connected with the believer. Perhaps this rendering may commend itself to you, "And now, little children, abide in Him that when He shall appear we may be and not be ashamed before Him at his coming"—confidence, perfect freedom of speech, nothing between, nothing kept back (1 John ii. 28). See also iii. 21, iv. 17; and v. 14—"And this is the confidence that we have in Him, that if we ask anything according to his will, He heareth us." Whenever we kneel in prayer this should be spirit of our soul, if I may so speak, this spirit of confidence, unreserved, unrestrained speech, which tells God everything.

Fasting is the second accompaniment of prayer (Acts xiv. 33), not simply and only literal abstinence from food, but the spirit of detachment from the world. I fast not because there is merit in it, but because it enables me to detach myself from things earthly in order that I may attach myself the more effectually to things heavenly. There should be leisure for prayer in the sense of having this opportunity of detaching the soul, for such a purpose, from things lawful and right enough in the abstract.

Prayer should be with watching (Eph. vi. 18; Col. iv. 2). There are two Greek words rendered watching. One simply means absence of sleep through active, definite expectation, and this is associated with prayer in a number of passages. Never do we find in the New Testament any object associated with the word watch. I venture to suggest the intention is that we are to be concerned in our watching with Christ only. We are not to look within and watch our sins, nor are we to look around and watch our enemies. Our eye is not to be upon our work or our needs, but is to be upon Christ; and in his light we shall see light. Looking into our own hearts will only cause despair; but looking to Christ we shall see ourselves as He sees us, covered by the merit of his atoning sacrifice. Watching in prayer, keeping our eye upon Christ, looking off from everything else, let that be a necessary association and accompaniment of our prayer.

Thanksgiving also goes with prayer. Philippians iv. 6 is only one of many passages where we are exhorted to this effect. If we examine Paul's Epistles we find that prayer is seldom mentioned apart from thanksgiving; and I believe it is intended to suggest the attitude of appropriation as well as of application. Faith is twofold; it asks, and it accepts. The faith that asks is expressed in prayer; the faith that accepts is expressed in thanksgiving. You and I are for ever asking of God; but, somehow, we fail to appropriate. A friend, lunching with another whom he had known for twenty-five years, used the privilege of that long acquaintance to say, after grace in the ordinary terms, "When do you expect to get your prayer answered? When do you expect to be thankful?" I believe many a Christian would find life much more powerful, helpful, and blessed if he knew and exercised a little more of

THE FAITH THAT APPROPRIATES.

"Therefore I say unto you, All things whatsoever ye pray and ask for, believe that ye have received them, and ye shall have them" (Mark xi. 24, R.V.). Let us accompany our prayers with the appropriation of thanksgiving.

The concluding thought is that there should be joy in our prayer (Philippians i. 4). I venture to think, dear friends, that in some respects this is the deepest and most inclusive accompaniment of all. When you and I kneel down before God, our prayer should be made with an inward satisfaction that we are going to meet God and get blessing. I feel that here we have the very opposite of anguish or pain, in the consciousness of our privilege and joy in talking to God, in this inward satisfaction of the soul as it meets God in one or other of these attitudes.

In our contemplation of these five things—confidence, fasting or separation, watching or expectation, thanksgiving or appropriation, joy or satisfaction—we have but touched the fringe of a subject which fills the Epistles, especially those of St. Paul. I must leave Bible students to trace things out for themselves, with the aid of Young's Concordance or the Greek Testament. All genuine Bible knowledge and definite spiritual experience starts with the knowledge of God's words in his Word. If you make a study of these, and look at them as God has given them to us, your minds will be instructed, your souls will be blessed, and you will be led on to further knowledge. May God, by his own holy Word and Spirit, teach us what prayer is, and how to pray.

Home Missions.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

THE hours of Saturday, from one o'clock to seven, were crowded with the business and the pleasure of the thirty-second annual festival observed in and about the blocks of buildings which constitute the well-known Boys' Home at Stepney Causeway. Moreover, it was "Founder's Day"; and some three thousand delighted visitors were present to witness the constant succession of interesting and varied displays which preceded and followed eloquent advocacy from representative and influential men in support of all that is done for the great family of five hundred orphans and waif children now in the homes.

All the workshops with their various trades were in full operation during the afternoon; and the general offices, the four large dormitories, the dining hall, and the excellent domestic arrangements came in for a full share of inspection. There was a short thanksgiving service in the new chapel. A combined army and navy display was carried out in the large central open space; and for better convenience in seeing rising seats had been erected on two sides of this area. The youngsters entered with evident zest into the musical and other drill; and in the village maypole, flag races, and fancy skipping. But space would fail to tell of all that was done and seen beyond the foregoing. The doings of the young swimmers, the pipers, bell-ringers, and other music-makers were pleasing items. Pathetic interest attached to visits paid by some of the friends to young patients in Her Majesty's Hospital for Sick Waifs.

About midway through the programme of the day the "arena" was filled with seats for the great company, and the parts of a platform lying in readiness were quickly brought together for the meeting, over which Lord Brassey, Governor of Victoria, presided. His Excellency was accompanied by Lady Brassey; and among those on the platform were the Duchess of Somerset, Lady Hope, Lord Rowton, Canon Girdlestone, Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson, Canon Fleming, Mr. T. A. Denny, Mr. Wm. Fowler, Dr. Harry Guinness, and others. An opening prayer was offered, and then the Chairman told how warmly his heart was engaged in this splendid organisation for benevolent purposes so admirably conducted by Dr. Barnardo, who has long kept open door for all sorts and conditions of destitution. Since 1866, when the Homes were established, 33,368 boys and girls, from babyhood to an average adult age, had been rescued. There are now eighty-six separate Homes connected with the institutions, and twenty-four mission branches, spread all over the United Kingdom, the Channel Islands, and far away in Canada. Up to date 9556 boy and girl emigrants have been sent from the Homes to Canada and the Colonies, of whom have succeeded in the struggle for independence. Finance showed a net decrease of rather more than £3000 on the year's income, chiefly attributable to the demands of the Diamond Jubilee year upon the benevolent for local purposes. The founder's skill in organisation, tenderness of heart, and unfaltering resolve were worthy of the highest recognition in public gratitude.

Here there was a diversion. Flames were apparently leaping up in one of the first-floor windows; and down from the fourth storey tumbled a host of boys in their night attire (over something else) by way of the fire-proof spiral staircase outside the building, and through a long narrow canvas shoot. This was a good object-lesson as to what can be done in case of emergency.

Canon Fleming was sure he might express, on behalf of all present, unabated confidence in Dr. Barnardo's work, of which they had seen living pictures that day. Children, comparable to nettles and thistles, are taken, and, by God's help (always gratefully acknowledged), are turned into useful citizens and as good Christians as any among us. They who object to the Doctor's godly methods of training lift no finger to do anything in the way of rescue work. The man who, in the face of anxiety, difficulty, and discouragement, had dared to plead for the fallen and the weak should be thanked and cordially supported by the country and by all the Churches.

A few earnest words were spoken by Lady Hope, who regarded this work as a practical outlet for Christian sympathy and pity. Her ladyship's story of the princess who devoted the value of her jewels to good work, and declared that she found them again in the tears of a penitent woman, served to point the question whether each friend may not do something more for so blessed a work as this.

And now out came a procession of children in flower-decked perambulators, sedan-chair, diminutive tricycle, and even a wheelbarrow, all intent upon a mimic battle of flowers. How they did fling their confetti at the good Doctor on the platform, he the while playfully retaliating from a sack of fine-cut grass! Even the visitors were not secure from the onslaught of this youthful brigade as it toured round the meeting.

"Peace" being restored, Mr. William Fowler, treasurer of the institutions, described how he had watched the growth of the work from its early days, and declared that its importance could not be over-estimated as a means of rescuing large numbers of children from misery and certain destruction. Extraordinary histories of successful deliverances from evil surroundings abounded in the forthcoming report.

Dr. Monro Gibson rejoiced that this magnificent work is "a going concern." Experience shows that, even on a small scale,

SUCH EFFORTS DEMAND UNFAILING PATIENCE.

Dr. Barnardo merits our gratitude for calling attention to the duty of rescuing the lost. He has also displayed in a genuine case of evolution (starting with one boy) a good amount of "gumption" as well as of grace. Such work confounds infidelity, and it may be found "in that day" that even contributors have got as much blessing out of these institutions as the boys and girls themselves.

The stronger influence of environment as compared with that of heredity was a point in the address which followed from Dr. Harry Guinness, who had no less an authority than Dr. Barnardo himself for saying that you may take the son of a bishop and put him into the purlieus of Whitechapel, and the probability is that he will ultimately turn out to be a criminal. The skilful organisation exercised by Dr. Barnardo was worthy of all praise, and may well lead us to pray that God may spare him and increase his blessed work.

Dr. Barnardo was warmly received upon rising to convey the thanks of the meeting to Lord and Lady Brassey and others prominent in the proceedings. He announced that Mr. T. A. Denny offered £100 toward the collection if nine others would give a like amount. Lady Brassey presented prizes to a long line of old boys and girls who had kept their situations, with credit to themselves, from one to ten years, while the Duchess of Somerset crowned the winners in the Flower Procession.

To-day (Thursday) 250 lads and girls leave the Homes for Canada.

Glasgow United Evangelistic Association.

THE work of the Fresh-air Fortnight is in full swing. Already this season 3600 of the poorest city children have enjoyed their long-looked-for fortnight in the country. One despatch (which now numbers 550 weekly, if the money is forthcoming) included twenty-eight deaf and dumb children and forty-seven orphan girls. Quite £350 a week will be needed for the next few weeks, if only those are sent out who by no possibility can see the green fields in any other way.

Whilst arrangements are made for a vigorous prosecution of the fresh-air work, the evangelistic work of the association is not being forgotten. At this season of the year, when many churches in the city slacken their labours for holiday purposes, those at work among the poor, instead of lessening their labours, find need for increased activity. All the tents and halls of the association are thrown open nightly as bright and attractive places of resort for the thousands in our city whose poverty prevents them ever taking a holiday, and whose miserable homes in courts and alleys are during the hot summer months so unattractive, close, and unhealthy. The joint hon. treasurer is Mr. Alex. MacKeith, 19, Howard-street, Glasgow.

Glasgow Bible Training Institute.

THE closing meeting of the sixth session of the Bible Training Institute was held a few days ago in the Christian Institute, Bothwell-street, Glasgow. Lord Overtoun presided, and in a brief introductory address said that during the six years of the Institute's existence they had prayed much for it, and God had blessed the work beyond expectation. He believed that the Institute would yet be a great blessing to Scotland, and to all the ends of the earth. Rev. J. E. Somerville, of Mentone, followed, and in a deeply spiritual address exhorted his hearers to be humble in spirit and to keep close to Jesus Christ.

Mr. Anderson then gave a synopsis of the work of the session. Sixty students had been enrolled; thirty-eight came from Scotland, eighteen from England, two from Ireland, one from New Zealand, and one from Russia. Of those who are leaving this year, twelve go to China, three to Africa, one to the Australian Colonies, one to the Continent, and six take up work at home. One thousand four hundred and ninety-three indoor meetings were held during the session in connection with churches and mission agencies, and about an equal number of open-air meetings. The aggregate attendance at these meetings was 160,719, and 3,618 persons had been dealt with as inquirers. The aim of the Institute is to impart to the students and training, that will tend more to usefulness than display, so that wherever they may go they will be true servants of the Lord, seeking to advance his kingdom and extend blessing amongst their fellow-men. Amongst the applications for admission next session, ten had already been received from Sweden, indicating that the work of the Institute was not to be confined to the United Kingdom.

Rev. Dr. Marshall Lang remarked that some looked askance at such work as that carried on by the Institute, but he was not one of those. He welcomed it as a most valuable auxiliary to the Christian work of all the churches. If we but contemplated the tens of thousands, in our great cities and our country districts, who are wandering away from all that connects them with the habits of religious life, we were bound to conclude that the Church is not grappling with many of the problems that confront it. We are called to consider the organisation of the Church with the view to adapt it more fully to the complexities of the problem with which it has to deal.

When the words "Bible Training" are used, some might think that they describe or suggest a special or narrow culture. It might be a special culture, but it was not and could not be narrow. He did not know any study that so delivers one from narrowness as a devout,

REVERENTIAL STUDY OF THE WORD OF GOD.

It takes us from all narrowness of sect, and leads us into a large and healthy place, and up that hill of truth where the air is always pure and serene. There is no more liberalising study than the study of the Bible, for we cannot peruse its pages carefully without touching human nature at a vast variety of points, and coming into contact with every interest that appeals to the soul of man.

One has only to read the course prescribed for the students to feel that whilst the Bible is pre-eminent as it ought to be, there is connected with it the study of much that will give them a wide oriel window in their lives, and help them to speak in the power of large ideas. He had found the students to be young men who may, with confidence, be accepted by the churches as most valuable evangelistic workers. In speaking more directly to the students, Dr. Marshall Lang said that what they must seek in themselves and for themselves is the spirit of consecration. They should cultivate a true human way, and therefore in the best sense a Divine way, of looking at the problems with which they had to deal, and they should be men who are living in the spirit of Divine humanity that has been manifested to us in Jesus Christ. The great power of all their ministry will be the power of consecrated service.

Lord Overtoun then presented diplomas to students who had completed the two years' course. Several of these afterwards delivered short addresses, and the closing address was given by Rev. D. M. MacIntyre.

Billingsgate Christian Mission.

At the annual meeting last week Mr. F. A. Bevan presided and warmly commended the work as one of the Christian efforts most needed in our metropolis. The Mission, he said, is undoubtedly a means of great direct and indirect blessing, and its effect upon the Fish Market is known and noticed by a number of people who have no real sympathy with the work itself. Year by year testimony increases as to the value and efficacy of this means of com- bating the betting, gambling, and evil living which are too prevalent among men whose arduous labours pass unnoticed in the West End, where the breakfast-tables of the well-to-do reap their tribute from the harvest of the sea.

Mr. Williamson, treasurer, who himself owes his conversion to the Mission, made a financial statement, from which it appears that the debt, which has been reduced by £500 during the past year, now stands at £2800; and while the Mission, located as it is in its own premises, is very favourably placed, and derives assistance from sub-letting portions of the building, the balance referred to is a hindrance which it is earnestly desired to remove.

The report submitted by the hon. secretary, Mr. A. Walters, was of a very gratifying nature. "We claim," said he, "that the influence exercised by the work of the Mission and those associated with it has been of such a nature that the whole tone and character of the Market has undergone a complete change. At one time it had gained an unenviable notoriety for bad language and manners; but now, though we do not profess to believe that the change is more than surface deep as far as the majority of its habitués are concerned, yet a restraining influence is brought to bear. At the same time we carefully distinguish between reformation and regeneration. The testimony of Sir H. Peek, as a near neighbour and a shrewd man of business, is very valuable. He says: 'As one intimately connected with the neighbourhood for about fifty years, I know something of the past character of the place; but, thanks to the efforts of this Mission, it is no longer true that the name of Billingsgate is synonymous with all that is degraded. I wish the Mission every success.' There is need to supplement the labours of Mr. Warlow, the missionary, whose time is fully occupied by work in and around the Market, by a nursing sister to visit the men when confined to their homes by sickness."

Prebendary Webb-Peploe derived thoughts very applicable to the work of the Mission from Peter's vision of the great sheet let down from heaven. All classes of men are, in the solemn judgment of God, shut up in condemnation because of sin; but, in his mercy, judicial cleansing is provided for the whole race. There is not one upon earth whom his fellow-man may describe as common or unclean; but we have the enormous privilege of making known to the world that God was in Christ reconciling it unto himself. Mr. Webb-Peploe expressed his intention to humbly do his best toward making the Mission better known in the West End of London.

Sympathetic words for the workers, and showing true estimation of the value of the souls among whom they labour, came from the lips of Dr. Harry Guinness. "I could not go down to Billingsgate." Why not? There is no personal isolation in the work of God, but we are called, first to estimate man in the light of Calvary, and then to estimate Christian work in our common relation to God as his servants.

Rev. Sydney J. Jones (East London Tabernacle) rejoiced to find that a paradise even in Billingsgate is possible to the grace of God. "A living, loving, and long-hopefulness" for the conversion of men is needed; for we never know where God is going to get his great saints from.

Belfast Midnight Mission.—It is over thirty-five years since this mission was established. During that time it has offered an open door by day and night, and a loving welcome to every erring one really anxious to turn from her life of misery and sin and to enter on a virtuous and honourable path. Considerable blessing has been bestowed on the rescue labours during the past year. In the rescue register there are 991 entries of admission. The hospital and other expenses are correspondingly heavy, and the committee plead for support.

Mission Work in Ireland.

The work of evangelising the 3,000,000 Roman Catholics in Ireland is one of our nearest and first duties. Many spontaneous efforts in this direction have been made from time to time by persons of undoubted ability in preaching the Gospel, but the needs of Roman Catholics require special study and experience on the part of anyone who desires to be used of God in leading them out of their spiritual bondage into the liberty of the Gospel.

With more than forty years' experience, the Society for Irish Church Missions carries on its work with much success, seeking the constant enduement of the Holy Spirit, and adapting its means to the opportunities as occasion may require. In addition to the support given to the permanent ministry in Connemara, the Society's operations include the employment of an extensive lay agency for house-to-house visitation in Dublin, Cork, Waterford, Limerick, and other places; for school teachers; for evangelists and colporteurs to visit the fairs and markets in all parts of Ireland, and to preach and sell Testaments in the open-air in summer, and conduct Gospel meetings with lantern pictures in hired halls or the movable wooden hall in winter. The greatest change has taken place during the past five years in the people of the country, who now listen attentively in large numbers to the evangelists and purchase thousands of Testaments and other books.

The special training necessary for this work is provided by the Society in their own Mission Houses in Dublin, where a course of study and work is arranged according to the capacity of the probationers and the kind of work they are best qualified to enter upon. There are vacancies now for young men and women who desire to work for Christ, and the society offers board and residence in Dublin to acceptable candidates while they are under training, and a moderate salary when an appointment to work is given. Further particulars and the necessary application papers can be had from the Dublin Superintendent, Rev. Philip B. Johnson, Mission House, 5, Townsend-street, Dublin.

The Blackgang Mission.

In this the twenty-fifth year of the Blackgang Mission God is giving tokens of his favour. For some time it has been felt that, in order to place the work on a permanent basis, a meeting-place should be secured at once, capable of extension, and free from the burden of yearly rental.

A short time since, after much prayer and consideration, the way was opened for the acquisition of a plot of ground, on which it is proposed to erect an iron mission hall, part of the cost of which will be met by a temporary loan at a low rate of interest, whilst a sum of at least £100 will be required to meet the additional cost, together with other incidental expenses. On June 30th a sale of work was held on the ground, followed by a dedication service conducted by an old friend of the Mission, Mr. J. Newman, of Sandown, and Rev. W. E. Sellers, Wesleyan minister. Dr. David Young, of Rome, was also present, and gave an account of his medical mission work amongst the Jews in the Ghetto of "the eternal city." The closing hour was occupied by prayer and praise.

It is greatly desired, should the means be forthcoming, to build a permanent workers' residence, for which there is abundance of room. This for the present would be at the service of the hon. superintendent of the Mission, Mrs. Christopher Smith (née Edith Reade), who has laboured assiduously and uninterruptedly in season and out of season for the good of the people ever since the work was commenced twenty-five years ago by her late father and his family on their taking up their residence in the island. Every branch of the work —Sunday services, Sunday school, Bible classes, Christian Endeavour Society, etc.—is maintained efficiently, and definite soul-saving is the object kept steadfastly in view. One Who Knows.

The "One by One" Working Band consists of Christians of all denominations who, seeing the need of a revival of pure and undefiled religion, are united by intercessory prayer and individual effort to bring souls to Christ. The secretary, Mr. Thomas Hogben, "Welcome Mission," Portsmouth, issues a booklet containing interesting instances in the experience of the late Mr. George Müller and others showing the value of bringing souls "one by one" to God in believing and persevering prayer.

Mildmay Mission Hospital

In many hospitals of London much good of a spiritual kind comes to some of the patients; but in those institutions the spiritual work is more an incidental thing, whereas here it is made an essential part of the plan. Recognising that the soul has its disease, sin, the aim is to bring it into contact with the great Physician whose touch alone can give perfect healing even to life everlasting. Nor is there here less anxiety to do all that can be done for the bodily welfare of the patients. This poor people understand, if we may judge from the number who flock to the Mildmay dispensaries, and who fill its hospital wards. The hospital nursing staff consists of Mildmay deaconesses and lady probationers, the latter mostly coming for partial training previous to going forth as missionaries.

Patients too ill to come to the dispensary are visited by the doctor and nurse. Both to the in-patients and out-patients not only are the medical and surgical requisites given free, but milk and grocery tickets, invalid dinners, and clothing are judiciously supplied as needed. Before commencing dispensary work a short service of reading, exposition, and prayer is held. "To the poor the Gospel is preached."

Healing for body and soul goes forward, in connection with Mildmay, in Old Ford and New Kent-road, as well as in Bethnal Green, and the Convalescent Home at Barnet proves a very useful adjunct. The report is most interesting reading, and may be obtained from Col. Morton, Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, N.

Home for Crippled Boys.

In Wright's-lane, Kensington, stands a very useful institution — the National Industrial Home for Crippled Boys. For the first time in its existence of over thirty years the Home is free from debt. It has accommodation for ten more boys, in addition to the ninety who are now there. Many candidates are waiting for admission, which will be granted as soon as funds permit. Each boy stays for a term of three years, and about thirty leave annually.

The accounts from "old boys" are very encouraging. Sixty either called at or wrote to the Home during last year, in addition to the fifty who were present at the annual social gathering. The school inspector's report is very satisfactory, and he was also well pleased with his examination of the boys in regard to their knowledge of Scripture.

Ladies and gentlemen have kindly and regularly attended at the Home on Sundays to give religious instruction and to conduct the services. As the committee receive crippled boys into the Home from all parts of the country, they would be glad if clergymen would kindly give them an offertory from time to time.

The statistics of sales in connection with the various industrial departments show that this part of the work is well supported and highly appreciated by the customer. Orders are very welcome, and a large variety of goods are represented in the price lists, obtainable from the resident secretary, Mr. Fred. J. Bovis.

Down Lodge Hall, Wandsworth.

There is cause for thankfulness to God for continued help and blessing upon this work at Wandsworth as year after year goes by. Many more helpers would be welcomed, and might find large scope for usefulness in various branches of Christian effort.

The Sunday services continue to be well attended, the afternoon gatherings being certainly larger than they have been for some years past. A large congregation always assembles in the evening, and by far the larger proportion come from the very poorest homes.

From eighty to a hundred men come out to "their school" every Tuesday night, after a hard day's work. The attachment they show to their teachers, and the keen interest they take in their work, has also a very hopeful outlook for their future, and promises a brighter, happier time for many homes, as men will rarely drink during the week and come to school on Tuesday. Will readers pray that they may also become scholars in God's school?

The hon. sec. of this good work is Mr. Herbert Godwin, Sydney Lodge, Wimbledon Park-road.

Perth Conference is fixed for Sept. 13, 14, and 15. Subject, "The Christian Life as a Warfare." Communications to Rev. Dr. Bannerman, Free Church Manse of St. Leonards, Perth.

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

Great Assembly Hall.

NO evangelist is more used than Mr. E. P. Telford in his visits to the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road. June has been a remarkable month for blessing in connection with Mr. Charrington's work. It matters not whether you turn to the Great Hall, the Children's Hall, or the "Men's Own," all have received their share of the Divine favour. Mr. Telford's mission in the Large Hall has resulted in the conversion of not a few very interesting cases. His earnest and telling presentation of the truth, followed by the solemn appeal at the close of every address for immediate decision for Christ, produced a feeling that you must decide there and then or be lost. Both on Sundays and week-days men and women stood up and declared themselves willing to follow Jesus.

On Sunday nights it was most impressive to see twenty to thirty persons, of both sexes, rise before the immense congregation, and in response to the preacher's appeal, "Who to-night will start to follow Christ?" say in a loud voice, often with trembling, "I will." The inquiry-room was filled with anxious souls, and late into the night have willing workers been dealing with those troubled about their eternal welfare. We little realise how much we owe to such work as this in the East End of London. This is the kind of leaven that leavens the whole lump. The East End would be a veritable hell upon earth if all those engaged in the work of saving souls were removed out of it. K.

The Evangelistic Mission.

FOR thirty-two years this Mission has, with Divine blessing, been the means of carrying the Gospel to the hearts and homes of thousands throughout this and other lands.

Some of its agents, whose whole time is devoted to the work, are supported out of its funds; but a far greater number, in various positions in life—lawyers, doctors, merchants, tradesmen, and mechanics—gladly devote their spare time to this happy service for Christ in various ways, amongst the young and old of all classes, but mostly amongst the very poor, in the metropolis; whilst in other towns and villages we rejoice in the gracious results of their regular or occasional labours.

The summer presents opportunities for special work in tents, as we have all these many years proved, and we are hoping to accomplish more in this direction this season. But it is necessarily expensive work, as our canvas walls and roofs under stress of weather soon wear out; and we are now severely handicapped, not only for funds to renew these and cover working expenses, but alas! recent arrears on current expenses have told severely upon us, so that we have to appeal for help.

Doors are open before us on every hand, and we have no possible doubt as to the result of the missions that might be held as soon as we may be fairly started thereon; for from amongst converts and other voluntary workers awaiting these missions we have confidence that God will graciously use many to the ingathering of a spiritual harvest.

Another seasonable need is the Summer Holiday Fund for the thousands of children of our Sunday-schools and the many hundreds of poor mothers, who for months previously look forward with eager interest to this annual treat of a day in the country or at the sea-side, according to the means at our disposal. Evangelists' Movements.

Mr. J. J. SIMS is continuing special meetings in Edinburgh. Testimonies of blessing received during the mission have come from ministers and Christians of all denominations, and salvation has been brought to sinners.

A tent mission has just closed at Oswaldtwistle which has extended over twenty-four days. The tent (a new one) has been presented to the Evangelization Society by Councillor Hoghton, through Mr. J. SHIELDS, evangelist, who has conducted the services. Good audiences have assembled night after night, and at times the tent had to be extended.

Mr. JAMES WHARTON has just concluded a month's mission in Congregational and other churches at New Byth and Millseat, Aberdeenshire. The services nightly increased in numbers and interest, although the farmers and crofters were busy on the land.

Some six hundred navvies are employed at the Kirkcaldy Waterworks, in Fifeshire. The contractor is an earnest Christian, and is erecting a hall for mission purposes. Application has been made to the Scottish Navvy Mission for the services of a missionary for the work.

Mr. A. J. WALDRON, of the Christian Evidence Society, has just completed a month's mission at the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse. The interest deepened as the mission proceeded, and there is reason to believe that much good will result from the labours of the evangelist.

The U.P. Church of Scotland has twelve evangelists, male and female, labouring among the fisher folk who gather in great numbers at the various fishing stations in the North of Scotland during the summer months. At Fraserburgh alone during July 10,000 to 20,000 people gather for the herring fishing. This presents a large field for Christian effort, and other churches are also engaged in the work of evangelisation. There is much cause for thanksgiving, for the work is being prosecuted with many signs of blessing.

Mr. WM. THOMSON, jun., evangelist, conducted a mission during June in the City Temple, Glasgow (Rev. John Robertson's). In addition to the usual evening meetings, he preached twice each Sunday, and held services for boys and girls four days in the week for three weeks. God has abundantly blessed the effort. The Gospel by lime-light in the evenings gathered a large number of people, and seldom a night passed without definite cases of conversion. On the last Sabbath evening many were found who were deeply anxious about their souls, and over seventy who had professed conversion joined on the last meeting of the mission in a praise and testimony meeting. One of the most interesting meetings was a rescue one, over 200 women being gathered out of the streets one evening to hear the Gospel. Some hopeful cases were dealt with. Mr. W. D. Dunn and Mr. J. R. Caldwell conduct special meetings this month, and much blessing is expected.

Requests for Prayer.

That Romish teaching may cease in our Protestant churches.

For a special meeting for young men to be held in Hendon next Sunday.

For the success of efforts now being made to abolish the liquor traffic in the Dominion?

For a young Christian brother who, until recently, has been a most exemplary follower of the Lord Jesus, but now, through mingling with the world, has cast aside parental counsel and advice, and placed on himself the hard, unequal yoke.

Temperance Ironsides.—This society of temperance stalwarts was well to the front at the Temperance Fête at the Crystal Palace on Wednesday last week. A pleasing incident was the presentation by Mrs. Tennyson Smith of a standard to Mr. Kyffin Freeman (president), who received it on behalf of the Society. Mr. Geo. Blacklock (barrister-at-law) made a powerful appeal that the Church should free itself from the thraldom of the liquor traffic, and Mr. Tennyson Smith gave some startling proofs that the Church is to a deplorable extent connected with the liquor traffic.

Obituary.

MR. J. H. BUCKINGHAM.

The death is announced of Mr. Joseph Hicks Buckingham, who expired at his residence in Lancaster-Gate, W., on Saturday last. He was the son of the late Mr. John Buckingham, of Truro, and was born in that city in 1832. He came to London and founded the business house in Wood-street which bears his name. He was one of the earliest pioneers of the Ragged School Union, in conjunction with the late Earl of Shaftesbury. He was also one of the founders of the London Chamber of Commerce, and occupied an important position in the commercial world.

MR. JAMES M'VITTIE, GLASGOW.

This worker, who has been for the past fourteen years an acceptable agent of the Scottish Temperance League, died in Glasgow on the 4th inst. He was born in Langholm in 1833, married at an early age, and in 1860, through the death of their little boy, the hearts of the father and mother were turned to spiritual things, which resulted in their conversion during the religious awakening of that period. Employed as foreman in a woollen mill in Selkirk, he was known as an earnest worker in evangelistic and temperance circles. In 1884 he was called to a more extended circuit as an agent of the Scottish Temperance League, in which capacity he rendered good service. Of a warm-hearted and generous disposition, he was beloved by many in all parts of the country. For some years Mr. McVittie suffered from a severe and painful malady, but was able to fulfil his duties till three months ago. Through years of trial and affliction he was sustained by the elevating and strengthening hope and consolation of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Mr. McVittie was a respected member and office-bearer of the late Dr. Fergus Ferguson's Congregational Church, Glasgow.

Personalia.

Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson is expected to be present at the Keswick Convention, and after that to occupy the pulpit of Emmanuel Church, Brighton (Rev. J. B. Figgis's), for two months.

Rev. John Dunlop, secretary of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews, has been honoured with the degree of D.D., from Collegeville, Philadelphia.

Dr. Baedeker paid a short visit to Dublin last week, and held a few meetings. He interested Christians by his account of Gospel work in Russia. He feels that he is sustained by the prayers of the Lord's people.

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, of New Court Congregational Church, sails on Wednesday, July 20, on the Teutonic, to take part in the Northfield and Winona Conferences. No letters will be forwarded to him during his absence.

Rev. W. H. Gaussen, M.A., LL.B., who has been helping in the work of the Pastors' College since Prof. Marchant's retirement, has now accepted the invitation of the president and trustees to a place on the staff, and will commence his duties as tutor in August. Mr. Gaussen succeeds Dr. Usher, and will continue to act as assistant to Pastor Frank White.

Rev. Duncan Macgregor, Principal of the Training College at Dunoon, is making a slow recovery from the injuries he sustained by the accident recently reported. Meantime, friends are desirous to relieve him from anxiety in the maintenance of his Training Institution; and Rev. F. B. Meyer writes to us:—"I would specially appeal to those who realise the immense service Mr. Macgregor is doing to young men of good ability, but without the means of providing themselves with education, in training them free of charge as ministers and missionaries. The thoroughness and evangelical character of the work is beyond all praise." Communications may be addressed to Mr. Oswald Chambers, The College, Dhalling Mhor, Kirn N.B.

"Northfield Echoes" is a serial that cannot but be of great interest to those who have visited the New England centre of Mr. Moody's work. Four numbers are issued during the summer—June to September—containing addresses delivered at the summer conferences. The first number this season gives illustrated accounts of work in connection with Mr. Moody's various institutions, and sketches of Revs. F. B. Meyer, G. Campbell Morgan, and G. H. C. Macgregor, accompanied by portraits. There are also articles of sterling worth by Mr. Moody, Dr. Scofield, and Mr. J. R. Mott. The "Echoes" may be ordered from Messrs. Morgan & Scott, the English subscription being 5s. for the series.

Christ and Childhood.

IV.—Christ Blessing the Children.

THE beautiful story of Christ receiving and blessing little children is told us by Matt. xix. 13-15; Mark x. 13-16; and Luke xviii. 15-17. It occurred towards the close of his ministry, when Jesus was in the district of Perœa, beyond Jordan. Jesus must often have shown his love to the children before, and had many times spoken about them, and proved in different ways how much He cared for them. So one day some mothers came to Jesus and brought with them their children, not only to see the kind and great Friend who had done so much, but that He might put "his hands on them and pray." Some of the children were quite little ones, babies in arms.

When the disciples saw them they did not like it, and thought it was beneath the dignity of Jesus to take any notice of a number of poor women and their children; and the disciples would actually have sent them away had it not been that Jesus rebuked them. They meant to save Jesus from being bothered, because they did not know how much He loved the children, and therefore Jesus was much displeased with them for thinking of driving away these boys and girls, who came holding their mothers' skirts and looking up to Him in love and wonder. It would even seem as if some had begun to go away, for Jesus had to call them unto Him; and turning to the disciples He said, "Suffer the little children to come unto Me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God. Verily I say unto you, whosoever shall not receive the kingdom as a little child shall in no wise enter therein."

When Jesus said these beautiful words which taught the disciples that henceforth, if they loved Him, they must help and not hinder the coming of children to Christ, He took them up in his arms one by one and put his loving hands on them and blessed them. And that is just what the Saviour is still doing with all the babies and girls and boys whose fathers or mothers bring them in prayer to Christ. Nothing can keep Christ away from the children or take them out of his arms of love unless it be that the children will not go to Him. There is not entrance into the kingdom for any except all come like little children.

Thus we are taught that Jesus loves the children, that He calls them, receives them, welcomes them, blesses them, and takes them to Himself.

We are told in Matt. xiv. 21 that when Jesus fed the five thousand men He did not forget the women and the children. They, too, were provided for. In Christ's miracle of love the children have their share. There is always something for the little ones in the feasts that Jesus gives. They are never hungry without Christ's care. They were often in the Saviour's thought, and when He uttered those sad words of beautiful pity over Jerusalem (Matt. xxiii. 37; Luke xiii. 34), and said, "How often would I have gathered thy children together even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not," the tenderness of his compassion included the children. His heart would have drawn them, and his power would have shielded them from danger and harm, both without and within.

How often would Jesus draw the wayward and self-willed, the angry and selfish boys and girls to his side, but they only think of their play and pleasure, their toys, and their friends, and will not come to the gentle Jesus who would be their best friend, their kind, great, good Shepherd.

There are no words which reveal to us Christ's longing to bless the children and his infinite care for them like those spoken to Peter after He had risen from the tomb and appeared again to his disciples on the sea of Galilee (John xxi. 15). On that early and happy morning on the shore of the lake three times did Jesus ask Peter if he loved Him, and on the first occasion, when Peter answered, "Yea, Lord, Thou knowest that I love Thee," Jesus said unto him "Feed my lambs."

So the Saviour who fed the hungry little ones on the hillside, and who took them into his arms and blessed them, left as his first command in his last message to Peter to feed his lambs. That means to each the children, care for them, provide for them. Jesus wished his disciples to carry on his work, and because of these words we have Sunday-schools, books for children, homes for orphans, refuges for the homeless, hospitals for sick children, all the good work for little children all the world over has been in obedience to this command. What do we owe Jesus for all He has said and done for children?

"Nettles Don't Sting This Month."

SO says the country boy to his London friends, with a roguish twinkle in his eye and half a hope in his mind that one of them will believe him. But the town-bred cousin is generally wise enough not to put the matter to the test, and a very good thing too, for anyone who likes to try tumbling into a bed of stinging nettles will come off just as badly whether it be January, or March, or June, or December, or any other month whatever. The wise ones would go on to tell you they did not mean that the nettles would not sting you, but that they would not sting the month, which of course anybody with a particle of sense can see.

A month has no feelings any more than a table, and it would be a sensitive table upon which a stinging nettle could raise blisters, would it not? This, you say, is very foolish talk; but it may be possible to extract a few grains of wisdom from it. I want you to see how very easy it is to pass from the nettle, with its poison and its sting, to the most stinging and poisonous thing in all the world—I mean sin. And I want you to notice that nothing except a human being can ever really feel the sting of this. Someone says, "What a wicked world this is"; and you at once reply, "It isn't the world, but the people in the world." And you are right, for although the Bible speaks of "this present evil world" (Galatians i. 4), if we think it over carefully we shall come to the conclusion that it is speaking of the sinful people who live here.

A boy has done something wrong—told a lie, we will say—and he has neither been for forgiveness to his father on earth nor to his greater Father in heaven. And as he trudges along to school on a bright morning in early summer it is strange, but true, that the things around him all seem dull and sad. Can it be that there is no beauty in the fresh green leaves, no music in the song of the birds, no fragrance in the scent of the flower? Has the nettle of sin been stinging the world of nature too? No, no! Nettles don't sting this month, neither can they hurt the world. It is the boy's own heart which is stung, and which carries about with it the great big blisters of sin; and as long as the blisters are there they will appear to their victim to be everywhere else as well.

Someone you love, your mother, perhaps, is dying. She has been ill in bed so long that you have brought yourself to believe that she will lie there—well, very nearly always. But now you know that her time has come you are filled with a strange dread and slip into her room, hardly daring to look at her or trust yourself to speak. But, to your surprise, mother is just as happy as ever. Is she not, indeed, a little happier? There is such a quiet smile on her face, and such a heavenly light in her gentle eyes, that you are sure death has no fear for her. Why? Simply because death is not dreadful in itself. "The sting of death is sin." Nettles don't sting this month, and death does not sting the Christian. Its sting and its poison are for the man who is passing from the world with his sins unforgiven. Oh, dear boys and girls, make haste and learn this lesson, that nothing whatever in all God's universe has any sting for you, apart from that one dreadful thing called sin. Poverty and hardship, weariness and disappointment, suffering and death — you may have all these and yet be happy, if sin come not along with them. But be sure of this, though you possess riches untold, a palace to live in, and every pleasure and delight the world can give, if sin meanwhile live within your heart it will arm them all with its sting and fill them all with its poison.

Then let us be thankful that we have a Saviour who can take away our sin and crush out all its sting. One word as to this as I close. If you want to handle a nettle so that it shall not sting you, you must take tight hold of it. You must kill the sting before it has time to hurt you. There is a sense in which we ourselves can do this with sin. Does temptation come? Fight it at once. Would Satan lead you astray? "Resist the devil and he will flee from you" (James. iv. 7). Yet it is only Jesus who can really crush out for us all the sting of sin. Unless He helped us we could never overcome temptation. Unless He had conquered sin when He died on the cross, we must always have been its poor, miserable slaves. But we rejoice to know He did conquer it, and that immediately after the Apostle Paul had said "The sting of death is sin" he was able to cheer the heart of every one of us with the glad, triumphant shout, "Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. xv. 57).

INTERNATIONAL S.S. LESSONS.

July 24.

"Elijah's Flight and Encouragement."

1 Kings xix. 1-16.

Golden Text.—"Rest in the Lord and wait patiently for Him."—Psalm xxxvii. 7.

Elijah's Flight (1-3).

AFTER the execution of priests Ahab speeds to tell Jezebel (1). She, filled with rage, threatens Elijah's life (2). He failed where we should have expected him to succeed. He, who had been so bold hitherto, falls before the glance of an angry, wicked woman.

Compare—Abraham the faithful, guilty of lying; Moses, the meekest of men, sins through temper.

Contrast—Chrysostom's reply to the threat of the Empress Eudoxia: "Go tell her I fear nothing but sin."

Sympathise with Elijah—Highly wrought; the strain of the last few days terrible; temptation come at the weakest time. After great spiritual excitement the devil generally attacks us, too often with success.

Cause of it.

He looked away from God to circumstance. The passion of Jezebel know no bounds of principle or compassion. She was a terrible hater. Elijah remembered this, and forgot God.

Compare—Peter going to Christ on the sea. When he looked at the turbulent waves he sank.

Fix our gaze on the power of God, and the might of evil sinks into nothingness by comparison.

Contrast.—William Carey ridiculed for thinking he, a poor, ignorant man, single-handed would be used to convert teeming millions of India. "Sir," said he, "you have forgotten William Carey's God."

The Effect of it.

On Israel.—7000 who had never bowed the knee to Baal left without leader. Much of the triumph on Carmel was wasted for the present. Elijah never more needed than after Carmel's experience.

On Elijah.—He never regained his former influence in the nation. True, he came back; but only to appoint others to carry on his work.

Compare the effect of the one sin of Moses and the sin of Saul.

Beware of the first wrong act. We never know what it leads to. Sins committed in secret have an effect on outward conduct which no man can understand or measure, but the effect is certain.

The Castle of Giant Despair (4).

Elijah had but one prayer—"Let me die." He was under the cloud of his own weakness (physical and mental) and fear of Jezebel, rather than the cloud of failure. His action here and speech due to an over-wrought system.

Many of the greatest men have been in this state. Those capable of rising highest are also capable of falling lowest.

Lesson.—The view from the window of Giant Despair is not the true view of life. He always makes us look through green glasses. We should never act in despair, but wait until God sends relief.

God's Fatherlike Care (5-8).

Elijah needed two things—sleep and food. These the angel brought.

There was no rebuke now, but restoration.

Compare.—The father's reception of the prodigal.

Christ's restoration of Peter after his fall.

Ebed Melech taking Jeremiah out of the dungeon put cushions of old rags under his arms so that the rope should not cut his emaciated frame. So God is careful and gentle when He lifts us out of our dungeons of despair and sin.

God never breaks anything that bends.

The Mount of God (8-14).

Horeb so called because here God appeared to Moses. Elijah is strong now. The gentle rebuke comes, "What dost thou here?" The inference from these words more of a rebuke than the words themselves.

God's cure for it all. "Stand upon the mount before the Lord." So prayer to-day cures all ills. It is climbing the mountain, breathing the fresh air, and basking in the bright sunshine.

The experience of the tornado, then the earthquake, then the lightening, then the "sound of soft stillness," taught Elijah that God does not always work with rushing might, but in quiet calm.

Illustration.—(1) The growth of trees and flowers; (2) the growth of grace in our hearts.

Lesson.—God still speaks to us by cares, duties, and temptations. We must come out of our cave of self if we would hear.

Y.M.C.A. Conference at Basle.

JULY 5 TO 10.

THE Young Men's Christian Associations are wise in their generation in selecting for their International Conference cities which abound in attractive surroundings — such as Stockholm, Basle, and Christiania (where the next conference is arranged to be held). Notwithstanding this inducement, stronger than ever in the present case, the attendance (536) fell short of the average; and but for the abnormal number of German and Swiss delegates it would have been small indeed. Amongst other causes affecting this result was, doubtless, the Spanish-American war—only fourteen representatives putting in an appearance from the United States; and the month in which it was held being July instead of the holiday month of August, will partly account for the presence of only eighty-two delegates from Great Britain and Ireland. Germany sent 210, a smart body of bright, robust, intelligent men; and Switzerland ninety-five.

The delegates of the various nationalities, twenty-four countries in all, were received on their arrival in the City Theatre. In the afternoon of the first day an inaugural service was held in the Cathedral, when, after some magnificent singing an appropriate address was delivered by Prof. C. Von Orelli (Basle) from the incident of the Transfiguration. The presidency of the International Conference passed from the hands of Sir George Williams, who was present, and who manifested his usual brightness and geniality, into those of a local Y.M.C.A. supporter,

M. REINHOLD SARASIN-WARNERY.

This gentleman, at the close of the conference, received a hearty acknowledgment of his efficient chairmanship.

At the commencement of the proceedings the president was supported by five members of the Association who were present together at the first International Conference, held in Paris in 1855. They received an ovation when this fact was announced; they are the sole survivors of that gathering:—Sir George Williams, Rev. Professor Barde (Geneva), M. Van Osterwijk Bruyn (Zeist, Holland), Professor Gladstone (London), and M. Max Perrot (Geneva). After prayer, representatives of various countries gave brief reports of work. Amongst those whose presence and testimony elicited most interest were Luis de Vasgas (Barcelona, Spain), who at the close of his address grasped hands with R. C. Morse (America), Cartwright (South Africa), Da Silva (Portugal), Findeisen (Russia), and Kawaje (Japan). The Portuguese representative reported that in 1894, the date of the last conference, there was no association in Portugal. They began in Oporto, in the face of priestly opposition and much superstition. Now there are six associations, with 300 members, the last having been formed in Lisbon, in May of this year, with sixty members. There is also an association in Portuguese Africa, with fifty members.

During the Conference, which lasted continuously for five days, interesting papers, with no time for discussion, were read on "The Present Standing of the Y.M.C.A.," by M. Emmanuel Sautter (Paris) and by Mr. L. W. Messer (Chicago). The former said that Protestantism is even now only tolerated in France; it is not recognised in the National Code; that there is an increasing interest in Y.M.C.A. work in the country, which formerly looked askance at it; that they found great help in the and rejoiced in the bonds that thus united them to these lands, where their young men found a ready welcome. Mr. Messer's paper was an able résumé of the position and theory of Y.M.C.A. work in America, but did not deal with the matter from a general point of view. It is remarkable that with so admirably organised a work as the Y.M.C.A. in that enterprising country, the membership should be steadily declining. "The Dangers Threatening the Association" were dealt with in a paper by Mr. Armstrong (Newcastle); and by a Swiss delegate, who threw no new or broad light on the subject.

Then came papers on work amongst soldiers, students, and railway men—efforts which have special organisations to supervise them in England, but which are being taken up with spirit by the Y.M.C.A. in some countries. Mr. Putterill (London) read a paper on "Work amongst Soldiers," which showed the advantages derived from concentration and specialisation. Dr. Karl Fries (National Secretary, Sweden) dealt with "Work among Students," pointing out that these youths are exposed to strong temptations, with which they are wholly unable to cope without a knowledge of the Gospel. Mr. J. R. Mott (America), who also took up this subject, said that students are emphatically the most important class in all lands to overtake with the Gospel. During this session a telegram was sent from the Conference to the President of the Swiss Republic, and was suitably acknowledged. One of the sentiments that found expression and was heartily greeted was that "not mere growth," but "God-pleasing" in the work was to be the special aim.

One feels at such a conference as this that there is a lack in getting at the heart of the subjects. There is no time for discussion, and the readers of papers naturally paint their subjects largely in couleur de rose. A fuller view would be elicited if the subject were first treated by a Y.M.C.A. man, then by a minister, and lastly by a non-member and non-cleric. During the Conference a bell was rung on the platform at the expiration of the time allotted to each reader. Through carelessness in the matter of time, or through inexperience, many of the speakers were arrested ere half their tale was told. This militated against the usefulness of the Conference.

Carefully written and earnest papers were read on the closing day of the Conference by Mr. Van Osterwijk Bruyn (Holland) and by Mr. Archibald Kennedy (Edinburgh) on the topic "Aggressive Work amongst Young Men." In the afternoon an enthusiastic business meeting was held, votes of thanks were passed, the work accomplished by the Central International Committee was reviewed, and directions were given as to the main lines of aggressive work to which attention was to be devoted in the interval before the next Conference. This session was impressively closed by the reading of a passage of Scripture and the pronouncing of the Benediction in German, French, and English.

World's Sunday School Convention.

THE third World's Sunday School Convention is meeting in London this week. The delegates, numbering nearly 2500, represent about 24,000 Sunday schools in different parts of the world, two and a-half million of teachers, and twenty-five million scholars.

The proceedings of the Convention began on Monday afternoon with a reception at the Bible Society's House in Queen Victoria-street. In the course of the visit, which lasted from four o'clock to half-past six, Mr. Caleb R. Kemp, chairman of the Bible Society Committee, offered a warm welcome to the delegates. Dr. Wright, editorial secretary, gave a sketch of the development of the English Bible; and, referring to the loss of the Treaty of Arbitration, said that what they really longed for was the union of Christian hearts. England and America were really united already, and what God had joined let no man put asunder.

A great crowd of the delegates gathered at the Mansion House by the invitation of the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress. The Lord Mayor welcomed the visitors, and a contingent of the London Sunday School Choir, numbering forty voices, rendered a programme of music. In the evening the Lord Mayor presided at a short meeting. It afforded him great pleasure, he said, to see so many friends from all parts of the world in the centre of the City of London. He desired to welcome the Convention in the name of the citizens. Several delegates acknowledged the greeting, after which, at the suggestion of an American delegate, "God Save the Queen" was heartily sung.

Dr. Barnardo's Canadian Emigrants.

AT the noonday meeting in Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. on Monday last Dr. Barnardo was present with a company of his boys, and gave a brief résumé of the work in Canada under his care. It was very interesting to look at the bright faces of the little lads who have been trained and educated in the Homes, and are now going forth with such hopefulness to the new land of their adoption. None of the girls were at the meeting; but Dr. Barnardo informed the audience that the party which would sail this week would consist of 130 boys and 120 girls—250 emigrants in all. The only drawback with regard to their departure was that up to date forty-nine of their number had not been paid for, and at the rate of £10 per child this would mean that he still wanted £490.

Some of the incidents Dr. Barnardo mentioned showed the success attending previous emigrants, and were extremely striking. It seemed as though emigration literally transformed the hopes and the chances of children of the labouring class into very bright prospects indeed on the other side. This contingent of 250, if it sails this week, will bring the total number sent out under Dr. Barnardo's auspices to 9806. He hoped this year to be permitted to send another 250, which would bring his total to over 10,000. Donations in aid of the Emigration Fund will be thankfully received by Dr. Barnardo at 18, Stepney-causeway.

A Free Churchman's Concern.

ON Sunday evening Rev. F. B. Meyer preached to a great audience on "A Free Churchman's Concern for the Condition of the National Church." He enumerated the secret societies which are honeycombing her life; and dealt with the answers now being made by the Romanisers in the public Press and elsewhere. He said that he was compelled to make the protest, first, as being by right of birth a member of the National Church; next, in the interests of the children who are forced to attend the National Schools; also on behalf of the virility and truthfulness of the nation, which were likely to be seriously impaired if Romish principles were allowed to have predominance; but chiefly on behalf of the upper classes, who never heard the pure Gospel of Christ. The sermon was received with profound attention, and requests were made for its publication.

Field-lane Institution.—The harvest here is ready, but the labourers are few. The secretary informs us that last week the total attendances at the twenty-eight different meetings held amounted to 2904, but the workers numbered only seventy-one. The secretary of the institution, Mr. Peregrine Platt, Vine-street, Clerkenwell-road, E.C., would gladly welcome inquiries for further information on the part of friends who may be moved to lend a hand in the work, especially on Sunday, Tuesday, and Friday evenings.

The "Burned-up" Tabernacle.—During the last few months of the Metropolitan Tabernacle several of the rooms were photographed, also various articles of interest connected with the memory of Mr. Spurgeon. In view of the intense interest taken in all that pertained to the building, it has been deemed advisable to issue them in the form of an album to a limited number of subscribers. The album will contain about forty half-plate size photographs, entitled "Pictorial Recollections of the Metropolitan Tabernacle." The price to subscribers will be two guineas, and the issue is limited to 100 copies. The whole of the proceeds will be given to the building fund. Specimens of the photographs may be seen at the Secretary's Office, College Buildings, Temple-street, S.E.

Country Ministers' Convention.—An excellent example recently set by a neighbouring church has been taken up this week by the Lyndhurst-road Church at Hampstead. Some thirty pastors of small country churches, whose income would not permit them such a holiday unaided, have been invited by the congregation to spend from Tuesday to Friday in Hampstead, all expenses being paid. For each of the three mornings, meetings have been arranged for ministers only, for addresses and discussion on questions affecting their work, public meetings being held in the evening for addresses by Drs. Monro Gibson and R. F. Horton on the first occasion, and by the guests on their work on the second. This being the week of midsummer prayer-meetings, the services of each day begin at 7.15 a.m., and at 1 p.m. lunch at a fixed price has been served in the church-room; the afternoons being employed in conducting the guests about London.

THE BOOK WORLD.

THE NEW BIBLICAL GUIDE.

Rev. John Urquhart is editing a series of volumes entitled The New Biblical Guide, in the hope of doing something thereby to allay the doubts of those who have come under the influence of modern critical theories, and with the design also of supplying information from the field of archæological research confirmatory and illustrative of Sacred Scripture. In the preface to the first volume of the series, just issued (7s. 6d. net. Marshall Brothers), Mr. Urquhart shows that the criticism which would reconstruct Old Testament history raises questions for which ordinary people are demanding answers. To supply these is the object of "The New Biblical Guide." "It will be shown (Mr. Urquhart says) that all this rests on no new discovery, on no manuscript or other evidence, but only upon a dream of Hegel's, who applied the principle of development to history and religion, as Darwin afterwards applied it to nature. It will be shown that the supposed basis is a delusion, and that criticism is crushed by its own weight."

The present volume consists of eight contributions: (1) How to Read the Bible (with special reference to Higher Criticism), by Rev. Dr. Baxter, author of the well-known work, "Sanctuary and Sacrifice: A Reply to Wellhausen"; (2) "Dangers in the Literary Study of the Holy Scriptures," a brief but luminous paper by Rev. Dr. Moule; (3) "The Canon of the Old Testament" and (4) "History of the Old Testament Text," by Rev. John Macpherson, of Findhorn; (5) "The Inspiration and Divine Authority of the Scriptures," by Rev. James Smith, of Tarland; (6) "The Scripture Doctrine of Inspiration," by Principal Douglas, D.D.; "The Antiquity of Writing in Israel," by Professor Sayce; and "Old Testament Difficulties," by the Editor. Containing five hundred large pages, this goodly volume will be welcome to many. The purpose is practical; therefore results of inquiry are given rather than details of the processes of investigation. Many a preacher and teacher will find in this work just the information he requires as to the history of the canon and the integrity and authority of the sacred Scriptures.

Miss Elizabeth's Niece. By M. S. Haycraft. (Partridge & Co.) A wholesome tale in which misunderstanding, separation, and ultimate reunion read lessons of mutual love and forbearance.

From Messrs. Cassell & Co. we have part x. of Sacred Art (6d.) and part xv. of The Queen's Empire (6d.). The illustrations in both serials are in the highest order of photographic reproduction.

Messrs. Bliss, Sands, & Co. are issuing a "pocket Falstaff" edition of Shakespeare's Plays. Judging from two we have received, "Antony and Cleopatra" and "King Henry IV.," the type is eminently readable.

The Great Eastern Railway Company issue a Tourist Guide to the Continent, which will be useful to holiday makers at this season. It is edited by Percy Lindley, and has many illustrations and maps. (6d. 30, Fleet-street, E.C.)

My Home and Household Compendium. By J. W. Jarvis and W. J. Woods. (Simpkin.) Embodies an excellent idea. Ample space is allotted to a detailed household inventory for insurance purposes, and there is much information valuable to householders.

A useful manual in Pitman's "Rapid" series is The Tourist's Vade Mecum of German Colloquial Conversation, with vocabularies, tables, etc. As the pronunciation is indicated throughout, the book will prove of service to many. (1s. Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons).

The Spaniard in History. By James C. Fernald. (3s. Funk & Wagnalls.) This readable epitome of Spanish history is quite up to date, and ought to find many readers at the present time. The pivot fact of the recital is that "Spain to-day is the Spain of all time."

Dr. Cunningham Geikie's cultured pen is never idle, and by periodical revision he brings his writings well up to date. He has now issued, through Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co., an improved edition of his Short Life of Christ (3s. 6d.). This work will be welcome in the school as well as the home; as it is comprehensive in scope and simple in style. Moreover, it is embellished with illustrations, some of them reproduced from new photographs of spots famous in Bible story.

Those who engage in uplifting work among the artisan and labouring classes will find much to interest and instruct in The Evangelical-Social Movement in Germany, by Paul Göhre (Ideal Publishing Co., 33, Paternoster-row). Translated and abridged by Janet E. Kay Shuttleworth, the book unfolds the history and aims of a great movement which is only too little understood in Great Britain.

A deeply interesting addition to Gladstone literature is Sermons Preached in Memory of the Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone in Hawarden Parish Church on Sunday after Ascension Day, May 22, 1898. Four in number, the sermons are by the Bishop of Rochester, Dean Wickham, Rev. the Hon. Arthur T. Lyttelton, and Rev. Harry Drew. The booklet is published for the benefit of Mrs. Gladstone's orphanage at Hawarden. (1s. Cassell & Co.)

Those engaged in work among the young will find abundant material for addresses in Tin Tacks for Tiny Folks, by Mr. Chas. Edwards, of Winchester. (2s. 6d. Allenson.) It forms a useful compendium of story, suggestion, and Bible outlines, leaving ample scope for the personal thought and originality of the speaker. To many of our readers the author is already well known by his occasional contributions to our columns.

Sunday-school teachers and conductors of Bible-classes who bring the light of archæological research to bear upon the Scripture lesson will be able to interest their scholars in this important branch of study by the use of The Teacher's Roll of Bible Illustrations, just issued by Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode (3s. 6d.; mounted on linen, 7s. 6d.). The illustrations are arranged chronologically, and exhibit the principal results of research in the great field of Biblical archæology. A descriptive book, by Rev. C. J. Ball, accompanies the roll, which should prove of great service in popularising information of great importance in the confirmation of faith in the sacred Scriptures.

Bible Characters: Gideon to Absalom. By Alexander Whyte, D.D. (3s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.) We have here a second instalment of Dr. Whyte's inimitable pictures of Old Testament character. We know of no other man who could paint them with the same wealth of colour and power of impression. He illuminates and restores these old-world portraits till they seem as though the originals were living and moving among the men of to-day. Whether it be the tragic, the idyllic, or the homiletic he is equally at home. A leisurely walk through this gallery of ancients is experience to be coveted and not to be lightly forgotten. When Dr. Whyte has put the finishing touches on his last sacred miniature he will have given us a new "People's Bible," quite unique of its kind, and as valuable as it is unique. May he be spared to accomplish it!

A short time ago we called attention to the "Self and Sex" series, the first volume of which was addressed to lads, and entitled "What a Young Boy Ought to Know." The second of the series, now before us, is designed for youths of larger growth, as its title indicates: What a Young Man Ought to Know (4s. Vir Publishing Co., 44, Fleet-street). Like its predecessor, this book is by Dr. Sylvanus Stall, of Philadelphia, and has the endorsement of universally trusted friends of youth, including Drs. F. E. Clark and J. Wilbur Chapman, the former of whom says: "The book is written reverently, but very plainly, and I believe will save a multitude of young men from evils unspeakable. I shall give it to my own son, and commend it to other young men as I have opportunity." These words, by the president of Christian Endeavour, express a sound judgment and disclose a purpose that seems to us wise and safe. After reading this book, young men will be armed against many evils, and will be likely to have a wholesome fear of impurity and its terrible consequences.

Lieut.-Col. F. Roberts has issued a booklet on the words "A Double Portion," 2 Kings ii. 9. It is particularly interesting for the light it throws upon number in Scripture. (1d. Partridge.)

A booklet which will be of service in many a home is EXAMPLES OF VEGETARIAN COOKERY, for inquirers, collected by Amy G. Theobald. (3d. Unwin Bros., Gresham Press, Pilgrim-street, London, E.C.)

OUR HERITAGE. The July issue has, with other useful matter on Sunday observance, an important article on special Sunday trains for theatrical companies, a growing evil which demands notice. (1d. Partridge & Co.)

THE SILVER CITY (Headley Bros.), the work of allegory recently noticed in these columns is from the pen of Margaret E. Ashby, of the well known Friend family. By error the author of the work was given as Ashley.

A useful expository pamphlet, replete with information about the Jews, is THE MESSIAH AND HIS PEOPLE ISRAEL, from the pen of Rev. A. C. Gaebelein, superintendent of the "Hope of Israel" Mission to the Jews, New York. (The Author, 128, Second-street, New York.)

Mr. T. H. Stockwell is editing a "Penny Library of the Free Churches," the first of which tells THE STORY OF THE BAPTISTS: Who they are, and What they Believe, by Rev. J. C. Carlile (A. H. Stockwell & Co., 17, Paternoster-row). The subsequent issues of the series will deal with the various other denominations, the object being to make known, especially among the younger people of the congregations, the leading principles for which the Free Churches stand.

"Lawlessness in the Church."

THIS subject is still being discussed from day to day in The Times. The following letter, by Lady Wimborne, is from Monday's issue:—

SIR,—The attention of the public having been much drawn of late to the ritualistic practices of some of the clergy of the Church of England, and being myself immensely impressed with the inconceivable indifference with which the world in general view the persistent and determined efforts of this section to Romanise both the doctrine and services of our Church, I should like to give an account of a service I attended this morning, appealing through your columns to an intelligent public to know whether such a service is in harmony with the spirit of our Prayer Book, or with that response which I see was signed by seventy of the London clergy—including the vicar of the church to which I am referring—to the Bishop of London's letter.

I went at 11 o'clock, at which hour the service commenced. The whole morning service, with psalms and lessons, with the exception only of the two prayers for the Royal Family and the one for the clergy, was read through in the incredibly short space of twenty minutes by two clergymen, the congregation consisting of four people besides myself and my friend. There was no choir and no singing, evidently showing the very small importance which is attached in such churches to our Morning Prayer. Then, after an interval of ten minutes, during which the congregation increased to about fifty or sixty, followed what is termed the "High Celebration." A full choir entered, then a procession of acolytes carrying cross and candles, followed by a priest in gorgeous vestments, and then commenced a service which, but for the use of the English formula, was in every other sense and to all outward appearance the Romish Mass pur et simple.

The acolytes remained for long spaces with their heads on the ground, then swinging censers and going through elaborate changes of position along with the priest, which must, to say the least of it, take much rehearsing to accomplish with such exactitude. The elements were never even offered to the people, who certainly showed no desire to partake—a strong proof in itself of the Romish meaning the service conveyed to their minds. In short, the whole ceremony was such a travesty of the most solemn part of our worship, that I can hardly describe the feelings of pain with which I sat through what purported to be a service of the Church of England.

If I am asked for what reason I attended a church of this character, I would explain that I did so for a purpose—viz., that I had collected and been entrusted with a sum of money for a certain home, and, having been warned of the ritualistic management of the home and of the tendencies and teaching of the vicar who occupied the position of chaplain, I felt bound in conscience to go and judge for myself. The result has been to convince me that the doctrines of the Church of England can obviously not be taught by a clergyman who practises such services in his own church; and while the home is in the hands of such an extreme party, we have no right to appeal for support to a public who I feel sure, for the most part, do not at heart approve of the ends the ritualists have in view, however much through ignorance or apathy they may tolerate the means they employ. For the Roman Catholic religion we may have some respect, but for this spurious imitation of it, which deludes people by ritual into a tacit acceptance of doctrines which we rejected long years ago, I for one can only have the greatest abhorrence.

CORNELIA WIMBORNE.

Wimborne House, Arlington-street, July 10.

P.S.—I refrain from naming the church and vicar, but will furnish the information to any who would like to verify for themselves the statements I have made.

Rosemary Mission, Shepperton-road, N.—The report of the well-established Ragged School Mission refers to the aid rendered by some of the C.M.S. students. The Sunday-school has now 860 children on the books. From the infant to the Bible-class good work is in progress; the night-school is most satisfactory, and the mission services attract cheering audiences. This admirable institution urgently needs fresh workers and additional annual subscribers. The superintendent is Mr. F. Warman, 1, Alwyne-road, N.

A "Protestant Thousand" has been formed in Manchester (which has grown out of the Citizens' Committee for maintaining the rights of free speech) to combat the sacerdotalism that is so rampant in the country. Members of all parties have joined it, and it seems full of enthusiasm.

A conference in London between employers and employed in the miners' federation district agreed to a series of proposals, which, if adopted by the men, will maintain industrial peace in the greater part of the mining area of England for two years, beginning in January. The conditions proposed have been accepted.

CHARITABLE CONTRIBUTIONS.—1000 guineas from her Majesty to the Queen Victoria Clergy Fund; a legacy of £1000 to the C.M.S. under the will of the late Miss M. Robertson. By his will the late Mr. Wm. Pinney, of Somerton, Erleigh, bequeaths £25 a year for Miss Weston's temperance work at Leigh Camp, and other sums, from £100 to £500, to various hospitals, etc.

The opening ceremony by the Marquis of Northampton of the new building recently acquired and adapted by the Northampton Y.M.C.A. took place, under the presidency of the Mayor, on July 5; and in the evening was followed by a demonstration in the Association Assembly Hall. On Wednesday evening, 6th inst., the president of the Association, Mr. F. G. Adnitt, received a large number of members and friends at a conversazione in the new building.

A very successful convention has been held under the auspices of the Witwatersrandt and District Christian Endeavour Union, South Africa. Early in the morning of Whit Monday most of the larger railway stations within a radius of about fifty miles were alive with delegates. The hymns were sung both in Dutch and English, and the convention was held in a suburb of Johannesburg.

A petition, which has been extensively signed, has been presented to the licensing justices of the licensing division of Newington with regard to the sale of drink to children. Having reminded the justices of the resolution dealing with the matter which they had unanimously passed in September, 1897, the memorial states that in some of the poorer parishes of the Newington division there has been a marked increase, instead of decrease, in the sale of drink to children since the passing of the resolution.

"Temperance Week" was observed in London last week. At the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, representatives from nearly all the principal temperance societies throughout England were welcomed at a breakfast given at the offices of the National United Temperance Council. There has been a most disastrous collision in the Atlantic, between the French liner Bourgogne, and the British ship Cromartyshire. An indescribable scene occurred on board. At least 600 persons are reported drowned. The crew seem to have behaved in a shameful manner to women and children.

THE WAR.—The week has been a most eventful one. The complete destruction of Admiral Cervera's fleet has caused consternation in Madrid, but although peace rumours are abundant, nothing tangible has come from them. Spanish honour has not yet—it would appear—been satisfied. Admiral Camara is returning to Cadiz. Meanwhile reinforcements have reached the American camp at Santiago. The United States terms of peace are reported to be the independence of Cuba and the surrender of Porto Rico and the Philippines, a coaling station in the Canaries, and an indemnity. Later telegrams announce the re-bombardment of Santiago on Sunday.

The claims to increased support for the Curates' Augmentation Fund is seen in the fact that curates now number more than one-third of the parochial clergy, and they are increasing much more rapidly than the benefices, hence the growing number of aged curates, whose incomes show a tendency to decrease as they advance in years.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

ONCE more we remind our readers that thousands of poor children are longing for that one bright Day in the Country, which to the prisoners of London's dull courts and alleys means so much. From all quarters workers amongst the poor are asking for help to give their children this annual treat. Our fund for this purpose is now open, but it is still very far short of the amount needed to meet the claims which seem most urgent. We hope many of our kind readers will consider how much they can spare to aid in giving the children a glimpse of the green fields and a taste of the fresh air. We should be glad to hear at once from all who are willing to help in this matter.

That the World's Sunday-school Convention has been carried through so successfully was only what we expected. From all parts of the world Christian men and women have been drawn to a common centre, to discuss in its manifold relations the training of the children of the Church and the children of the people for Jesus Christ. How much prayer has been offered for a rich blessing to rest upon all the deliberations of the Convention no human lips can tell; but the Father of Mercies has heard them every one. It is no surprise that so much spiritual power and impulse and union pervaded the assemblies, with the Master of Assemblies in the midst.

"The children for Christ" should always be the prayerful purpose of the Church. For the young to be equipped for life's duties through comradeship with Christ, no enterprise can have more of the Divine favour resting upon it. May the homeland, with its loyal band of labourers in this important service, long feel the inspiring stimulus of the Convention! Our guests on their return home manifest more ardour than ever in the great cause, and the Sunday-schools of the world reap a lasting benefit.

One of the most striking and hopeful features of the late meetings of the Federation for the Abolition of State Regulation of Vice was the large number of young men present from the Continent. They are thoroughly well informed on the question, and have a firm grasp of the great moral principles involved. The intenseness of their devotion to purity work is seen in the ardour of their labours at home to serve both men and women, and in the readiness with which they gave time and means to travel to a distant city in order to confer upon plans to be adopted for abolishing one of the most destructive systems a sinful ingenuity ever invented. One of them was the originator of the midnight meeting movement for men in Holland. So long as France, Switzerland, Holland, Germany, Denmark, Sweden, and Austria have such devoted reformers as were gathered together last week in London, especially so long as they send young men, there is a good pledge given of a better future. But we noticed very few young Englishmen at the Congress. Were they all at the Sunday School Convention?

Those who remember with disgust the dastardly and vulgar insults heaped by men claiming to be cultured and refined upon our noble and heroic countrywoman Mrs. Josephine Butler, in the early days of her agitation against the worst and most cowardly form of slavery, will sympathise with the American gentleman who last week, at the influential meeting in Exeter Hall, expressed his assurance that when our heroine lays down her labour with her life her remains will rest in Westminster Abbey. The "Grand Old Man" lies there, whom England delighted to honour. He first passed those depraved and desolating Acts, not knowing what he did. England would honour herself far more than it would honour her by giving Mrs. Butler a burial-place among her most highly honoured dead. Her name will be revered when those of many who lie there are covered with the dust of oblivion. She has given herself a living sacrifice for the salvation of her sex from outrage and dishonour, against the protests not only of cultured cynics but of some Christian mothers, who will never know their indebtedness to her until they see time in the light of eternity. No one could have looked into her weary but indomitable face without feeling that, like Paul, she was always bearing about in her body the dying of the Lord Jesus.

The death of Mrs. Lynn Linton has revived in the public memory some of her strongly pronounced opinions, among others her objection to missionary work :—

> The modern craze for missionary work in unlikely and unsympathetic countries, where the lives of the missionaries are in danger, where the converts they make are for the most part unredeemed scoundrels, and where the civilisation of the people is older and more compact than our own, better suited to the needs of the people.

How strangely out of accord this is with the New Testament, or even with Church history. When did the Gospel ever find a country that, to begin with, was "likely and sympathetic"? where, at first, the lives of the missionaries were not in danger? and where the converts were not unredeemed scoundrels, etc.? Paul himself was "in perils oft"; and what does he say was the original state of the Romans and the Greeks, and what about the civilisation of the Jew as compared with that of the Gentile?

In the South Wales coal dispute the masters took a very serious step in refusing the offices of the conciliator offered by the Government. The appointment of Sir E. Fry was purely with a view to easing the troubled process of negotiations which can often be more successfully attained through the medium of a friendly third party than by the disputants in direct contact. The result of this refusal has been the failure of the further efforts at settlement between the representatives of both sides. The widespread suffering and ruin caused by the industrial war continues and spreads, and no one knows how long this will last. Public sentiment will continue to urge both sides to accept conciliation, and if necessary arbitration on the main points at issue.

The deliberations of the Treasury Committee on Old Age Pensions leave the question where it was, for the Committee states it as its conviction that it is impossible to formulate a satisfactory scheme of State pensions. The alternatives are a wider scale of philanthropic effort and a better education of the poor to make some provision for old age. No doubt much may be done in both directions. Where the earnings of the industrious poor are so small that they cannot make any adequate provision for the time of inability there is a claim on the philanthropy of the nation. But a great deal remains to be done in awakening the mind of the working classes to the need of frugality and foresight. Many live so much in the present that they have no thought or care as to what shall become of them in old age.

A very remarkable meeting of Jews has been held in Whitechapel. It was convened by the Federation of Synagogues, which consists of twenty-six such places of worship. The meeting was presided over by Sir Samuel Montague, Bart., M.P. Its object was to impress upon the working classes the imperious necessity, both on physical and religious grounds, of Sabbath observance. Resolutions were passed affirming the necessity of the Sabbath, and pledging the meeting to do all in its power to acquire a better observance of the day. And for Christian people, too, the argument for Sabbath observance amongst the Jews has equal force for the observance of the Lord's Day. Not in indolence and inactivity is the day put to its highest use. Not in the pursuit of pleasure on this day is the physical nature renewed for active duties. He who spends the day in the spiritual presence of the King, eternal, immortal, invisible, and engaged in some definite Christian work for the kind Christ's sake, keeps most religiously the Lord's Day. At its close he will find that the "uplift" of fellowship with God has quickened his soul, and change of occupation has renewed his body. For a healthy manhood, spiritual and physical, the observance of the Lord's Day is indispensable.

"Is Sunday a Common Holiday?" is a question which Professor Marcus Dods answers in a very satisfactory manner in The Sunday Magazine. He goes back to the fact that our Sunday became a Christian holy day out of joy and reverence for the resurrection of our Saviour which it celebrated. "The Gentile Christians did not base the regard they felt for the first day of the week on any past institution; their observance of the day had its root solely and simply in the Resurrection of Christ." The day is a sacred commemoration; its origin determines the character of its observance. To depart from the original purpose is to be untrue. A son who sets apart one day a year on which to visit his mother's grave is dominated by that idea, and he finds he cannot put the day to any other uses, however excellent.

He who thinks of the Resurrection cannot turn the Lord's Day into a common holiday.

The surrender of Santiago has come as an immense relief to everyone. It stays bloodshed for the time being, and diminishes the probability of an outbreak of yellow fever; it mitigates the sufferings of the civil population, and prepares the way for peace. It is the first voluntary action that has been taken in the interests of peace, as opposed to the dictates of pride, and it may (let us hope it will) prepare the way for the final step. Yet when will Spain learn wisdom? When will she understand how to comport herself in her terrible misfortunes? The country seems hopelessly given over to pleasure. Not yet has she learnt the lesson of her sore defeat. This is what a reliable contemporary publishes:—

On Sunday, although the Government wished to stay the bull fights as a sign of sorrow, the people insisted on the barbarous sport. The fronts of the houses were decorated with tapestries, carpets, gaudy stuffs, dishes, and other brilliant wares. The balconies were thronged, fans flirted, castanets rattled, guitars thrummed, all as usual."

What a picture for Madrid in the day of the nation's irreparable losses by land and sea! We can only pray that by some means this ruinous war may pave the way for the untrammelled spread of the pure Gospel of Jesus Christ amongst her priest-ridden citizens What this old-time people want, in their poverty and pride, is the knowledge of the Son of God as a living, personal Saviour.

Dr. Parker expressed the thought of the Christian heart of England and America when, speaking of the unity of the Anglo-Saxon race and its increasing manifestation, he said if it was to work for God he was with it, but if it was to work against the peace of the world he was not; for God had made of one blood all the nations of the earth. On the same day, in another place, Mr. Aaron M. Powell, of New York, expressed his grave fears that recent events would call into existence a strong military force, and that they would be beset in America, through their army, with some of the same difficulties as trouble us in England. The two nations together must guard against strengthening and developing a race hatred, and America alone will do well still to avoid the errors of the old world in the development of an expensive military system.

The good work of the Churches in the American camp at Tampa is borne witness to by the newspapers. A few weeks ago the condition of the town was represented by the correspondent of the New York Christian Herald in the following words: "Never was Tampa so wicked as now." That was the result of the unavoidably lax discipline of a hastily improvised military camp. The same observer, however, continues: "But at the same time never was Tampa so good, and virtuous, and Christian as now." That was the fruit of the efforts of those who had been at work among the soldiers, and were holding extraordinary religious services among them —General Howard and Major Whittle taking a prominent part. The former told with effect the story of his conversion in the Methodist Church of Tampa forty years ago.

"Lead Poisoning Day by Day" is the gruesome title of a daily paragraph in the Daily Chronicle. It records in every case debility, disease, or death from preventable causes in the Potteries. Companion pen pictures might be given from the lucifer match factories, where matches are made to strike anywhere, at the cost of the horrors of "phossy jaw." It is a strange and painful reflection that, while advancing civilisation makes convenience a condition and elegance an essential of modern life, it fails to produce inventions which would take the murder out of them. Christ taught us to love our neighbour as ourselves, and one of our own poets has exhorted us

Never to blend our pleasure or our pride
With sorrow of the meanest thing that feels.

It will be painful to meet at the judgment throne the poisoned people, killed or incapacitated that our taste might be pleased by a perfect glaze on our earthenware or our convenience met by being able to strike a match not "only on the box."

The special favour shown some time ago to Roman Catholicism in Manchester by the municipal authorities has led to the formation of a "Protestant Thousand," composed of Conservatives and Liberals, Churchmen and Nonconformists, who set themselves the task of organising "the vast latent Protestant opinion" of their city, and directing it in favour of Protestantism. The chairman says:—

When we see a candidate or party entertaining the desire to secure the Catholic vote by concessions to Romish interests or Romish prejudice, we shall endeavour to convince such person or organisation that there are other interests that it may be equally desirable and necessary for them to consider. We shall watch carefully the various manifestations of Romish activity, and we shall resist strenuously every endeavour to restrict the right of free speech, to secure grants for Romish institutions, to replace Protestants by Romanists in lucrative public offices, and generally to secure that while no man in public employ shall be molested for his religion, no man shall be advanced for it.

The proposal has been made in the British Weekly that there should be a Protestant Eighty Club which should send lecturers and others into the whole country, to inform opinion and arouse feeling. If the bishops maintain their present do-nothing policy, it will certainly aid in exciting universal indignation, and then a violent change may follow.

It is said, on what appears to be good authority, that there are several private houses in London belonging to "the better classes" which are nothing but gambling hells for "ladies." A writer in Cassell's Saturday Journal declares that afternoons are set apart for playing for low or high stakes. "There is no convivial excitement beforehand or during play. The ladies take afternoon tea. The men usually can get a whisky and soda in the back dining-room if they want one; but it is no case of drinking deep to drown losses, and gambling hard through intoxication." There is apparently no deliberate luring of a young man to destruction; but if a young man wishes to gamble he is invited all round, and no one cares if he is stripped of his last sixpence. It is a sordid, wretched scene, of ladies, some of high rank, seeking gain and excitement in sinful pleasure—a Monte Carlo in what should be a home.

A second Samuel Plimsoll is needed; for a sea officer has said that the crimp flourishes still at Antwerp, Hamburg, and Rotterdam, where 20,000 sailors are paid off annually, and the money they carry with them into the slums exceeds a quarter of a million pounds. The men who carry on the trade there appear to be quite gentlemen. Two of them in partnership (what are the deeds of partnership like?) in Hamburg made a profit of £3,000 a year by crimping. At the boarding-house of such a man the sailor is charged a shilling for each box of matches. Even at Hull, London, Liverpool, Cardiff, and Glasgow the crimp, as a clothier or a boarding-house keeper, often does a lucrative business. It is the long-voyage sailor, the man with long arrears of pay due to him, who gains the crimp's attention, and that notwithstanding the services of the Board of Trade; for the Board of Trade cannot aid a sailor who is discharged at his own port He must there take care of himself, or suffer.

*Daniel's Great Prophecy.

YET another book on Prophecy, representing the Futurist view. The author, like Mr. B. W. Newton, Dr. Tregelles, Mr. Robert Brown, the late Mr. George Müller, and others, rejects the theory of a secret rapture of the saints, and believes that those alive at the coming of the Lord will have passed through the Great Tribulation. He says:—

From Moses to Malachi, and from Matthew to the Apocalypse by John, the Resurrection of the Sleeping Saints is placed at no other epoch than the close of the "Tribulation Great" and the "Warfare Great." The idea, therefore, of a Secret Parousia for the resurrection of the holy dead, prior to the appearing of the Son of Man in the clouds of heaven at the close of the Tribulation, is contrary to the Word of God. To this time point of the revelation of Christ in his glory, to raise the dead, deliver Israel, and destroy the Antichrist, the hope of both Old and New Testaments was directed. Matt. xxiv. 29-31, 40, 44; 2 Thes. i. 6-10; ii. 1-8; 1 Thes. iv. 14-17; Rev. xi. 17; xiv. 13-20; xix. 11-21; xx. 1-6; xvi. 15; Dan. xii. 1-3; Matt. xiii. 40. In view of that hope, Old Testament martyrs, accounting themselves dead even before the tyrant had struck them, refused to "accept deliverance" at the cost of forswearing their faith. The New Testament martyrs did the same. The "better thing" they grasped by faith was the "better resurrection," when both, washed in the blood of Christ (Heb. ix. 15), should together be perfected, body and soul, in the likeness of Christ at his second coming, and satisfied. One in Christ, and one with each other, both saved in the same way. God foresaw and provided the plan concerning us, "that they, apart from us, should not be made perfect" (Heb. xi. 35, 40). Moses and Paul, Isaiah and John, are one in Christ.

It will thus be seen that Dr. West does not hold that view of the Church which regards it as having a higher place in the ages to come than the elders who "all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them and greeted them from afar, and having confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth"—a higher place, indeed, than Abraham, the father of believers and the friend of God, to whom it was given, two thousand years before the fact, to rehearse in type the offering by God the Father of his only begotten Son. A division of the redeemed which has always seemed to us incredible.

For ourselves, we cannot adopt any of the prophetic systems of interpretation in their entirety. If the axiom be true, and none will deny it, that "history repeats itself," then we see that the Pagan and Papal Antichristianism is the same in essence as that which awaits its judgment at the coming of Christ. Therefore there has been a past, there is a present, and there must be a future, fulfilment of the prophecy. The preterite, the present, and the future are all one stream of time. Perhaps the "Peace, Peace, when there is no peace," will be "the torrent's smoothness ere it dash below."

Let it be added that there is also an interpretation known to those who know themselves; for man is a microcosm, and the principles and forces seen on the platform of nations, on the scale of centuries, have their counterpart in the lifetime of the individual soul. See James iv. 1-4.

On another occasion we may quote the eloquent and exhilarating passage in which the learned author, an accomplished scholar and an able teacher, describes "the Splendour of the Risen Saints." We now content ourselves with the poem with which the book is closed, though the poetry of his verses is prosaic compared with the poetry of his prose.

John xvi. 33.

BY REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

IT was the road between Jerusalem and the Gate of the Garden. Behind, lay the city bathed in slumber; before, the Mount of Olives with its terraced gardens; above, the Passover moon, pouring down floods of silver light that dropped to the ground through the waving branches of the trees. The Lord was on his way to betrayal and death, along that path flecked by chequered moonlight.

The farewell talk had been prolonged until the disciples had grasped something of the Master's meaning. With many a comforting assurance it had borne them forward to the magnificent but simple declaration, I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world: again, I leave the world, and go to the Father (verse 28). At that announcement light seems to have broken in upon their hearts, and they said unto Him, Lo, now speakest Thou plainly, ... by this we believe that Thou camest forth from God. Jesus replied, not as our translators render it, Do ye now believe? but as it should be rendered, At last ye believe! and He proceeded to formulate three paradoxes:—

First, that within an hour or so He would be alone, yet not alone.

Secondly, that they would have tribulation, and yet be in peace.

Thirdly, that though He was going to his death, He was certainly a conqueror, and had overcome the world, whose princes were about to crucify Him.

That word overcome appears to have been used only this once by our Lord; but it made a lasting impression on the Apostle John, who constantly makes use of it in his Epistles. We meet with it six times in his brief first Epistle, and sixteen times in the Book of Revelation. Who can forget the sevenfold promise spoken by the risen Lord to those who overcome; or the sublime affirmation concerning the martyrs, that they overcame by the blood of the Lamb and by the word of their testimony?

I.—CHRIST AND HIS DISCIPLES HAVE A COMMON FOE—"The world." And what is the world? It is well to take the inspired definition given in 1 John ii. 16. After enumerating her three daughters, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, the Apostle goes on to say: All that is in the world is not of the Father, i.e., does not originate or proceed from Him, but has its source in the world itself. We might reverse this proposition and say: All that does not emanate from the Father, which you cannot trace back to his purpose in creation, is that mysterious indefinable influence or spirit which makes "the world." The world, in this sense, is not primarily a thing, or a collection of people, but a spiritual influence poured out into the very atmosphere of our lives.

The spirit of the world insinuates itself everywhere. It is what we call society; the consensus of fashionable opinion; the spirit which finds its satisfaction in the seen and transient; the ambition that is encircled by the rim of an earthly horizon; the aims, plans, and activities which are comprehended, as the Preacher says, "under the sun." You meet it in the school, where little children judge each other by their dress and the number of horses their fathers keep; in the country town, where strict lines are drawn between the professional or wholesale man and the retailer; in gatherings of well-dressed people, stiff with decorum and the punctilious observance of etiquette.

The world's code says, Do as others do; don't be singular; never offend against good taste; have a tinge of religiousness, but remember too much is impracticable for daily life; whatever you do, don't be poor; never yield an inch, unless you are going to make something by the concession; take every advantage of bettering your position, it matters not at what cost to others—they must look after themselves, as you to yourself.

II.—CHRIST AND HIS DISCIPLES HAVE A COMMON CONFLICT. It is inevitable that there should be collision, and therefore conflict, and, as a result, tribulation. The world-spirit will not brook our disagreement with its plans and aims, and therefore they who persist in living godly lives in this present evil world must suffer persecution.

Conflict about the use of power and prerogative. At his baptism our Lord was proclaimed to be the Son of the Highest, and anointed with the Holy Ghost and with power. Instantly the prince of this world came to Him with the suggestion that He should use it for purposes of his own comfort and display. "Make these stones bread for thine hunger; cast Thyself down and attract the attention of the crowds." But our Lord refused to use for Himself the power which was entrusted to Him for the benediction and help of men.

Conflict as to the way of helping and saving men. The world's way was to at any cost, and from the height of universal authority administer the affairs of the world. But Christ knew better. He saw that He must take the form of a servant, and humble Himself to the lowest. If He would save men, He cannot save Himself: if He would bring forth much fruit, He must fall into the ground and die: if He would ascend far above all heavens, bearing us with Him to the realms of Eternal Day, He must descend first into the lower parts of the earth.

Conflict in the estimate of poverty and suffering. The world looked on these as the most terrible disasters that could befall. Christ, on the other hand, taught that blessedness lay nearest within reach of the poor in spirit, the mourners, the merciful, the forgiving, and the persecuted. But the Pharisees, who were lovers of money, when they heard all these things, scoffed at Him.

Conflict in their diverse notions of royalty.—The Jews looked for a Messiah who should revive the glories of the days of David and Solomon, driving the Gentiles from the land, and receiving the homage of the surrounding nations, whilst every son of Abraham enjoyed opulence and ease. Referring to this expectation, the Master said, "My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight." His conception of royalty was founded on service, which would wash the disciples' feet; on humility, which meekly bore the heavy yoke; on patience, which would not quench the smoking flax; on suffering, which flinched not from the cross; on the nobility and dignity of the inner life, which shone through the most humble circumstances, as the transfiguration glory through his robes. For this He died. The chief priests and scribes hunted Him to death because He persisted in asserting that He was the true King of men. "And Pilate wrote a title also, and put it on the cross, Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews."

There was conflict in regard to religion.—The people of Christ's day were very religious. The WORLD LIKES A FLAVOUR OF RELIGION.

It makes a good background and screen; it hides much that is unbecoming and questionable; it is respectable, and satisfies an instinctive longing of the soul. But the world manages its religion in such a way as not to interfere with its self-aggrandisement, but, in fact, to promote it. Christ, on the other hand, taught that religion was for the Father in secret; and consisted, not in the rigorous observance of outward rite, but in pity, mercy, forgiveness, solitary prayer, and purity of heart.

Child of God, your conflict may be altogether hidden from the eyes of those around you, lonely with the awful loneliness of one in a crowd of unsympathising strangers, painful with the tribulation that Christ foretold. You have been ridiculed, sneered at, maligned; your tools hidden, your goods injured, violence threatened or executed. You have been as a speckled bird, pecked at by the birds around. But this is the way the Master went. By these marks you may be sure that you are in the way of his steps.

III.—THE COMMON VICTORY.—"Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world."

In the midst of a battle, when the soldiers are weary with fatigue, galled with fire, and grimed with smoke, if the general rides into the midst to cheer them with a few hearty words, and tells them that the key of the position is in their hands, they cheer him enthusiastically, and take up new hope. So down the line our leader and commander sends the encouragement of these inspiring words. Let us drink their comfort and encouragement to the full, that, amid our tribulation, in Him we may have peace.

He conquered for Himself.—The Lord has shown that a great and blessed life is possible on conditions which the world pronounces simply unendurable. He would not accept the world's maxims, would not be ruled by the world's principles, did despite to the world's most favourite plans. He even tasted the dregs of reprobation that the world metes out to those who oppose her, enduring the cross, and despising the shame. But his life was blessed while it lasted, his name is the dearest and fairest treasure of our race, and He holds an empire such as none of the world's most favoured conquerors ever won. Does not this show that the world is a lying temptress, that there is another and a better policy of life than hers, that the real sweets and prizes of this brief existence are, after all, not in her gift? Christ has overcome the world. Her prince came to Him, but found no response to any of his proposals. He disregarded her flatteries and threatenings; He would not have her help, and despised her hate; He prosecuted his path in defiance of her, and has left an imperishable glory behind.

THUS HE OVERCAME THE WORLD.

And He conquered as our representative and head.—What He did for Himself He is prepared to repeat in the life-story of his children. Ah! lonely soul, thou shalt not be left unaided to withstand the seductions of the temptress world; Jesus is with thee, so that thou mayest boldly say, "The Lord is my Helper, I will not fear what man can do unto me."

He does more. Behind the light of this world's glory Jesus reveals another; and it is as when the sun rises, while the yellow moon still lingers in the sky. The world has no glory by reason of that glory, which excelleth. We are content with this world until He reveals the glory of the unseen and eternal; then a holy discontent arises within us, such as the patriarchs felt towards Canaan, when by faith they beheld the city which hath foundations. I only say to you, Get that vision, and it becomes as easy for you to refuse the passing and worthless attractions of the world as for an angel to ignore a wanton's beauty, or a child to make light of diamonds in the rough.

In Jesus you may have peace. It is not certainly ours, unless we follow the two conditions He lays down—first, of abiding in Him; and secondly, of meditating on his words. But if these be observed we shall have peace in the midst of strife, just as there is an oratory in the heart of the castle keep a hollow cone in the midst of the candle flame, and a centre of safety in the midst of the sweeping whirlwind. Oh, abide there, child of God!

And in addition to peace, there shall one day be victory. We also shall overcome, and shall sit with Christ on his throne. Then, the fruit of the tree of life, immunity from the second death, the hidden manna, the white stone, the Morning Star, the confession before the angels of God, and the pillar in the temple of Eternity.

FROM OTHER LANDS.

Korea and the Gospel.

THE country of Korea is wide open to the Gospel. It is an independent nation, with a language of its own. Christianity has been carried to that land by Presbyterian and other missionaries. The Presbyterian Society has about thirty representatives. Dr. Underwood and wife reached Korea in 1884, and have a large evangelistic and medical work. They have been kindly received by the Emperor, who is a good and merciful monarch, having a true regard for his people, so that the missionaries are safe and well received in every part.

The Methodist Episcopal Foreign Mission Society has also sent about twenty missionaries to Korea, and both these societies have schools and hospitals. Dr. Scranton sends an excellent report this year. Much prayer has gone up for the people, and much has been answered. The people have proved very receptive of the truth, and there is a general feeling among them that Confucianism and Buddhism do not satisfy. Also, they are convinced that Christianity is the great cause of civilisation and power. There is abundant opening for the work of Christian women as well as men.

The Korean people are gentle, capable, quiet, pastoral. In the rural and mountainous districts they are occupied with cultivating rice, cotton, maize, silk, and other products. The country supplies all its own food and clothing. There is no binding of the feet as in China, and in fact no barbarous customs, and the missionaries are not denounced as "foreign devils."

Occasionally we find a seeking spirit among the people where no teacher has been. I will mention two instances where Christianity has sprung up as it were spontaneously. The old abbot of Suk-wang-sa, though over seventy years of age, and a man of great size and weight, having heard a report of Christ as Saviour, walked twenty miles to the nearest missionary station to ask heart-questions about the "Jesus-Buddha." He admitted that his Buddha had not answered to his deepest desires, and after a short, close interview with the missionary, left, bearing a New Testament and another present. May this Testament bring light and truth to the Monastery of Suk-wang-sa! In another distant village, in the province of Kongi, there are 146 who have let it be known that they desire to be Christians; they ask for baptism and a teacher. This village, we know, has only had the visit of a colporteur, no settled teacher. What can these facts show us but the visitation of the Spirit of God?

The Christian International Alliance is sending a missionary band to Korea, which will start after the summer is over. Rev. and Mrs. Currens will be among the first to open this work. Communications regarding this undertaking may be sent to Dr. A. B. Simpson, 692, Eighth Avenue, New York.

The Khalsa Prayer Union.

ON Tuesday evening, July 12, a conference in connection with this Union was held at 16, Highbury-crescent, N., by kind invitation of Mrs. Field. Rev. J. A. Faithfull, Vicar of St. Mary Magdalene's, Islington, who presided, emphasised the special claims of the Sikhs upon the gratitude, the sympathy, and the prayers of all English people. Rev. P. H. Badcock, M.A., secretary of the Christian Literature Society for India, having briefly spoken upon the vast influence of Christian books, an address was given by Mr. Bennerz upon "The Indian Church."

Miss Garbutt, central hon. secretary of the Union, in a brief but feeling manner appealed for the Sikhs. She acknowledged her own deep indebtedness to Indians, as they had been the means of leading herself to Christ. She said that what India most of all needed was men and women filled with the Holy Ghost, whether Europeans or natives of the country, whose lives might testify to the transforming power of the Gospel. She then earnestly appealed for further help towards the fund which the Khalsa Prayer Union is at present raising for the support of three Sikh evangelists amongst their own people, and who it is hoped may be sent out this year. Friends interested in the evangelisation of the Sikhs are requested to communicate with Messrs. Garbutt, 37, Marlborough Hill, N.W.

Indian Orphan Children.

IN recent letters Rev. J. O. Denning, principal of the Hardwicke Christian Boys' School, Narsinghpur, says: "We are quite a beehive, with the boys as bees. They rise at daybreak and begin their school. In the afternoon they are in the workshop; carpentering and shoemaking are running smoothly, and we hope soon to begin tailoring. We have finished our harvesting; the dāl is threshed out, and we hope soon to begin with the wheat and grain. We must hire a much larger field for next year, and do our farming on a larger scale. Then we shall want a few implements—ploughs, seed drill, and threshing machine. This is a good part of India for agriculture, and our Christian boys should know how to till the soil.

"The hot weather brings its troubles—sore eyes, fever, etc. We have a number of boys ill, and several are suffering from night blindness. The Government civil surgeon, who has been attending them, has asked for two of the lads to go to the hospital and learn compounding and dressing. I shall be glad to send them if the Hindus make no trouble. If a Christian (other than an Englishman) gives them medicine, or even touches their medicine, they often refuse to take it. This shows the strength of their caste prejudices, which are a great hindrance to Christian work. I have recently been preaching in the house of a Bengal lawyer, who occupies an important public position. Mrs. Denning has for years visited his wife, who has also had the benefit of teaching by the Bible woman. I have great hopes of them."

Some of the orphan lads are maintained by English Christians; £3 per annum supports one. Much interest has been shown in the work by Mrs. Elborough Woodcock, Buckingham Gate, London, S.W., who will gladly hear from helpers and friends.

The Children's S.S. Mission in India.

A PUBLIC meeting of the North India branch of the "Children's Special Service Mission" was held at Mussoorie, in the Union Church, on Monday, June 13, attended by missionaries and others interested in the spiritual welfare of the young. Rev. Dr. Husband, of Ajmere, one of the vice-presidents of the society, presided.

Mr. Kestin spoke of the needs and possibilities of evangelistic work among English-speaking children in India.

Miss Swetenham gave a short account of the organisation of the North India branch of the Children's Special Service Mission, its aims and methods, showing that, in seeking to lead children and young people to Christ, its design is not to supersede but to supplement existing Christian agencies. Volunteers for this work in Mussoorie and in other stations were called for. The value of this Union in promoting the daily, systematic, prayerful reading of God's Word among the young was pointed out.

Mr. Herklots took up the subject of work among the children of native Christians, and urged the necessity of leading them out of mere nominal Christianity into real heart and life religion.

In the Vaudois Valleys.

CHRISTIAN work at La Salle, Val d'Aosta, has had a singular history. It had its origin in the study of the Bible by an old man, who, being held in high esteem by his neighbours, greatly influenced them towards Evangelical teaching. At length the Waldensian Church was asked to send a pastor into the place. Then the Roman Catholic authorities awoke from their indifference and showed determined opposition, which resulted in the imprisonment of Evangelicals and the suppression of open Gospel work in the locality. The witness for Christ was not suppressed, however, but its centre was simply transferred to Courmazeur, eight miles distant.

The time has now arrived for the revival of the work at La Salle, and Dr. Prochet, of Rome, is promoting its establishment on a firmer basis than before. A plot of ground whereon to build a little church, with school and lodging for the pastor, has been secured; and towards the amount raised in aid of the undertaking the poor people have given liberally. It is, however, impossible for them to do more than a small proportion of what is required; and their particular need is as urgent as all Waldensian claims upon Christian sympathy are strong. Communications may be addressed to care of Dr. Prochet, 137, Via Nazionale, Rome.

The Crisis in Spain.

SPAIN would gain, not lose, by the loss of Cuba. The cultivation of tobacco, now prohibited, would be extensively grown, also sugar and coffee. Thus tracts of waste land would be turned into an emporium of wealth. Military men, who have hitherto made rapid and questionable fortunes in Cuba, would be compelled to stay at home and do honest service for their country.

At this sad crisis in the history of Spain it is due to her that we should trace to its source the cause of her decline, from the time when she held sway over an Empire unrivalled among the nations to the present ill-fated period. The year 1502, which saw the formation and establishment of the Catholic Union, was the darkest that ever dawned on fair Hispania. That institution gave birth to the cursed Inquisition, and was the death-knell of the country's greatness. Learning, art, industry, and commerce languished on the expulsion of the Moors and Jews.

The establishment of convents and monasteries, the celibacy of the clergy, and martyrs of the Inquisition reduced the population from eighteen millions to nine millions. A blight swept over the land, robbing it of its beauty, happiness, prosperity, and prestige.

It is not the Spaniards who are to blame if their Government is bad, or education and commerce are at a low ebb. The Ultramontane element permeates and corrodes the entire constitution of the country. As a leading London paper rightly says:—"Spaniards individually are men of exceptionally high honour. But they have been so misgoverned that no public man loses favour if he robs the Government." The baneful influence and intolerant sway of the Papacy have sapped the life out of Spain, and led to the loss of her magnificent foreign possessions. Ruin is the inevitable result of Rome's rule. Let Englishmen beware how they allow the serpent to nestle in the bosom of their Protestant Church. If once admitted, truth and liberty will most surely languish and die, and along with them England's glory.

Spanish South America.

ONE of the most striking stories in the history of foreign mission work is that of the strange and awful neglect of South America. Sealed to God by the deaths of the Huguenots, sent out to Brazil by Admiral Coligny in the sixteenth century; a hundred years later by the deaths of the Moravian missionaries in Dutch Guiana, the country was practically untouched until the third martyr band under the heroic Gardiner yielded up their lives for the Gospel's sake in 1851. For three centuries the Southern Continent has been left in the undisputed possession of the Papacy.

Thank God the dawn has broken. If the neglect has been remarkable the awakening is remarkable also. Not in point of numbers, for at the present day South America has comparatively few workers; but all over the continent we hear of an eagerness to listen to the Gospel that is unknown in many parts of the mission field. Given a preacher and hall, they tell us it would be possible to get an audience to the extent of the accommodation any day and in any street in Buenos Ayres. A Christian postman said recently that he thought one of the best aids to the evangelisation of any country would be to win the postmen for Christ. Whether this be so or not, the Lord has put it upon the hearts of some of his children to make a special effort to reach the postal officials of South America by means of a Spanish Gospel magazine, which will be circulated among them. A start is to be made in September next with an issue of 5000 copies, to be sent to the post offices of the Argentine Republic, and the field will be extended as the needed funds are supplied. The work will be directed by the Postal and Telegraph Christian Association (Senior), and further information, if desired, may be had from Mr. E. C. Harrison, Aislibie Lodge, Aislibie-road, Lee, S.E.

The Danish Mission to Seamen and the London City Mission have a reading-room at 33, Pennyfields, Poplar, E., in which meetings are held and friendly hospitality extended to Scandinavian sailors. The workers, Rev. A. V. Storm and Mr. Engstrom, point out that Scandinavian sailors form an important part of the English mercantile marine, and express a hope that British Christians will assist in maintaining the reading-room.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, July 24.

"Sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise."—Eph. i. 13 (R.V.).

Possessed.—The saints have been purchased at great cost by the precious blood of the Son of God. Not only their spirits, but their bodies, have been bought with an infinite expenditure. Is it not a wonderful thought that God should have thought it worth his while to expend so much on us! But, since He has done it, we cannot suppose that He will not make all He can of us! He will bring his estate under cultivation; there will be no corner of it that will not yield Him produce.

To be redeemed.—Our bodies are owned by God, but they are not yet entirely redeemed. And if we should die before the Lord's advent they will return to their mother earth, possessed but not redeemed. Hence the Apostle says that we are waiting for our adoption—to wit, the redemption of our body (Rom. viii. 23). We are under the sentence of corruption for Adam's sin, but we are to be redeemed.

Sealed.—In Ezekiel's day a mark was set on the foreheads of the men that sighed and cried for sin (Ezek. ix. 4); and in the Apocalypse we read of the sealing of God's servants (Rev. vii. 2-3). For sealing there are needed the softened wax, the imprint of the beloved face, the steady pressure. Would that the Spirit might impress the face of our dear Lord on our hearts, that they may keep it for evermore.

This sealing is an earnest of our inheritance.—The eternal future is all unknown, yet we may guess at it, because the work of the Spirit within us is the first fruits—the grapes of Eshcol, showing what the vintage will be, the earnest-penny, which is the pledge as well as part of the entire payment; the first streak of the coming day.

MONDAY, July 25.

"We are his workmanship."—Eph. ii. 10.

The Greek word might be literally rendered his poem. As the metre varies in the poems of a laureate so does the course of one life differ from another; but God has a thought, a plan, a purpose for each. This lyric, that heroic, another dramatic.

Created for good works.—How carefully the Apostle defines the true position of works in the Divine life. In the foregoing verses he insists that we are not saved by our works, that none should boast; but, as though to meet the objection that his system was inconsistent with holy living, he affirms that the whole intention of God was that we should manifest our new life in Christ by the holy life in which it fruits. We were created in Him unto good works. Whatever good works may be demanded of you, dare to believe that you were created in Christ Jesus to do them.

The good works prepared.—Our creation in Christ Jesus and the preparation of our life-work are due to the same mind. God who made us has prepared our path for us. It may lie up hill or down dale, may be lined with grassy sward or be full of jagged stones, may be short with the years of childhood or long with those of old age, may consist in lying on a couch to suffer or in strenuous activity; but every yard has been prepared.

Our daily walk.—We have not to cut or make our path, but simply to follow it, one step at a time. And when the heart or flesh fails, when the way seems too difficult, or the door too strait, we must look always unto Jesus, who has gone along the same track, asking that his righteousness may go before us, and set us in the way of his steps (Psa. lxxxv. 13, R.V.).

TUESDAY, July 26.

"To make all men see what is the dispensation of the mystery."—Eph. iii. 9 (R.V.).

This chapter is parallel with Col. ii. To the stewardship of the Apostle Paul two mysteries were entrusted, with the intention that he should unravel and explain them to our race.

The mystery.—A mystery is a hidden secret. The word does not imply that there is no solution, but that the solution has not yet been communicated. God has many secrets, which unfold as the ages are ripe for them, but not before. This secret, which was hid in the Divine heart from all ages, was that the Gentiles are on an equality with the Jews in the Church. Under the old covenant they were alienated from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise; but under the new they are fellow heirs, fellow members, and fellow partakers of the blessings of the Gospel. In the Church there is a perfect equality in the matter of spiritual standing.

The stewardship of the mystery.—The Apostle felt that whatever had been communicated to him was not for himself alone, but for all his fellow disciples. He was a steward of the mysteries of God (1 Cor. iv. 1). Count nothing you possess or know as your own; look on all as in trust.

The exercise of his stewardship.—"To preach unto the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ, and to make all men know." It is not enough to proclaim, as a herald might; we must stay with the dull of wit and slow of thought, elaborating, explaining, and insisting, till we have made them see what a Saviour Jesus is, and how rich the soul may be that uses his unsearchable wealth.

WEDNESDAY, July 27.

"He also descended first into the lower parts of the earth."—Eph. iv. 9.

We fill a cup or bucket from the bottom upwards. And Jesus obeyed a universal law when, in his desire to fill all things, He first descended into the place of a servant, the death of the cross, the lowly bed of a borrowed grave, and thence into the abyss of Hades.

There is the low place of contrition for sin.—We must go thither, lying in the dust before God, placing the leper's covering on our lips, smiting on our breasts. Be willing that the Spirit of God should reveal all the selfishness, the subtlety, the impurity of your heart. Let your cry ever be that God would not spare your eyes or heart from the pain of knowing what you are in his sight. From this low place you shall ascend to the bosom of God. "Blessed are they that mourn."

There is the low place of humility.—Be willing to take the lowest place with no mock modesty, but because you have learnt to esteem others better than yourself. Humble yourself under the mighty hand of God. Be willing to perform lowly deeds of service to your brethren and sisters in Christ. Reckon that you have not attained. Ascribe all that is good in you to the grace of God. God giveth peace to the humble, He raiseth up the poor out of the dust.

There is the low place of death.—Lie down often in the grave of Jesus. It is our place by the nature of the first Adam; and the more we are delivered to the death of Jesus the more will his life be manifested in our mortal flesh. Life through death, ascent after descent, the glory after the cross of shame. "If it die, it bringeth forth much fruit."

THURSDAY, July 28.

"Be ye therefore imitators of God, as beloved children."—Eph. v. 1 (R.V.).

Children mostly resemble their father. There is often an unmistakable family likeness, which compels the most casual observer to exclaim, "The very image of his father." Oh, that in each of us there might be that which would make men think of God!

Put away your former manner of life (iv. 22).—The old man stands for the collection of habits, sayings, and doings which characterised our unregenerate days. The Apostle says that they are to be put away suddenly, instantly. Evidently this is possible, or such a command would not be issued. Men speak of a gradual reformation, and advise the piecemeal discontinuance of evil. God, on the contrary, bids us treat the evil past as a company of soldiers would bandits and outlaws. There is the greater reason for this as the old man waxeth corrupt. Even Martha could not bear the opening of her brother's vault.

Be renewed in the spirit of your mind (iv. 23).—We are reminded of Rom. xii. 2. The mind needs to be brought into daily, hourly contact with God's thoughts, as contained in Scripture, that it may be renewed, else our constant association with the men and women of the world, their maxims and practices, will inevitably and sorrowfully deteriorate it.

Put on the new man.—Of this the Apostle affirms that it is according to God, and has been created. Our Lord created this beauteous dress when He rose from the dead. The day of resurrection was one of creation. All the habits and dispositions of a holy, godlike life have been prepared for us in Him, and await our appropriation; and as they are according to God, so soon as we put them on we shall become imitators of God as dear children.

FRIDAY, July 29.

"Praying at all seasons."—Eph. vi. 18 (R.V.).

We should pray at all seasons. Prayer is never out of place. There is no conceivable circumstance in life where it would be inappriate to pray. At the wedding or the funeral, as we engage on work or finish it, whether the wind blow from the cold north or the balmy south, it is wise and right to pray. "Prayer and provender," the old proverb says, "hinder no man."

We should pray in the Spirit. Reversing the order of the words, but bringing in their true meaning, we might say, "Let the Spirit pray in the soul." It is well in prayer to wait until the scum of our own choice and desire has passed off, that the yearnings of the Holy Spirit may arise and manifest themselves. We need to be in the Spirit, not only on the Lord's Day, but always, that He may be mightily in us, teaching us the will of God.

We should pray unselfishly. "For all saints," said the Apostle, "and for me."

We should watch. Do not give runaway knocks. Stand at God's door till it opens. Be on the alert. Wait on the watch-tower. Many of God's ships pass in the night, and many of his gifts arrive at the wharf when those to whom they were consigned are asleep or gone.

We should persevere. God keeps us waiting that He may test and humble us, and know what is in our heart. Delays are his winnowing fan discriminating between the chaff and the wheat. What we asked so vehemently we did not ask wisely. When we pray according to his heart He graciously sustains us. Persevere, you do not know how near you are to the blessing you have sought for years. George Müller prayed for one man for fifty-two years, and received the answer a few days before his death.

SATURDAY, July 30.

"To you it hath been granted in the behalf of Christ...to suffer."—Phil. i. 29 (R.V.).

The child of God is often called to suffer, because nothing will convince onlookers of the reality and power of true religion as suffering will do, when it is borne with Christian resignation and fortitude. And how great the compensations are!

He can keep in such perfect peace. He can make lovely times, when no one is near the couch, to be so full of sweet fellowship and communion. He can put such strong, soft hands under the tired limbs, resting them. He can give refreshment to the spirit when the body is deprived of sleep.

Everyone cannot be trusted with suffering. All could not stand the fiery ordeal. They would speak rashly and complainingly. So the Master has to select with careful scrutiny the branches which can stand the knife, the jewels which can bear the wheel. It is given to some to preach, to others to work, but to others to suffer. Accept it as a gift from his hand. Look up and take each throb of pain, each hour of agony as his gift. Dare to thank Him for it. Look inside the envelope of pain for the message it enfolds. It is a rough packing-case, but there is treasure in it.

And can you not minister to other sufferers? Can you not dictate letters of comfort, or pray for them, or devise little alleviations and surprises for those who have not what you have? Suffering is on Christ's behalf; it must, then, be intended as part of that great ministry for the world in which He, with his saints, is engaged.

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

JULY 18TH TO 23RD.

[By Our Special Commissioner.]

FOR the twenty-fourth time the annual Christian Convention is in progress in the charming little Cumberland town. As is customary at the present season of the year, Keswick is filled with strangers, the large majority of whom, there can be no doubt, have been attracted by the Convention. Needless to say, the lake and mountain scenery, so eloquent of the power and wisdom of God, is in itself a great attraction; with some of the visitors it may be the first and chief. The attenders at the Convention, however, are able to enjoy the natural beauties of the district none the less because their principal aim in coming together "with one accord in one place" has been to learn more of the revealed goodness and grace of the Creator of heaven and earth.

It is a delightful privilege to have eyes to see the spiritual meanings of the grand parables of nature; and here, in surroundings suggestive of sublime majesty, and in conditions of physical comfort and refreshment, many will be helped to seek "the God of all comfort." They will also, it is hoped, experience during the present week that blessed uplifting of soul that comes from the communion of saints and the illumination of the Holy Ghost.

On Friday and Saturday last large contingents of visitors entered the town. On the former day Mr. J. T. Budd's excursion party included several hundreds; on the latter, two long trains from Euston swelled the body of Christian people wishful to have a part in the gatherings preliminary to the Convention proper. Many ministers and other workers were early on the spot, and others arrived on Monday by all trains and in weather that showed some signs of unsettlement.

One thing has characterised Keswick Convention from the first, and the same note was struck at the

this year. That is, an endeavour to realise and show the greatness of Christ as Saviour and Lord. Christ saves from sin as well as from the consequences of sin. Moreover, if through his grace we have peace with God, so also in Him we may have "rest unto our souls." Hence among the sweetest of the hymns we sing:

Jesus! I am resting, resting
In the joy of what Thou art;
I am finding out the greatness
Of thy loving heart.

Everything else in the teaching for "the promotion of practical holiness" flows from this strong position—or, rather, this blessed fact. With rest comes joy and a deeper realisation of Gospel privileges. Hence, also, personal consecration, and surrender to Him who is not only Justifier but likewise Sanctifier of his people.

From first to last the teachers at Keswick emphasise which, it is hardly needful to say, must at the outset be accepted in faith; later on it may be demonstrated from experience, to the end that "whosoever willeth to do His will shall know of the doctrine." But to come to this as a settled conviction—that Christ is all-sufficient, at all times, and to all ends, for all his people—here the unbelieving heart rebels. The expectation of being encouraged in a resolve on this point is the desire and quest of many a weak and weary Christian that comes to [illegible]. At length, when the cloud of doubt has rolled by, there comes "rest, sweet rest," with power for service and instrumentality of blessing to others—in fact, a life of faith unto God. God grant that many may this year find out more than they knew before of the fulness of Christ and the blessedness of realising Him through the Holy Spirit's indwelling and control!

Keswick stands for teaching, of course, but it also stands for prayer. While this is clear throughout the Convention, it is specially discernible at the preliminary meetings, when the addresses are shorter and fewer in number. The first prayer-meeting in the Tent, on Saturday evening, was very largely attended. Mr. Robert Wilson was in the chair, and, except for brief opening words by Mr. A. A. Head and Rev. C. Inwood, the time was spent in prayer and heart searching in the presence of God.

THE SUNDAY MEETINGS.

As usual, Convention speakers and well-known workers were announced to preach on Sunday in the various places of worship in the town. At St. John's the preacher in the morning was Rev. Dr. Handley Moule, and in the evening Rev. Evan H. Hopkins. Dr. Harry Guinness preached morning and evening in the Congregational Church, and Rev. George Soltau and Mr. Walter Sloan served the Wesleyans. There were large congregations in these and other buildings, also overflow meetings in the Tent.

The Parish Church was crowded to its utmost capacity some time before worship began. Taking for his text John xv. 2, Dr. Moule spoke of believers in their vital association with Christ, with special reference to character and fruitfulness in the sight of God and man. The great purpose of the parable of the Vine was to remind Christ's people of the purpose of their existence, the secret of their life in the sense in which life is life indeed. "I am the Vine, ye are the branches." The branch is incapable of independent existence, and can live only as it is a part of and united to the Vine. Christ is "our life"; "he that is joined unto the Lord is one Spirit" (Col. iii. 4; 1 Cor. vi. 17). It is as in Him that we live if we live to Him at all. First of all the parable has to say to us, ye can do nothing—I am your life." Beyond that, it tells us the reason—the why of our existence as Christ's people—not merely that we may be safe, great and wonderful and adorable as He is in giving us the gift of salvation; nor is it that, as individuals, we may be enabled to realise in some measure the character which He would form or develop in us: rather it is that we may bring forth fruit, that we may be his means, his implements, his vehicles, for the production of what He means by "fruit." "I am the vine; ye are the branches"; out of you is to come and from you is to be gathered fruit for man and for God.

"SEPARATED FROM ME,

Consider one of the messages of Christ's teaching. He comes to gather to Himself a Church, to gather to Himself one by one souls, personalities, believers, disciples, "that they may bring forth fruit." Whatever else the garden of the Lord may contain, it is meant for fruit; if He cometh and "seeketh fruit, and findeth none," then He saith, "Cut it down, why cumbereth it the ground?" He deals with us that in an increasing degree we "may bring forth fruit"; that is the Husbandman's aim, and the root gives the life for this.

In Christ's name we may reverently assure ourselves of peace with God, of our safety secured in the cleft of the rock, of our sure abiding-place at the foot of the Cross; but let us ever remember that even these glories are means to an end, and not the end itself. What is the end, but that we may that we may have that high blessedness, and He may get that blessed result of the travail of his soul, that we produce result—or rather that He, the root, shall produce result to us—in the living fruit of God.

What does the fruit mean? It is just the fruit of the Spirit—the result of the grace of God in the believer's life—CHARACTER. The production of character is the first step towards the energetic and active result for which we are made, but we are not to rest content in its production. For the fruit of character—the fruit of the Spirit—you go to Gal. v. 22, 23, and notice that it is fruit (singular), not fruits (plural); there is one beautiful ideal, one perfect and united whole—love, joy, peace, long-suffering, and so forth. This is the fruit of the SPIRIT as regards the glorious Worker, who maketh all things new within by bringing Jesus Christ and the believer into living contact. It is the FRUIT, the result of Christ dwelling in the heart by faith, and thence working out these characteristics and qualities as a series of harmonious colours combined in one ray, as the perfectly adjusted ingredients of one result.

Look over the details—Love, Joy—let us not forget joy as an intended, prepared-for result of the Spirit's work and the Saviour's presence—Peace; and then the three which embody humility as learned at

THE FEET OF JESUS—

Long-suffering, Gentleness, Goodness; and then those others that show that the sweetness arises not from our weakness, but from a strength greater than our own—Fidelity (for that undoubtedly is the Apostle's meaning here), Meekness, and Self-control (for that is the temperance that comes to close and guard and brace the whole). God has it in mind that his people should bring forth fruit, not only as to what they are, but as to what they do. It is for this that we are connected with the vine, that from the branch of our life, from Him, may come forth fruit, and be suspended for the gathering and the lips of men and of God—not of us, but through us.

Alluding to the occasion that had brought so many into Keswick, the preacher reminded his hearers that, instead of reckoning upon a time of spiritual luxury, they should consider how they might bring forth fruit unto God. Passing on, he remarked that two great thoughts are given us in the passage in order that we, being branches, may be all that the Vine would have us to be. The first is "Abide in Me—stay in me, trust thyself never for one minute to be out of communion with Me." Secondly, remember that the Husbandman

WILL PRUNE THE BRANCHES.

"Every branch that beareth fruit He purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit." Let us welcome his pruning, rejoice in it, covet it, so that we may bring forth more fruit. What is the purpose of pruning? It is that the vigour of the vine may be concentrated upon that which is best and most faithful. The pruning may come in many different ways, and doubtless to every Christian life it will come more or less through the chastenings and chastisements of the Lord. "If ye be without chastening, then are ye not sons." Let us therefore welcome the cross, and be glad as the pruning proceeds—in sorrow, disappointment, suspense, pain, and weakness. The pruning is not confined to discipline, however; the Word also purges, as Christ said—"Now are ye clean through (or, on account of) the Word which I have spoken unto you." Whatever the Lord may do for us through his Word, let us ask Him to do his pruning work, and may He comfort and gladden abundantly every soul that seeketh it, perpetually rebuking self while glorifying Christ!

The discourse was rich in thought, and although these few notes do not pretend to cover the ground, they will afford some idea of the helpful manner in which a subject of deep importance was treated by Dr. Moule.

The overflow and evangelistic meetings on Sunday were very largely attended. The Gospel was preached with great force by Mr. Inwood, and a powerful address was delivered by Rev. George Soltau. At some conventions little is done to bring in the children; but this oversight does not apply to Keswick. The gathering for the little folk on Sunday afternoon was an encouraging success, and addresses suited to the audience and highly instructive in character were delivered by Messrs. W. H. Wilson and Mr. H. Hutchinson, of the Children's Special Service Mission. A second meeting for children is arranged for next Sunday. For all these gatherings the assistance of Convention visitors has been solicited in the form of intercessory prayer, that the Gospel message as preached during the entire week, both in the various meeting places and in the open air every evening, may be attended with great results in the salvation of souls and to the glory of God.

Mr. SOLTAU'S address was at once striking in character and strong in its appeal to the conscience. Founded on 1 Peter ii. 7, it dealt specially with the words

"DISALLOWED" AND "DISOBEDIENT."

To disallow Christ is to be disobedient to God. Christ has been disallowed by men in the past, and the same is the case to day. The builders rejected the precious stone of God's choice; people to-day leave Him out of account in their life-work. Moreover, many who acknowledge Him in some respects disallow Him in others, in order that they may continue habits and occupations and pursue purposes and plans that He is known to disapprove.

Going into particulars, the speaker showed that Christ was disallowed by Herod the king, who accordingly sought to take his life; by his contemporaries in Nazareth and the rulers of the people at Jerusalem; also by the populace when they chose Barabbas rather than Jesus—the destroyer and murderer rather than the holy Saviour. The choice regarding Christ has consequences which man cannot escape; the rejected stone becomes a rock of offence, coming into collision with which the sinner must inevitably be ruined.

Everything depends upon the place we give to Christ in our life and character. To the unbeliever the preacher's message was: Put Jesus in the place God has put Him in, and ask God to receive you as his obedient child. To the child of God he said: In building up your character how much or how little of your endeavour has been in harmony with the will of Christ? Has He been precious, or an honour to you? Or have you disallowed Him—in the church, in the home, in business, in the matter of recreation and social life? Those who disallow Christ are disobedient to the rule which God has laid down for our life every day in the week and every week in the year. In conclusion, Mr. Soltau pointed the obvious lesson of the remark of a friend to him in a recent conversation. "I have found my life work," said the friend. "What is it?" "It is this: 'This is the work of God; that ye believe on Him whom He hath sent.'"

PRAYER FOR IRELAND.

According to custom, the prayer meeting on Monday morning had for its burden and concern the work of God in the sister island. Captain Tottenham presided, and although rain was falling heavily during the hour of assembly there was an exceptionally large attendance. Prayer was opened by Rev. C. Inwood, Canon Daunt, Professor Mackintosh, and Rev. J. Garrett. Among other reasons for praise were these: The comparative quiet of the times in Ireland, the revival in several quarters of simple Gospel preaching, and for an increasing spirit of unity among the Churches and Christian people in the land. Among other classes remembered in prayer were the Roman Catholic priests, also the converts, and those under conviction.

Many works and workers were mentioned before the Lord for silent prayer, including the following: Work among soldiers in various homes and regiments, sailors and coastguardsmen, policemen, and workers on the railways; work and workers in the open air, in tents and wooden halls, missionaries, and those engaged in house-to-house visitation, medical missions, and homes and schools for the young, also orphanages; for Scripture readers, text-teachers in Irish, colporteurs of the Word of God; for training homes for workers, itinerants in fairs and markets, tracts and those who distribute them; finally, for all converts, as well as for those who during the year have apostasised from the truth.

This list, though by no means all inclusive, gave a good idea of the many-sided nature of Gospel effort in progress in Ireland. All hearts seemed to go out in sympathy with the petition that God would graciously stir up the Churches in Ireland to such an enthusiasm as would please his Holy Spirit, so that they might be truly missionary, and by prayer and labour be instrumental for great blessing throughout the land. Those who attended this meeting could not but be impressed with its earnest spirit; and assuredly many a believing heart was encouraged by the oft sung chorus introduced by Captain Tottenham:—

I believe God answers prayer,
I am sure God answers prayer,
I have proved God answers prayer,
Glory to his name!

THE WOMEN OF INDIA.

A meeting that had not been contemplated when the programme was drawn up was held on Monday afternoon in the Victoria Hall. Rev. F. Paynter presided over a crowded gathering; and after praise and prayer, PANDITA RAMABAI told the story of her work for the child widows of India. But for the occasional remarks of speakers who followed her, the audience would have known little of the intellectual distinction and high personal qualities of the lady; for she spoke with praiseworthy quietness and modesty in reference to herself and the work God had enabled her to do. The millions of widows of India, despised and labouring under nameless hardships, and the thousands of that vast number who, by reason of youth and babyhood, are specially to be pitied: these sad facts indicated to the Pandita a sphere of usefulness upon which she entered a good many years ago. As a result of her endeavours light had entered many a dark mind, and freedom was now being enjoyed by many of India's women, some of whom had been openly baptized, while others were married and were leading happy and useful lives.

Coming to the story of her more recent efforts in rescuing the starving child-widows in the Central Provinces, the Pandita rejoiced to say that this effort is organised on a definitely Christian basis, and is being greatly blessed of God. She now intends to add a Bible-training school for girls, in the hope thereby of advancing home mission work on the part of Indian Christians. For this undertaking she begged the prayers of British Christians, and also asked for lady volunteers for India.

Mr. Charles Reeve, of the Poona Village Mission, also appealed for workers. Miss Edith Mulvany did the same, intimating that she hoped to return to India in October or November with the special object of establishing a home for friendless women in Calcutta. The meeting that heard these earnest appeals was largely composed of young men and women, who followed with evident compassion the story of the sorrow of India's women, and engaged in prayer, led by Mrs. M. Baxter, for the outpouring of God's Spirit upon the women of our Great Eastern dependency.

The opening meeting of the Convention on Monday evening was large beyond the capacity of the spacious tent. The weather having cleared, and no other gathering being on the programme for the same hour, this was not surprising. Mr. Robert Wilson occupied the chair, being accompanied on the platform by a goodly array of speakers for future meetings, including Dr. A. T. Pierson, of New York.

Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE opened with an address based on 1 Samuel xv. 13 and 14, in which the prophet denounces the disobedience of King Saul in the matter of the sheep and oxen of the Amalekites, which he spared instead of dealing with them as devoted to God. Now God is a jealous God; that is, He demands loyal and whole-hearted service on the part of those with whom He establishes relations. In Eden man's relation to God arose from a sense of humble and grateful dependence; after the giving of the law at Sinai, it was by obedience that the creature sought to realise his true relation to the Law-Giver and Creator. When the Lord Jesus Christ came, however, a new relationship was set up, which may be called a blood-relationship, for Christ said to his disciples, "He that doeth the will of my Father, the same is My mother, and sister, and brother." Moreover, it is a heart-tie, as represented by the relation of bride and bridegroom.

Therefore it is reasonable that God should expect every faculty and power and thought and attribute of our being to be consecrated wholly to Himself. This, in fact, is the Gospel demand, and the Gospel expectation; instead of being relaxed, as compared with the times of the law, the demand has been increased. Since the revelation of God's unspeakable love in Christ Jesus it has, in fact, been infinitely enhanced and enlarged. While God may be merciful to the vilest sinner and pardon him, yet, after displaying his love to us in that way, after we have become saints in Christ Jesus, that love makes an imperative demand upon us, even for the consecration of

ALL OUR POWERS AND FACULTIES.

Turning to the story of Saul and the Amalekites, the speaker found in it a picture of present unfaithfulness of many Christians, in regard to things that should be placed on God's altar. Saul was called upon to deal in judgment with the people of Amalek, which was a type of the world's pride. He knew that everything was to be surrendered to God, but in order to have favour with men he cherished and nourished the things that were devoted, and kept back the things that belonged to the Lord, leaving to the Holy One the vile and the refuse. Christians also are anointed of the Lord to do his work, and their possessions as well as their persons should be holy unto the Lord. Nothing should be kept back either to please self or favour men; yet we give to God the scraps of our time and the trifles of our money. He had heard of ladies and gentlemen who, every quarter, gave their clothing to the poor in order that they might get new. That was according to fashion; in fact, they pleaded the care of God's poor as a reason for getting the new and fashionable things. Proceeding, the speaker pointed out the selfishness of this, and the dishonesty of dealing thus with God. The demand which God makes is not penal, but is in return for his own love to us, and compliance should be a precious privilege. Have we realised our relation to God? Have our hands been slack to minister to our Bridegroom—to our Lord?

Look at Saul, confounded in the presence of the prophet; even when convicted, in shame and confusion, there was no true repentance as he said, "I have sinned." In the case of David before Nathan it was different, for the king said, "I have sinned against the Lord," and from the depths of his stricken conscience confessed in the words of the fifty-first Psalm—"Against Thee, Thee only, have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight." To be any good conviction must be but a turning unto the Lord, kissing the feet that bring the message of love, and at length hearing the words, "Thy sins are forgiven thee; go in peace and sin no more." If that display of love, does not make us love, then nothing will. It is for us to ask, "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me?" In closing, in an impassioned appeal, Mr. Webb-Peploe pleaded with his hearers to return God's love by loving Him, and by placing at his service all their powers and possessions in life in honourable consecration.

The prayer meeting at seven o'clock on Tuesday morning was so largely attended that the tent seemed well filled. Mr. A. A. Head presided, and an address was delivered by Rev. J. J. LUCE on the words, "After this manner, therefore, pray ye" (Matt. vi. 9). He spoke on reality in dealing with God, and showed that the model prayer which our Lord gave his disciples puts God and his kingdom first, in the seeking of which we may rely upon receiving every blessing. The meeting was for the most part occupied with prayer, those absent from the Convention, whether engaged in work for Christ at home, or in distant lands, being remembered before the Lord.

The South London Association for Assisting the Blind continues its good work. Classes are held where the blind are taught to read the Scriptures in embossed type; portions of the Scriptures and other books in embossed type are lent for home reading; devotional meetings are held, as also are social and recreation meetings; members are visited and relieved where necessary; pensions are allowed in urgent cases; loans are granted free of interest; classes for teaching music and knitting and needlework are also held. Employment for the blind is also sought and provided where possible. The largest of the classes held by the association are those at St. Paul's Mission Hall, Manor-place, Walworth, with 133 blind on the books. The Brixton and Kennington centres are also full of activity—the total blind directly helped being 157. Particulars of this useful work may be had in the new report issued by the secretary, Mr. J. T. Edmonds, 155, Brixton-road, S.W.

Meetings of The Week.

World's Sunday School Convention.

THE opening meeting of the Convention on Tuesday, 12th inst., and its principal sessions throughout last week, were held, through the courtesy of Dr. Parker, in the City Temple, Holborn Viaduct. Four wreaths were placed on the front of the platform railing, in memory of four delegates who perished in La Bourgogne while on their way to the Convention, their names being Mr. and Mrs. Rundell, Miss Tower, and Miss Reeves.

Conference on the first day was preceded by a meeting for praise and prayer, held in the City Temple, and lasting half an hour, under the conduct of Rev. Robert Culley, secretary of the Wesleyan Sunday School Union.

Mr. B. F. Jacobs, of Chicago, the hon. president, being unable to visit England through ill-health, his place was occupied by Mr. F. F. Belsey, of London, one of the vice-chairmen, and the opening prayer was offered by Dr. Monro Gibson, of St. John's Wood Presbyterian Church. The Marquis of Northampton, president of the English Sunday School Union, gave

A VERY CORDIAL ADDRESS OF WELCOME.

Mr. Edward Towers, chairman of the World's Convention Committee in London, also offered a welcome, and was followed by Dr. Clifford on behalf of the Free Church National Council and for the churches of the United Kingdom generally. If, said he, we are to hold our own in the old country against an intolerant and aggressive sacerdotalism, our children must understand New Testament Christianity. Rev. Dr. Spaulding (U.S.A.); Hon. S. H. Blake (Toronto); Mr. Stocks, representing Australasia; Professor Fetzer and Count Bernstorff, Germany; Pastor Th. Truvé, of Gothenburg, Sweden; Bishop Thoburn, India; and the Rev. W. H. Richards, Kimberley, also spoke.

Though the object of the convention was to receive reports and discuss methods of Sunday-school work, the one dominant "note" appeared rather to be expression of joy at the increasing feeling of unity between England and America. One speaker after another alluded to it in various forms, and it always elicited prolonged and fervent applause.

Perhaps the most striking incident of the day's proceedings occurred toward the close of the morning session, when after a speech from Bishop Thoburn, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, respecting work in Asia, an American delegate asked the president to allow a prayer to be offered regarding American Christian

WORK IN THE PHILIPPINES.

All the American delegates present rose to their feet while one of their number from Massachusetts offered a prayer, which amounted to a pledge that the Americans would not shirk the task of conducting vigorous Christian work and instruction in those islands should their country become responsible for them.

At Tuesday's afternoon and evening sessions, the chairmen being Mr. Edward Towers and Mr. Albert Spicer, M.P., respectively, reports were read from various countries giving statistics and particulars of the work. A summary of statistics of Protestant Sunday-schools shows in England and Wales 43,600 schools, 613,000 teachers, 6,840,000 scholars; Scotland, 6300 schools, 64,000 teachers, 713,000 scholars; Ireland, 3600 schools, 28,000 teachers, 319,000 scholars; Denmark, in 1893, 55,000 scholars, now 71,000; Holland, 11,300 in 1893, now 11,800; Italy, 11,000 in 1893, now 15,700; Portugal, 1,066 in 1893, now 1,419; Spain, 3,200 in 1893, now 4,200; Sweden, 242,000 in 1893, now 252,000. These figures were presented by Mr. J. F. Holmes, hon. secretary of the S.S.U. Continental Mission. In India, where Sunday-school work has made its greatest strides in the last nine years, there were in 1889, 2757 schools and 116,014 teachers and scholars; now there are 5578 schools, 13,937 teachers, and 247,471 scholars. In Australasia there are 595,000 scholars, 7458 schools, and 55,000 teachers. In America, according to a paper prepared by Mr. B. F. Jacobs, and read by Mr. A. B. McCrellis, of Rhode Island, there were in 1896 132,697 schools, 1,394,630 officers and teachers, and nearly 11 million scholars, or 12,288,153 in all.

Wednesday was devoted to demonstrations of

and something like 20,000 delegates, visitors, and children spent the day at the Crystal Palace. The London Sunday-school Choir, of which Mr. J. H. Barnard is the well-known founder and manager, also celebrated its twenty-sixth summer fête. Two meetings were held, and at one gathering Alderman White, of Norwich, presided, and Mr. J. P. Black, secretary of the International Primary Union, U.S.A., discoursed on Summer Schools and Primary Unions, which appear to be schools for children up to twelve years of age. These schools are distinct from others, but large schools also have something that may be called

SUNDAY KINDERGARTEN.

Miss Bertha Vella, of Mass., U.S.A., and Mrs. J. W. Barnes, from the same country, having spoken, Mrs. W. J. Semelroth, of St. Louis, answered a number of questions on American methods. Particularly the meaning of sand maps was asked for, and it appears that in some American Sunday-schools teachers illustrate Biblical lessons and subjects by manipulating moulding sand in ingenious ways.

Delegates freely expressed the opinion that America is far beyond England in the organisation and methods of Sunday-schools. Messrs. F. F. Belsey and Witchell, of London, in Room B, were explaining and illustrating what could be done with blackboards and object illustrations. In the hands of a fairly expert draughtsman and ready speaker this method of utilising the blackboard is arresting and maintaining the interest of a large number of children for a long time. Miss Keyworth, of the Wesleyan Training College, took a class of fifty or sixty children, showing how they should be taught, and Rev. R. J. Y. Pierce, U.S.A., also spoke.

At the close of these practical demonstrations and discussions on methods, a very successful concert was given by nearly 6,000 junior scholars—under the direction of the London Sunday-school Choir—on the Handel Orchestra, Mr. J. Rowley conducting.

At the Seventh Session of the Conference, held in the City Temple, on Thursday morning, Mr. A. B. McCrellis, of Rhode Island, presided, and Dr. John Potts, of Canada, brought up the report of the International Lesson Committee. The intellectual and educational benefits of the uniform lesson system were, he contended, many and great; it had created a Biblical literature of great value to the cause of truth, and it had proved on the unity of Christianity. Organic Christian unity was only a dream. He was not sure that an organic union would be an unmixed blessing. But unity, not uniformity, was the desirable object. The harmonising of Sunday-school work through the Word of God had led the churches to be less controversial and less militant than of old, more friendly and nearer to each other in practical Christian work.

Rev. Dr. S. G. Green, of the Religious Tract Society, declared that the main object of the uniform lesson system is to lead teachers and scholars to gain a comprehensive and adequate knowledge of Scripture, in its diversity as a manifold literature extending through many ages; also in its utility as a development of the doctrine of redemption; and in its order as a progressive revelation. Popular ignorance of the Scriptures is portentous, and this is due to miscellaneous pulpit texts and the way in which contexts are disregarded.

Rev. W. G. Mills and Count Bernstorff followed, the latter regretting that the International Lesson system had not gained ground on the Continent. The reason was, he feared, especially in Germany, that it was impossible to popularise a system which ignored the ecclesiastical element.

Dr. Parker preached the Convention Sermon at noon, his subject being the command to subdue the earth. Referring to the great and growing feeling of the he said if it were to work for peace he was with it, but if it were to work against the peace of the world he was not with it, for God had made of one blood all the nations of the earth. Christian Protestantism for the world means liberty, intelligence, justice, and mutual recognition.

In the afternoon Mr. Edward Towers presided, the discussion of Sunday-school organisation chiefly occupying the time; and the evening brought more hearty welcomes. The closing address of the day was delivered by Rev. Canon Fleming, as hon. sec. of the Religious Tract Society. He said they hoped and prayed the day would soon come when arbitration among nations might take the place of ghastly war. One outcome of the Convention will probably be the sending of a Sunday-school missionary to China.

On Friday the Convention was brought to a memorable close. The morning meeting in the City Temple was the tenth session of the Convention, and worship was conducted by Rev. Alfred Rowland, Chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales. Expository subjects were discussed by Rev. George Hawker and the Rev. F. B. Meyer; and the best methods of extending the work in various lands gave an attractive subject to Mr. Jackson, a Melbourne representative. The assembly also adopted a resolution welcoming the newest signs of peace between Spain and the United States, a resolution which was again presented and warmly approved at the public meeting in the evening.

The afternoon meeting was given up to the consideration of "Normal Classes and Institutes," a paper by Mr. A. Sindall, of London, being read by his friend Mr. Webster. It warmly advocated for teachers, accompanied by a "covenant" to perform his duties with diligence and devotion. Professor H. M. Hamill, whose name is familiar in England as one of the great Chautauqua leaders, outlined the successful history of normal classes and institutes in his own country, giving it as his opinion that the eighty Chautauquas which were already the progeny of the alma mater would soon be happily succeeded by others.

The twelfth and final session of the Convention took the form of a great public meeting in the Queen's Hall, Langham-place. Musical selections were given by the London Sunday-school choir, and the Marquis of Northampton presided. The latter, in the course of his opening address, called attention to the necessity of extending Christianity throughout the world if only as an assurance that the peace of the world would be secured by the maintenance of Christian character.

Hon. S. H. Blake (Toronto) eulogised the Bible-teaching in Sunday-schools, and said the children in Sunday-schools were the stuff of which men and women of the future would be made, and he thanked God they had 25,000,000 of such children in their care. Bishop Thoburn (of India) said that throughout the world to-day there were 200,000,000 little ones under five years of age belonging to them in a Christian sense, a sense of obligation, and it was theirs to get the heart-grasp of them. Two relics of Eden were left to them—the home and the Sabbath. The Christian word "home" must be carried into all heathen lands, but, first of all, it must be preserved in all Christian lands. Our responsibility rested in the fact, as Mr. Gladstone had said, that the English-speaking race a century hence would number 600,000,000 souls.

Several resolutions brought the Convention to a close. The foreign delegates were anxious to express their gratitude for much kindness and attention; and Mr. A. B. McCrellis, in moving a similar form of words on behalf of the large American contingent, said they were not foreigners, and had not been received as foreigners. They were the children and the grandchildren of the country they loved, and which they had found loved them. Mr. Edward Towers, president of the Convention, then moved a resolution almost identical in terms with that of the morning, to the effect that the Convention hailed with satisfaction the prospect of peace between Spain and the United States. In seconding Mr. Albert Spicer, M.P., said they could not shut their eyes to the fact that this disastrous war had opened up to them many new problems for the future; but among its results they might hope to find new securities for the peace of the world in England and America coming closer together.

State Regulation of Vice.

"SHALL not God avenge his own elect" when the Divine nature which He has implanted impels them to fight his battles in the earth, to contend for the righteousness which exalteth a nation, and to plead the cause of the oppressed? Earnest souls from all quarters beyond the seas have gathered in this city of London during the past week for the Congress held by the International Federation for the Abolition of State Regulation of Vice. Besides important business relating to England and India, the daily sessions held in Devonshire House, Bishopsgate-street, E.C., have brought reports giving an account of the movement in France, Germany, Switzerland, Holland, Belgium, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, and other countries.

On Thursday evening the Ladies' National Association held a great public meeting of men and women in Exeter Hall. Platform and auditorium were filled. After a few moments of silent prayer it was announced that letters and telegrams wishing godspeed to the movement had poured in from many quarters of the globe, and these numerous communications had to be taken as read.

The revered Mrs. JOSEPHINE BUTLER presided, but advancing years prevented her from giving more than a few words at the close of the meeting. A resolution was moved by Rev. Dr. CLIFFORD declaring that the meeting > cordially associates itself with the Ladies' National Association in its reiterated and absolute condemnation of the principle of the State regulation of vice in whatever form, and under whatever name it may be attempted to be revived; and it records its profound satisfaction in seeing gathered together to-day the representatives of so many different countries of the world to strengthen the abolitionist movement, and to join in the condemnation of the system which the Association will continue with all its strength to oppose.

The speaker expressed gratitude for the indomitable faith of the leader still spared to them, and for what has been accomplished by such men as the late Sir James Stansfeld, whose work is still reproductive in this good cause. Although God takes away workers, He Himself carries on the work, feeding faith by experience, and quickening the conscience by the sight of foes who have never forgiven the successful repeal fight of past years, and who are trying to take advantage of the present popular reactionary mood for the re-enactment of the discredited and hateful Acts. It is impossible to have bad legislation in India without its effects being felt in the Strand; and for the State to feed prostitution is as ruinous as the fanning by a captain of a fire on board his own ship. Women must be to the front on this question, and the God of holiness will crown with benediction their efforts to deliver their poor sisters from a cowardly and unjust oppression, that our land may enjoy the righteousness which gives a people leading influence in the affairs of mankind.

In seconding, Mr. HENRY PIERSON, of Zetland, President of the British, Continental, and General Federation, said that, like Noah's raven, it is the sad duty of certain workers to investigate the extent of corruption, while Christian statisticians and politicians perform no less service in presenting the results in a form for practical reference and use; while the sorrow over wrong-doing, the godly desire, and the purity of womankind, applied to this question and aptly typified by the dove, have brought us a first olive branch as a sign of the dawn of a brighter state of things.

Mrs. FENWICK MILLER was very plainspoken in her support of the resolution, and pertinently asked, "Whose girls are to be taken by the State for wicked purposes? Not yours and mine perhaps; but remember they are some poor mothers' girls." Enactments which violate the sisterhood of woman are illusory as regards protection of vicious men; and thus innocent women often suffer for the guilty, in the marriage relation.

Another motion was made by Mr. JAMES STUART M.P., declaring that the meeting, > in view of the repeal of the Indian Prohibitive Act of 1895, and of the liberty thus given to the authorities in India to restore the late condemned Cantonment Regulations and Practices, and, having regard to the recent circular of the Indian Government stating explicitly their policy in this respect, expressed its conviction that in spite of certain warnings and professions on the part of the Home Government the principles of the Vice Regulations are now again in force in India; and pledged itself to make every effort, by arousing the public conscience at home and in India, to obtain the complete and final abolition of any system based on these principles.

The speaker contended that from a moral and hygienic standpoint the system referred to stands condemned. A prohibitive Act was infinitely preferable to advice from a biased Government Department. He held in his hand an official document not meant for publication, and of which more would yet be heard, which throws upon the really compulsory policy of the Indian Government a very different light from that derivable from the Blue Book upon the subject. The iniquitous system is again full blown in India, but the hosts of righteousness are determined to maintain a fight, the occasion for which now centres in that country.

MRS. JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER

With evidences of intense womanly feeling, which did her great honour, Mrs. ANDREWS seconded, telling how, when she visited India, it was only to find the evil rampant in 1892, despite the repeal of 1888. 'The "Government women," as they were called, from Benares to Peshawar, cherished the conviction that, notwithstanding the cruel action of her officers, our Queen, having children of her own, cares for her dusky daughters in India; and the poor creatures with touching confidence besought Mrs. Andrews to represent their sad case to their good sovereign.

Mr. AARON POWELL had great pleasure, as an American, in supporting the important resolution He trusted that the coming alliance between his country and ours would tend to national peace as opposed to militarism. The position of America was once unique, as having no standing army or navy worthy of the name, but if the war should prove to be of considerable duration there would arise the peril that American advocates of evil would assume for their contention the military ground which is favoured in Europe. He believed in the entire enfranchisement of women as indispensable to the ultimate attainment of repeal; for it was in American States where women have votes that the age of consent had been raised to the maximum of eighteen years.

The third and final pronouncement, moved by Mdlle. VIDART, of the Swiss Association, was as follows:—

> That this meeting, while observing with gratitude many signs of the growing acceptance in the public mind of the principles which the Ladies' National Association has maintained for so many years, wishes emphatically to again record its conviction that no radically good or lasting result can be obtained so long as, side by side with any suggested moralising influences, the deadly teachings of the Vice Regulations is allowed to exist.

Describing the deplorable weakening of the public conscience observable in her own land, especially among the young, as the effect of State regulation, the speaker fulfilled her appointed office "in the sacred name of human fellowship."

Rev. CANON LYTTELTON seconded, and denounced what is really a systematic and organised degradation of men, in the encouragement to gratify lust under the direct ægis of the State. We must leave no stone unturned to remove from our brothers, fighting our battles in distant lands, the greatest temptation that besets them.

Support was rendered by BISHOP THOBURN, who said it is as impossible to regulate vice as it is to control theft, perjury, gambling, or drinking. He was sure that he spoke the mind of the people among whom he lives—Mohammedans, Hindoos, high-caste and low-caste colonies of Asiatic settlers, and nearly three hundred millions of the people of India are unanimously opposed to every form of regulation enactment.

The several resolutions were unanimously adopted in the course of the proceedings. After a few words from Mr. HUGO TAMM (Sweden) and Dr. J. B. NEVINS,

A fitting climax was reached when Mrs JOSEPHINE BUTLER, coming forward to acknowledge a vote of thanks, was received by the whole audience standing. "In the name and strength of our God," said she, "I vow to the people of England to be faithful unto death in this mission to which God has called me for the preservation of their dearest liberties and holiest aspirations."

National Refuges. — Lady Margaret Villiers attended, a few days ago, at Ealing House Girls' Home, Ealing, one of the ten institutions belonging to the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, and presented prizes to young women who had been trained in the Home as domestic servants and had kept their situations for various periods with good character. This annual reunion, called "Old Girls' Day," is always an interesting event. A dozen girls belonging to Ealing House who recently won the prize at the Crystal Palace for singing, contributed effectively to the musical performance on the occasion. Lady Margaret, whose father, the Earl of Jersey, is president of the National Refuges, expressed great pleasure at the good work being done by the Society. Speeches were also delivered by Dr. Oliver, vicar of Ealing, Mr. Francis Hammond, of the committee, and by Mr. H. Bristow Wallen, secretary of the Society.

A Great Field Day.

THE SALVATION ARMY AT THE ALEXANDRA PALACE.

"THIRTY-THREE years of salvation!" Such was the subject of General Booth's speech, which may be regarded as the chief item in the day's proceedings on Monday last. And a very concise review of his life's work it was, setting in array the conquests and crosses—especially the former—that have marked its course. I remember the Army's first great "outing," in 1882, at this same Alexandra Palace, made memorable to my mind by the sanguine espousal of hopes as yet unfulfilled. "We are only on borrowed ground to-day," exclaimed the General, "but make no mistake, we shall march on and take no rest until we have acquired this place as our own!" For it was an open secret that it was in those days seriously contemplated to aim at securing the Palace as a great "Salvation Temple" and general chief centre of the Army's operations. But neither Providence nor a charitable public favoured so vast a scheme, and the relations of the Army and the Palace remain pretty much the same to-day as then.

Yet this does not necessarily spell failure. In the intervening years other schemes have been floated which have done more to uplift fallen humanity than even the acquirement of the Palace would have done; and who shall say the money has not been more wisely spent? It is with no less pardonable pride that the General can marshal his forces and tabulate his figures to-day; and if any cynic had doubts of the Army's hold upon the populace, his fears would have been allayed in no small degree by the great concourse on Monday of bonâ-fide members of which the organisation is justly proud. Sights many, sounds more—fearful and wonderful some of them, to be sure, but all betokening an enthusiasm which was as a breeze from the briny to a fagged and weary worker, in these days of all too respectable, not to say half-hearted, religious profession.

Of course perspiration is not always inspiration, nor are vehemence and piety synonymous terms; but make what allowance you will, the fact remains that, literally, millions of persons have heard the Gospel of the Saviour's love during the past year, indoors and out of doors, by the wayside, by the bedside, and wheresoever else men and women, willing or unwilling, have been found.

To us, the eccentricities of a "field day" are of as small moment as the exuberance of a child let out from school, compared to the real solid work carried on day by day, all the year round, under circumstances often as heart-breaking and depressing as the combination of the forces of evil can produce. Homes made happy, lives redeemed, souls saved—these are the actual and lasting features of the Army's work. And in the doing of it the mission of the Saviour is fulfilled—to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, to comfort those that mourn, and to give the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness.

One of the most picturesque ceremonies of the day was the religious wedding of Brigadier Powell with Brigadier Miss Sommer, which took place in the Concert Hall, under the superintendence of Commissioner Howard. Mr. Powell had been for several years engaged in Army work, first in Holland, and afterwards in Norway, Japan, and India; the bride was a well-known Norwegian officer. The civil ceremony had previously taken place at a registry office. G.

National Vigilance Association.

THIS Association has had another busy year. The work of the office has been as full and as various as in former days. Of the special features and achievements arrived at perhaps the most important has been the development of measures for the protection of girls going abroad, or coming over to this country, in search of situations. The Association has succeeded in very largely increasing its agencies for this purpose. It now has a list of some 160 friends in ports and towns, willing and able to befriend any girl. On all the principal lines of Continental steamers and on the South African Union line the warnings to girls are exhibited, and the lists of friends are distributed. The importance of including the South African steamers is seen in the fact that there is a large traffic to feed the vices of Johannesburg.

Mr. J. Compton Rickett, M.P., presided over the annual meeting in Exeter Hall on Wednesday evening last week. During the past thirteen years there has been an appreciable diminution in the grosser forms of social evil in London, owing to the labours of the association in in the direction of public decency; but much remains to be done in fighting the popular view that, of necessity, a certain amount of vice must exist. He was happy to state that a Government amendment of the Vagrancy Act was in contemplation which would have considerable effect upon houses of ill-fame in the West-end and upon those men who live by the earnings of shame.

Thankful recognition of valuable work done by the association was made by Mrs. Ormiston Chant; and very eloquently did she appeal to the hearts of parents on behalf of "somebody's girl." While there is cause of gratitude that it no longer means social ostracism to be industriously at work sweetening the moral atmosphere, yet there is danger of forgetting that it is one thing to accomplish an end in some measure, and quite another and the latter purpose means more financial support for the widespread operations of the Associations, if only in the interests of the thousands of mothers who look upon the organisation as a father to their fatherless girls. National honour demands that we leave England sweeter than we find it, and seek to so educate public opinion that it shall not accept the debased idea of a dual moral standard for men and women.

Rev. W. Carlile, of the Church Army, pleaded that vigilance work must not be left to the enthusiastic few. From the nature of the subject there is much hesitation to take up such effort; but the mind of the Master demands that we use our influence to bring the strength of the pulpit and of the Press to bear upon the evil, in addition to our stimulation of police activity. Though so much evil remains in our great city as compared with others, yet the purpose of purification is still dear to the heart of God.

On behalf of the meeting, Mr. W. T. Stead urged the Executive in the organisation of district centres in all parts of the United Kingdom, in order to afford advice and assistance in dealing with vice, and in creating a healthy public opinion. A coldly indifferent Press and an apathetic public show that there is a long way to go yet in this work, and the end will be nearer in view when women are placed upon the full basis of recognised citizenship and social equality. Much remains to be done in raising the standard in the estimation of woman herself; and with what consistency can we condemn heathen infanticide when mothers in our own favoured land kill their children before they are born? Not only must we seek recognition of the moral responsibility of both parents in such cases, but there is much need of kindly Christian regard for unwanted children, who have known neither father's nor mother's care.

Mr. Henry J. Wilson, M.P., believed that the action of the Association has diminished vice, though there may be an apparent increase from enlarged activity in the punishment of the offenders. It is undoubtedly owing to the action of the Association that Governmental legislation on the question is impending.

The powerful influence of Mr. Stead's revelations of 1885 in raising the age of consent in the United States was described by Mr. Aaron Powell. Between the two countries, said he, there is a new development in which many rejoice. Let the relationship henceforth be to lead the world to a higher level for womanhood as well as for man.

Colonel Dalbiac, M.P., spoke of the great advance made in public opinion towards demanding an equal standard of morality for men and women, and expressed satisfaction that the Association has drafted bills to amend the Criminal Law Amendment Act; also to punish, and in the case of foreigners, to expel from the country, persons who make a living out of the immoral earnings of women.

The valuable nature of the Association's work as seen in improved laws, in the living down of incessant disparagement of the cause of public decency, and in the suppression of improper books and pictures was spoken of by Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P.; and the meeting closed with a few words from Dr. Birkbeck Nevins, of Liverpool.

International Y.M.C.A. Conference.

WORK amongst students commanded considerable attention at the Basle Conference, an evening meeting, in addition to other references, being devoted to the subject. There was also a meeting of the English and Colonial delegates, convened specially for the purpose of devising means for drawing closer the bonds which already exist through mutual interest and kinship.

Interesting papers were read on the subject of Bible classes and of prayer meetings. During the Conference an afternoon was devoted to an excursion to St. Chrischona, a very important Protestant seminary and residence (near Basle), in which a great many devoted young men are trained for evangelistic work. The institution elicited great admiration and interest, but the excursion was considerably marred by the absence of organisation and oversight.

Amongst other features of interest in the Conference was an excellent exhibition of Y.M.C.A. literature, maps, statistical charts, etc., from various parts of the world.

Papers were presented on Friday morning, July 8, on the "Inner Work of the Association," the several departments being dealt with by Rev. Dr. Wurster (Heilbronn), Rev. Gustave Tophel (Lausanne), Mr. T. J. Wilkie (Toronto), Rev. J. Glyn Davies (Newport, Mon.), Rev. Mr. Haggstrom (Norrkoking, Sweden), and Rev. Mr. Moll (Courcelles). The afternoon was occupied by an excursion to St. Chrischona.

On Saturday morning the topic for discussion was "The Aggressive Missionary Work of the Associations." For Italy, Mr. Emile Eynard (Turin) was the speaker; for Russia, Pastor Findeisen (St. Petersburg); for Holland, Mr. Van Oosterwijk Bruyn (Zeist); for France, Mr. Samuel Laune (Nîmes); for Great Britain, Mr. Archibald Kennedy (Edinburgh); and for Germany, Mr. E. Wartmann (Berlin). The business session of the Conference followed after luncheon, and the consideration of work amongst lads occupied the remainder of the afternoon. In the evening Mr. Alois Adlof (Prague), Mr. W. M. Oatts (Glasgow), Professor Szabo (Budapest), and others addressed the delegates; while a meeting for the general public was being conducted in the Cathedral by the Revs. Ch. Correvon (Frankfort), and A. Baumgartner (Berne).

On Sunday, 10th inst., Count Bernstorff, of Berlin, led a devotional meeting at 8.30 a.m., followed by sectional Church services. The preacher at the English service, held in St. Alban's Church, was Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, M.A., of Portman Chapel, Baker-street, London. At 11 o'clock there was a united Communion service in the Cathedral, Right Rev. A. von Salis officiating.

The closing service took place in the Cathedral in the afternoon, when the speakers were Sir Geo. Williams (London), Rev. Frank Thomas (Geneva), and Right Rev. K. Krummacher (Elberfeld).

The following day the delegates scattered to enjoy the beauties of Switzerland; others proceeding to a students' conference at Eisenach; while others again needed to return to London direct. Seeing Switzerland has this year been made delightfully simple and attractive. The railway companies issue a fortnight's season ticket, available over the whole country—except the mountain railways—for 24s. third class, 35s. second class, 50s. first class; the only provision necessary is that the applicant hand in an unmounted photograph, 2½in. by 1¼in. in the picture (bust). This unrestricted travelling is touring made easy.

Christ for Me.

Who gave Himself for us. Titus ii. 14.
Who gave Himself for me. Gal. ii. 20.
Who gave Himself for our sins. Gal. i. 4.
Christ hath given Himself for us. Eph. v. 2.

CHRIST for me! Exchange mysterious!
Christ for me. Oh! wondrous thought;
God's dear Son for me, the sinner!
This is what his love hath wrought.

He, the Just, for me, the unjust;
He made sin that I might be
In Him made to God for ever
Righteousness and purity.

He for me despised, rejected,
Bearing all my pain and loss;
Bowed beneath the bruising, scourging,
He for me upon the cross.

Christ for me! Exchange all glorious,
Noonday for my nature's night:
For my rags, his vesture, shining
Whiter than the whitest light.

He for me! Before the Father
My Forerunner there I see;
Throned on God's right hand for ever,
In the heavenlies, He for me!

He for me! His life, that dies not,
Flowing to me pure and free.
Hour by hour Himself He gives me,
Sweet, mysterious—He for me.

The Kashmiri Bible.—On June 15 Rev. Hinton Knowles wrote: "Many a mickle makes a muckle," and pays the bill. I think I require just £20 more, at the present rate of expense, to produce the Kashmiri Bible free of debt. I sold some of the printed portions the other day, Genesis, Psalms, etc.—our first sale. I almost trembled with joy. May God indeed bless this work, the scattering of his own Word throughout the land." Offerings in aid of this undertaking may be sent to Miss Tucker, 74, Carlton-hill, Abbey-road, N.W., or to Mr. H. G. Malaher, secretary Missionary Leaves Association, 20, Compton-terrace, Upper-street, Islington.

National Home-reading Union.—The summer assembly of this organisation will be held at Exeter during the last week of this month. The aim of the Union may be summed up in a short sentence: to render study attractive. The experience of the past nine years has proved to the council of the society that there is no other means by which this can be accomplished so effectively as by taking the student to the locality which most abundantly illustrates his work. The object of the meeting at Exeter Hall will be the study of the monuments with which the district abounds, illustrative of the archæology, art, and history of early England. The inaugural address will be delivered by Sir George W. Kekewich, K.C.B., Secretary of the Education Department. Several courses of lectures will be given, and excursions will be made to interesting places in the neighbourhood. The assembly is not restricted to members of the National Home-reading Union, but is open to all, on the payment of a small fee. The full programme may be obtained from the Office of the Union, Surrey House, Victoria Embankment, London, W.C.

Oxford Letter.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

WE rejoice to be able to record a growing interest in all spiritual work during the last term. The Missionary Union especially has received an impetus from the visit of Mr. Mott, and many men have gone down with hearts awake to the great need of the "regions beyond." The work of the Oxford Pastorate is thus slowly but surely telling on the University, and the movement, pledged as it is to a directly spiritual work among the undergraduates, appeals for the prayer and support of all who have the needs of the University at heart.

Once again the quiet of the Sabbath was disturbed by the processions of last Sunday in aid of the hospital. To very many this mode of raising money is objectionable. The regular services are disturbed by the incessant noise of the bands, and work in the Sunday-school made exceedingly difficult. Moreover, it is to be regretted that drunkenness is one of the evils accruing from the custom of parading the streets on a hot July day. The Rev. F. J. Chavasse was the preacher at the Cathedral, but a large number left during the service. We are glad to find that this action has called forth a protest from the Oxford Times, which urges that the disturbance to the quiet of the city, the amount of Sabbath breaking occasioned, and the drinking that goes on in the licensed houses, makes it doubtful if the end justifies the means.

The sudden death of Mr. G. C. Amphlett has removed from our midst a bright example of a devoted Christian worker. A loyal member of the Methodist Free Church, he had endeared himself to all sections. As a preacher of the Gospel, as president of the P.S.A., and as a prominent member of the Free Church Council, his personality will be much missed. We remember, however, that God hires his workmen and carries on the work.

Temperance workers should be encouraged by the fact given on Thursday at a meeting of the St. Peter-le-Bailey Temperance Festival. Rev. Langdale Smith was the speaker, and he quoted several instances where whole families had been reclaimed from intemperance. Oxford lags behind somewhat in aggressive temperance work, but while the need is so imperative, and the Gospel so powerful, workers should not be wanting who will carry the war into the enemy's quarters.

A meeting in connection with the Jamaica Mission was held in the Parish Room of St. Mary's Church on Saturday evening. Rev. G. W. Downer, rector of Kingston, Jamaica, gave much interesting information of the country and the work. The poverty of the people was emphasised, the educational work described, and the success granted to missionary efforts in the island urged as a plea for sympathy and support.

Zenana Medical College.—Over 160 female students have been trained in connection with this college, and are now engaged as missionaries in Africa, India, China, Burmah, Syria, Palestine, and wherever women only are allowed to medically attend women. The cry from abroad is, "Send us missionaries with some medical knowledge." The college has been established in order to respond to that cry. The medical instruction given is very full, and students obtain by examination the certificate of the London Obstetrical Society. The fees are only fifty guineas a year for board, residence, and instruction. Many apply who are unable to pay even this moderate sum, and their applications the committee are reluctantly compelled to refuse from want of funds. Partially free scholarships are offered when funds permit. Hon. sec., Dr. G. de G. Griffith, 58, St. George's-road, S.W.

"NABOTH'S VINEYARD."—1 Kings xxi. 4-16.
GOLDEN TEXT.—"Thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's house."—Ex. xx. 17.

AFTER HOREB.

ELIJAH goes back and works in the school of the prophets. We do not hear so much of him, but this was like the still small voice. He had great influence at the court of Ahab. Carmel had had its influence on the queen. Persecution had ceased; those who had not bowed the knee to Baal were able to declare themselves.

Ahab still a bad man. This lesson shows the evil of his heart, just as a boil shows the poverty of the blood. A man cannot think bad thoughts and bad desires without it being seen in his conduct.

THE FLY IN THE OINTMENT (1).

There can be discontent in a palace. The king is grieved because he has not Naboth's vineyard. He has a kingdom, but he lacks a few acres which belong to another. We should fix our attention on the things we have, rather than on those we have not.

The small troubles upset us more than the great ones. We know how to deal with a manly enemy, but a swarm of mosquitoes worry us infinitely more. Paul relied on God for his needs; therefore he could say, "I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content."

JEZEBEL'S BAD COUNSEL (5-7).

She sneers at his puerile grief, and promises to obtain the vineyard for him.

Lesson.—We rise or fall with our companions. The coal that does not burn blackens. You cannot touch pitch and not have your fingers soiled.

Illustration.—The tree frog becomes green by living among the green leaves of trees.

The flat-fish assumes the colour of the sand on which it lies. So we are coloured by our companions.

COVETOUSNESS, GOOD AND BAD.

It was bad in Ahab, because he wished for that which would make another man the poorer.

People ruined by coveting the treasures of other people. Leads to theft and gambling. Starves the mind, sears the conscience, kills faith, and stifles better feelings. "Covet earnestly the best gifts." Aspire to the virtues of good men and women. You become richer, and they are none the poorer.

Teacher should point out the right place of ambition. Strive to succeed not to beat others, but to do good. Ambition in the present, not future. Do the duty of to-day well.

DEATH OF NABOTH (9-14).

Jezebel orders a fast as though some great calamity overhung the city. The reason for this would be asked on every hand. Then two ruffians (sons of Belial) would bear witness (false) against Naboth, charging him with some imaginary crime, for which he should suffer death.

Naboth loved his home, therefore he would not part with it. If Ahab were a good man he would have admired Naboth for this.

Love of home spring of many virtues.

Lesson.—Thankful that we live in a land and time where such injustice cannot be meted out.

We must do our part to keep Britain true to justice. Each one has his part to play. We owe this as our duty to our native land.

Not soldiers only are patriots.

A GUILTY CONSCIENCE (15-16).

The coward murderer sneaks into the possession of his victim. Ahab is met by Elijah—"Mine enemy." It was his guilty conscience that rebuked him. He should have listened to that conscience before the deed was done. Conscience is ruined not at once but little by little.

Illustration.—Mirror may be broken into a thousand pieces and spoiled. But it may also be spoiled by each day making scratch on the quicksilver at the back. So by little stories, evil thoughts and words, men spoil conscience.

Only one safeguard against Ahab's awful fate "Keep thy heart with all diligence," and pray without ceasing that God will give you grace to resist all wrong coming into the heart.

A Pleasant Day at Addlestone.

I THINK you would all have liked to be with me last Thursday at this village in beautiful Surrey, but as you were not I will tell you something about it.

Addlestone is about twenty miles from London, and there are, as we might say, two villages, one inside the other. "How can that be?" you ask. In this way. A Christian lady, Mrs. Meredith, being fond of little girls, and feeling very sorry for those who are in any trouble, opened some "Homes" (before any of you were born!) twenty-seven years ago, especially for those whose parents have been or are in prison. The good Duchess of Teck, who, you remember, died last year, was very much interested in this Christ-like work, and gave her name to these Homes, which are arranged like a little village, with a green in the middle, and are called The Princess Mary Village Homes for Little Girls.

Last week they held their annual festival, and you will be glad to know that although the Duchess herself is dead, her daughter, H.R.H. the Duchess of York, has taken her place as patroness. She often went with her mother to visit the village when she was a little girl herself, and thus became interested in it. So she went down to the festival with several lords and ladies to give away the prizes to those who have been successful in their work during the year. Some were for excellence in sewing others for laundry work, conduct, general improvement, etc.; while some of the "mothers" in charge of the different cottages were also rewarded for their kindness and skill in managing the little ones under their care. About sixteen children live in each cottage (about 170 altogether), some of them very little mites, others almost ready to go out to service. They do a good deal for themselves, besides learning all kinds of housework. For instance, last year the number of garments made by the girls for their own use was 1622; those executed for orders were 212; stockings made by machine, 234; by hand for themselves, 230.

So you see they have to be very industrious, which all helps them to grow up useful women.

There was quite a grand company present, including Lord and Lady Herschell, Lady Mary Lygon, Lady Elizabeth Biddulph, Lady Normanton, Lady Lucan, Lady Jane Hilsford, the Baroness Burdett-Coutts, Lord Leven and Melville, Sir John Bramstone, Lord Iveagh, Lord Wimborne, Lord Rookwood, Colonel Howard Vincent, and the Dean of Rochester. Is it not nice to find all these interesting themselves in these poor children, and helping to make their young lives happy and bright?—such a contrast to the way most of them had to live in their unhappy homes. How thankful you ought to be to our Heavenly Father for giving you kind, loving parents and comfortable homes. If you would like to show your thankfulness in a practical way, I will forward to Mrs. Meredith any gifts you may send me for this good work.

Uncle Tom's Bathing Machine.

WHAT a boon was this to our little cripples at Southend last year! But it really seemed the weather would never get hot enough for using it this year. Cold winds and high tides prevailed, and the little folk were content to sit on the beach opposite their beautiful home and watch the ships, big and little, pass and repass on the mighty highway—Old Father Thames—without the smallest desire to taste what the waves were like, or to strip in the bathing machine.

But now the glorious weather has come. It is "so hot," the one desire is to get into the water, and of course the machine so generously provided by Uncle Tom and his big family of nieces and nephews is called into requisition. As a matter of fact we have a new one, as the other was not made quite as we wanted. Many of those who are interested in this page will be going to Southend, really the nearest seaside spot to the metropolis, and all are asked to look out for the famous bathing machine, remembering that the Home is close by, and that visitors will be heartily welcomed at any time by the kind-hearted matron. I am sure none of the contributors will want their money back again!

Our Eleventh Prize Competition.

I HAVE pleasure in giving below the names of the successful competitors. Some of the papers were very well done, and show that much time and thought have been spent in studying the Scriptures. But many of the papers are not so carefully done as I should like to see them. This probably is owing to the summer weather and school competitions, and I hope that next time I may be able to say that all show great improvement. To those who have failed, or who come low down on the lists, I wish better success next competition, and sincerely hope they will not get discouraged, but try to head the lists next time.

Daniel the Prophet.

(From "Daniel's Great Prophecy," by Dr. Nathaniel West.)

BLEST prophet! second to no seer,
Whose eyes beheld the coming day,
To whom the sacred task was given
To paint the End and point the Way!

The world's whole future thou hast seen,
The march of empires, ages down;
Israel's long pathway to the goal;
Their conflict, victory, and crown.

The wars of twice a thousand years,
Five hundred more, and more to come;
Earth's kingdoms scattered like the chaff,
For one alone to find the room.

For Babylon, a place no more;
The Persian, Greek, and Roman line
Egypt and Syria swept away
To set a throne in Palestine.

The blood-stained Horns that gore the world,
The Teuton, Bourbon, bold to scoff,
Islam, Tiara, downward hurled
Braganza, Saxon, Romanoff.

Secrets of terror thou hast told,
Of glory, too, so strange to tell;
Visions beside the rushing streams,
Euphrates, Ulai, Hiddekel.

Time's footfall measured by the hand
That wheels the orbs in orbits high,
The Seasons, Ages, Epochs, Ends,
The calendar of history:

Messiah, first upon the cross,
Then hidden long from mortal view;
Messiah coming on the clouds
To judge the Gentile and the Jew.

The risen saints thine eyes beheld,
The Antichrist sent to his doom:
Delivered Israel, new-born, saved;
The "Kingdom, Power and Glory" come!

O prophet of thy people, great!
Above thy grave, to Shushan lent,
Thy "Kitab Emeth," "Book of Truth,"
Is thine eternal monument!

In vain the critic plies his art
To fiction made of heaven-born words,
Immortal still the "words" remain—
Thine own, the angel's, and the Lord's.

Rest undisturbed, till yonder morn
Awakes the "many" from the dust;
Within thy lot thou then shall stand
In resurrection of the just.

In brightness like the golden sun,
And glittering as the largest star,
Splendour shall crown thy labour done,
Nor age-long years its brightness mar.

"Hayi-Olam," streaming in from God,
"Zohar," the gleam that fadeth never;
Thy portion these, with Jesus near
Amen! For ever and for ever!

Thy Hope our Hope, thy Faith our Faith,
Thy people on our heart in prayer,
One day our eyes the joy will see,
And then with thee the glory share!

The Haven.—This useful Rescue Home in Southwark reports 149 girls dealt with last year. A touching account of the quiet, earnest, personal work done in going after the lost and endangered is given in the new report. "Our needs are pressing always; just now we especially want help to send more than one away for country air and rest. Clothing is very much needed, when we are sending so many once more into the world." Contributions to the mission should be addressed to Col. J. F. Morton, Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, or to the Deaconess in charge of The Haven, 60, Trinity-square, Borough, S.E.

City Workwomen.—The Convalescent Home in Whitehall-road, Woodford Wells, receives on an average nearly 300 visitors, who come every year for longer or shorter stays varying from one week to four, so that since the Home opened about 4000 have rested in it. The Home is for women and girls working at various trades in the City, who are ill, tired, or needing change. The terms in full are 8s. per week, but few of the girls can pay more than part of this, and many must come free of charge or not at all. The Home will not accommodate more than ten at a time, so never loses its "homely" character. It is under the direction of Miss Helen Reynolds, Epping New-road, Buckhurst Hill.

Y.M.C.A.

NATAL possesses a flourishing Association in the capital—Maritzburg. The general secretary, Mr. A. W. Frodsham, writes: "We have recently entered large and convenient premises, with boarding accommodation for fifteen men." Mr. Frodsham warns people from sending to Natal those who are in an advanced stage of consumption. Many are the sad cases of such persons dying within a few months of their arrival. All young men in search of work should have testimonials as to character and ability.

In a brief report to British friends, the committee of the Lyons Association tells an encouraging story. Bible-class and prayer meetings are held every week, and every effort is being made to bring the largest possible number of young men under the influence of the Word of God. The members of the Missionary Association correspond with several missionaries. The letters received from these friends help greatly to maintain interest in the great work of foreign missions. Our Boys' Union is the most encouraging of the various branches of the work. The ninety youths who belong to it are full of life, and it is hoped that many of them will become members of the Association and good soldiers of Christ.

By kind invitation of Mr. and Mrs. T. F. Victor Buxton, the committees of the Y.M.C.A.'s compris the N.E. Metropolitan District Union met in conference at Warlies, Waltham Abbey, on Saturday last. Between sixty and seventy delegates were present. The conference was of a most helpful character, the subject being "The Inner Life of the Association." Amongst the visitors were Mr. D. Marshall Lang and Dr. Anderson, C.B., of Scotland Yard. Other points urged by various speakers were: (a) Members should first prove their fitness by joining as associates for at least three months; (b) that a monthly meeting of members should be held at which reports of work and financial statement for past month should be presented, new members welcomed, and suitable address delivered; (c) systematic visitation of absentee members; (d) better spirit of all-round fellowship; (e) that the reception of new members should be made of far greater importance; (f) work should be found for every member, including the revival of the allotment system.

Christian Endeavour.

So far as is known, Russia is the only country in the world without its C.E. Society. England has 4647; Canada, 3456; Australia, 2284; Scotland, 535; India, 433; Wales, 331; Ireland, 213; China, 139; Africa, 110.

There are now within the borders of the United States 41,222 societies. Pennsylvania has 3679 societies, New York 3117, Ohio 2450, Illinois 2072, Indiana 1414, Iowa 1358, and Michigan 1072. These figures do not include junior, intermediate, and other societies.

The seventeenth International Convention of the Y.P.S.C.E. has been in session at Nashville, Tenn. The president, Rev. Dr. F. E. Clark, in his annual message emphasised by a comprehensive address the one and only purpose of the Society—to bear fruit unto God.

During the past year 27,686 juniors have become members of the church. From the intermediate societies 1518 have joined their home churches, and 196,550 from the Young People's societies, making a total reinforcement of church membership during the year of 225,754.

Liverpool P.S.A.—Mr. Charles M'Arthur, M.P., distributed the prizes for regular attendance gained by the members of the Byrom Hall P.S.A. Society, Liverpool. The membership is now about 450, Mr. M'Arthur being called on to deliver some 400 prizes. He said he was informed that the P.S.A.'s numbered in Liverpool no less a membership than between 5000 and 6000.

Women's Total Abstinence Union.—Mrs. John Cory's "at home" at 4, Park Crescent, W., a few afternoons ago, to meet friends interested in the cause of this Union, was largely and influentially attended. Among those present were the Countess of Portsmouth, Lady Elizabeth Biddulph, Lady Lyell, Lady Gilbert Kennedy, Lady Anne and the Misses Campbell, Lady and Miss Spokes, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Bart, M.P., Mr. T. P. Whittaker, M.P., Hon. Mrs. Eliot Yorke, Mrs. Burnett Smith (Annie S. Swan), Mrs. W. S. Caine, Major and Mrs. Sheffield, Rev. Canon Barker, Mr. F. N. Charrington, Colonel J. T. Griffin, and many others. A pleasant and pleasurable feature of the gathering were the charmingly rendered songs of Miss Evangeline Florence and the harp solos of Miss Kathleen Purcell, both of which gifted artists generously gave their aid.

HOME MISSIONS.

Miss Daniell's Soldiers' Homes.

THESE valuable Homes were begun by the late Mrs. Daniell in 1862. After her death, branch homes were established by Miss Daniell in Colchester, Manchester, Plymouth, Chatham, London, and Windsor. These homes, or institutes, are intended as places of recreation, social enjoyment, and religious influence for soldiers, free from the temptations which so often surround them elsewhere. It is important to note that each Home is the centre of constant and earnest evangelistic and temperance effort. The new report points out that "for £2,800 last year six Soldiers' Homes, an iron room at Okehampton Camp from May to September, and two village missions were carried on. Hosts of souls have thus been brought to God and helped onwards in the Christian life."

Here is an incident to show the encouragement granted:—"We had heard from Miss Hanson that the missionary had seen a man named M—— reading his Bible in barracks. So we were on the look-out for him! And last night, after the service, up the room came a man to me, with a Bible under his arm, and a happy face. He said, 'You sent me a postal order for the money I had in your bank last year, and I never wrote to say I got it. It's been on my conscience ever since. But I've come to tell you I'm a changed man!'

"Then he told how he began to think down here, 'and then, when we went back to W——, I was converted.' He was in the last batteries down here last year; and during their last week used to come into the room late to put his money in the savings bank. I got to know him a little, and was interested in him. He used to talk to me about the drink being his temptation; and the last night we settled that I should send his money after him in an order. I did; and had never heard more of it.

"I told him how glad I was; and he nearly broke down in telling me about it all. He perfectly loves the Bible, and showed me his under his arm, quite well worn already."

The report from which we quote gives details of the six homes at Aldershot, Colchester, Plymouth, Chatham, London, and Windsor, and adds a number of incidents of blessing. Copies may be had of Miss Hanson, The Soldiers' Home, Aldershot.

A Scotch Y.M.C.A. Holiday Home.

THIS beautiful home, the gift of Lady Overtoun, was formally opened on Wednesday, June 29. It is situated on the hill above Kirn, with a most extensive view of the Firth of Clyde. The house was formerly used as a high-class ladies' boarding school, and has accommodation for thirty-six young women. The grounds are beautifully laid out, and it is in every respect an ideal place for a seaside home. In the absence of Lord Overtoun through illness, Mr. W. M. Oatts presided. After stating the objects of the Home, and the blessing it would be to many young women who have difficulty in finding a suitable place for spending their holiday, he called upon Lady Overtoun to address the meeting, and formally hand over the Home to the Scottish National Council. In doing this Lady Overtoun, in graceful terms, told how it had been laid on her heart during the Jubilee week in 1897 to commemorate the sixty years reign of our good Queen in some tangible way. The happy thought of a holiday home for young women was suggested to her, and acting on this good impulse she intimated her desire to purchase a house, and has now handed it to the Y.W.C.A.

Miss Hay, president of the Scottish division of Y.W.C.A., on behalf of the Council accepted the gift, and expressed the grateful thanks of all the members throughout Scotland for Lady Overtoun's thoughtful generosity.

Rev. Dr. Cameron, Rev. Messrs. MacMorran, Johnstone, Gray, and McNicol also took part in the proceedings. Tea was served, and the friends inspected the house, all being of one opinion that it is admirably suited for its purpose, and sure to prove a great blessing to many young women. Miss MacTavish, the lady superintendent, has already received many applications from different parts of Scotland and from English friends.

London's Working Girls.

MR. F. A. Bevan presided on Thursday afternoon at the opening of the extension of Garfield House, Fitzroy-square, one of the nine Homes opened in London for Working Girls. Mr. John Shrimpton, the founder of the Home, stated that the new building had cost £1400; this had been subscribed, and now what he wanted to clear the Homes of debt was £200 for furniture and legal expenses; and £300 to enlarge the dining-room and erect new lavatories and bath rooms. The Home accommodated ninety-seven girls, and was for girls who strove to gain an honest living but were unable to earn sufficient to provide for their maintenance in a respectable manner.

No fewer than 25,000 young people have made use of the homes since the first one was opened in 1878. Just over 500 of London's working girls are now not only "housed" but "homed" in these Homes. The chairman said he considered the work done in these Homes was one of the greatest for good in London—in which City there were so many temptations to innocent young girls from the country. He considered that the Home was imperfect without the new dining-hall, and he would, therefore, be pleased to start the subscriptions towards it with £50. It was announced that Sir John Hutton promised twenty-five guineas, and Mrs. M. Turner ten guineas. Sir John Hutton suggested that people with gardens a little way out of London should invite the girls from the Homes for a Saturday afternoon. Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., said that for thirty years he had been associated with the Y.M.C.A., but his sympathies with work for girls was far greater, for he considered they needed more protection than young men.

Homes for Working Boys.

THESE Homes, now numbering seven, report useful service among poor boys, receiving wages from 4s. per week. Describing the difficulties of this class, the Duke of Fife says:—

"Just imagine for a moment a boy without any home in London, and only earning a few shillings a week, cast upon the surging sea of London life. What is that boy to do? Where is he to go? Where is he to live? Is he to go to a common lodging-house and become the companion of beggars and tramps, and perhaps thieves? That boy is in imminent danger. He is hovering on the brink of ruin, between honesty and dishonesty, between poverty and crime. It is just at that moment he requires a helping hand, and he has that in the admirable efforts which have been made by those who founded these Homes."

The number admitted in 1897 was 331. Interesting details are given of religious effort in the various Homes, whilst cases are given showing the results of the work. Here is an incident illustrating the endeavours made to aid the boys in any special way needed:—

"Francis Wells, at seven years of age, was deserted by his parents, and became an inmate of Holborn Union Schools. In course of time he was admitted to one of our Homes, and remained for several years, but it was found that he could not retain any situation owing to defective eyesight, and he was compelled to re-enter the workhouse. The superintendent of Howard House, finding that the power of sight would probably be altogether lost, worked on his behalf, and the boy ultimately succeeded in learning basket-making and the Braille system of reading and writing, and in 1897 he was elected a resident of the School for the Indigent Blind at Southwark."

Copies of the report may be had of the treasurer and hon. secretary, the Hon. T. H. W. Pelham, Deene House, Putney Hill, S.W.

Alpha House Home.—To receive girls who, whether from ignorance, wilfulness, or depravity, had been led into temptation and fallen into sin, was the object in opening this Home at 45, Hanley-road, N. The work is under the management of a general council, which constitutes the Finsbury Park Rescue and Preventive Association, banded together to unite earnest Christians of all denominations for direct conflict with impurity, while teaching the obligation of the moral law upon men as well as women. Twelve years' experience has shown that the love which casts out fear, and is strong enough to enforce obedience, is the only lever that can be used efficiently in this work. The hon. sec. is Mr. Fish 32. Lancaster-road, Finsbury Park, N.

Sermon Lane Mission.

THE little seed planted nearly fifty years ago in a stable at Sermon-lane, having for its object the care of the neglected little ones of the neighbourhood, has developed into a mission tree with its manifold branches, producing fruit for the spiritual refreshment of old and young.

Sunday morning services have exhibited an increase in numbers, but the peculiar conditions of life amongst the poor prevent numerous attendance. In the evening, a well-filled hall, the stirring strains of the band, the softer notes of the choir, and the earnest exhortation of the speakers combine to make the service one of inspiration and of hope. A common platform is here presented for all sections of the Christian Church, for creeds and denominational distinctions are avoided, the aim being to "preach Christ and Him crucified" in all simplicity.

Last year the superintendent made many visits to the homes of the poor, the sick, and the dying. Relief is given with discrimination in the way of food or clothing. But more important than all is the opportunity to direct consideration to those truths, too often neglected in health, but eagerly listened to when trial or trouble unlocks the door of the human heart.

One great cause of encouragement has been to see the influence for good some of the girls connected with the "Young Women's Welcome" have exercised over others, and also to find, coming under influence again, those lost sight of, in some cases for years. Work among poor mothers and children, too, forms no inconsiderable part of the mission operations.

In temperance and Band of Hope effort it is sought to deal with one of the greatest hindrances to religious and social progress by counter attractions and associating the people in a common cause. Various social gatherings of a bright kind are another means of influence. Space would fail to tell of all that is done by the mission for the bodily and spiritual good of the poor in this neighbourhood. Every day of the week some good work is in progress at one hour or another. A typical feature is the free dinners to sandwich men during Cattle Show week at the Agricultural Hall close by. The work is superintended by Mr. Edward C. Cuthbert, 50, Liverpool-road, Islington, N.

Meeting of R.S.U. Associates.

A MEETING of R.S.U. Associates was held a few days ago, in the garden of Highlands, Champion-hill, by kind invitation of Mr. Henry Wood, chairman of the Council of the Union. Mr. White, who works in connection with Costers' Hall, Hoxton, gave an account of what their Christian Endeavour Society (seventy or eighty members) was enabled to do in what was described as one of the poorest and most densely crowded quarters. From Costers' Hall they took three parties of children into the country, 800 at a time.

An associate from Rev. F. B. Meyer's church, in South London, said they received flowers from the West of England for distribution; and members of the Sunshine Committee of the Christian Endeavour had purchased a bath-chair, in which they took cripple children out into the open air. Mr. John Kirk, secretary of the Ragged School Union, said that they owed a debt of gratitude to Christian Endeavour Societies all over the country. The cry from every centre was for more workers, not only in London but also in the great towns.

Gospel Tent Mission.—This work, under the direction of Mr. Gerald R. Coultas, has accomplished an inestimable amount of social, moral, and spiritual good in the district of Barry Dock, since its establishment in 1895. The cause with which Mr. Coultas is heart and soul associated is a strictly unsectarian one. Five times every week in the winter, and eight times every week in the summer, meetings are held in the open air, and every evening throughout the year there is an indoor service, in the hall in the winter, and in the tent in the summer, and the encouraging attendances afford ample indication of the degree of appreciation felt for the work of the Mission, which embraces, in addition, varied effort for the spiritual, moral, and physical good of old and young. In the words of Mr. Richard Cory: "The work is thoroughly done, is conducted on New Testament lines, and deserves and demands hearty support." Mr. Coultas's address is Mission House, Weeton Hill, Barry Dock, S. Wales.

The Student Movement.

THE history of the connection between theological colleges and the Students' Christian movement in Britain is full of interest. Thought, effort, and money have not been spared during the five years of the existence of the movement in this country to make this connection definite and fruitful, so sure were all the leaders that this world-wide union would be incomplete if British theological students were not a living and energetic factor in it. In the autumn of 1897 it became clear that some very definite forward move was absolutely necessary. Everything pointed to the fact that the demand to join in this movement had not as yet come spontaneously and unequivocally from within our theological colleges. Three persons who had been thinking out what new step should be taken, came independently to the conclusion that a Conference or conferences for theological students only was the solution of the difficulty. Anxieties connected with the enterprise sufficed to cast its promoters upon God, obstacles were gradually cleared away, Birmingham was the place selected, and large and wonderfully representative gatherings were seen there during the week ending April 16 last. Everyone who was privileged to be present felt it to be indeed true concerning men who delivered addresses and others who profited by this abundant and varied ministry that "great grace was upon them all."

The meetings were full of practical help and inspiration; and we trust that the spiritual power and influence of the Conference will be widely extended, not only in colleges but among Christians generally, by the report of what was said and done.* Among the important subjects treated by Revs. J. Kelman, W. E. Burroughs, F. Baylis, F. B. Meyer, G. H. C. Macgregor, Mr. J. R. Mott (U.S.A.), and several others, were the call, perils, and mission of the ministry; the work of the Holy Spirit; devotional study; intercession; the duty of the Church to the world. The speeches—more especially those of Mr. Mott—proved to men that they might really expect God's blessing on a scale which would make "the watchword" no empty vision; and even the most critical realised that the whole movement has the marks of Divine origin and strength

NORTHFIELD CONFERENCE.

THE opening session of the annual gathering of Christian students from various American Universities was held at Northfield on Sunday, 3rd inst. The meetings were well attended, and the succeeding days were no less full of interest than the first. The opening address was given by Rev. C. J. Scofield, pastor of the church at Northfield most closely associated with Mr. Moody's work, and where the evangelist himself attends when at home. The subject was Isa. xi. 31, "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength," from which the speaker drew some practical lessons well suited to the occasion and scope of the conference.

To wait upon God is to be silent that He may speak, expecting all things from Him, and girded for instant, unquestioning obedience to the slightest movement of his will. Before God uses a man greatly He isolates him. Not the isolation of a monastery, I do not mean that. He gives him an isolating experience. He passes him through something, and when it is over those about him, who are no less dear than before, no less loved than before, are no longer depended upon. He realises that he is separated unto God, that the wings of his soul have learned to beat the upper air, and that God has told him unspeakable things which it is not lawful to utter. Now the man who has learned to mount up with wings as an eagle enters into a great quietness. Hear what Paul says. Paul was an eagle man, if there ever was one, and he says that it is a very small thing with him that he should be judged of you, or of man's judgment. You cannot vex that man, you cannot turn aside that man's life. He will love you, no matter what you do, because he does not depend upon you. He is not expecting anything from you, in this world or the next, and so he can be all things to you to win you. We may walk and not faint under the wear and petty vexations and frictions of everyday life, but only on condition that first of all we have been waiting upon God. We may not renew or change strengths, we may not take the eagle flight, unless we have first learned to "wait upon the Lord."

The subsequent meetings will be noticed next week.

The Pioneer Mission.

THE object of this Mission is to glorify God by spreading the Gospel anywhere where God opens the way. This is carried out by general mission work, by helping to resuscitate weak and struggling churches, and, where necessary, making the work permanent by the formation of a church on Baptist lines. Begun in a quiet and unostentatious manner, the work has been steadily growing, and is now well developed, and likely to increase still more rapidly in the near future.

There are many places in our land where no adequate provision is made for the spiritual needs of the people, and the founder and hon. director of the mission, Pastor E. A. Carter, believes that the Baptist denomination, to which he belongs, should take a leading part in evangelising the masses. The late Mr. Spurgeon from the first took a great interest in the work and helped it largely, and it commands the sympathy and commendation of many good and true men prominent in Christian work. The work is eminently worthy of support, and, while it covers an extensive field, is worked as economically as possible, Mr. Carter giving his own services free. The general address is "Oreston," Bolingbroke-grove, Wandsworth Common, S.W.

Kingsdown Orphanage.

DAILY bread for a hundred and seventy-six little hungry mouths, and raiment for the like number of restless bodies—such is the need brought before us by the good work which the late Mrs. Ginever started in 1874. All this it means, and much more in the way of lighting, warming, education, heavy unlooked for expenses for improved sanitation, wisdom for those responsible, faith, courage, grace, and patience to deal wisely and yet tenderly with a big family. The secretary, Miss Wenborn, is glad to see those who are desirous of making inquiries about the work at any time, but may always be found at Pemberton Gardens, Upper Holloway, on Monday morning or Thursday evening.

There is a branch Home for Infants at 8, Tremlett-grove, Junction-road; and a Home for Crippled and Afflicted Orphans at Cuthbert House, Granville-road, Broadstairs. The Orphanage is worthy of support, because cases are admitted on their merits without any system of voting. It admits boys and girls from all parts, is undenominational, accepts some cases that other orphanages decline, and is economically managed.

Burial Reform.—Sir Dyce Duckworth took the chair at 32, Wimpole-street, at the twentieth annual meeting of the Church of England Burial, Funeral, and Mourning Reform Association. The hon. sec. (Rev. F. Lawrence, Westow Vicarage, York) read the report, and said that an effort would be made to induce the Government to formulate in a Bill the recommendations made by the Parliamentary Committee of inquiry into the certification of the cause of death in all cases. A memorial was also to be presented asking for an exhaustive inquiry into the effect of earth burial on the soil around, the water below, and the air above burial places, with a view of gaining an authoritative judgment respecting the effect of earth burial. The chairman moved the adoption of the report, and Canon Barker seconded. The Earl of Stamford moved a resolution urging that preachers and teachers should enforce the Christian obligation of conducting burial of the dead promptly, innocuously, and inexpensively.

Sunday Work on Tramcars.—The committee of the Lord's Day Observance Society issue an appeal to the London County Council, in which reference is made with much satisfaction to the joint action of the Council and the North Metropolitan Tramways Company in the endeavour to secure at least a weekly rest for the employés of the company. The committee hopes that the thorough understanding of the usual conditions of labour which has prompted and enabled the County Council to secure a theoretical regard for the principle of weekly rest will impel it also to see that practical effect shall be given to its good intentions; that the tramway men shall enjoy their weekly rest, and when possible their Sunday rest; and that no supposed claims of the public or of the tramway company shall be allowed to override the claims of a very hardworked body of men.

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

Mrs. Baeyertz.

THIS richly gifted lady evangelist is now conducting a mission at Dr. Barnardo's Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, with distinct tokens of success. Although only just convalescent after influenza, and still far from well, she has not feared to address great meetings at 11, 3, and 7 on Sunday in the large hall, besides large gatherings on week-nights. The mission will conclude on Monday next with an illustrated address on "The Great Day of Atonement." Being herself a Jewess, Mrs. Baeyertz is eminently qualified to deal with that most interesting subject.

This evangelist makes much of the after-meeting, which she conducts after the fashion of a Bible-class, each inquirer after truth being supplied with a copy of the Book and directed to this passage and to that bearing directly on the way of salvation. Truly an excellent method. Under Mrs. Baeyertz's incisive appeals it is inspiring to see men and women full of years, and others, come boldly out from the crowd that they might find peace with God. The Lord's people have been greatly helped by the addresses specially meant for them, and the children have not been forgotten. Many who are members of the Edinburgh Castle Church to-day were brought in under Mrs. Baeyertz's influence during her last mission there some six years ago, and great permanent results are also expected from the meetings now in progress. The Edinburgh Castle is close to Burdett-road Station on the G.E.R. from Fenchurch-street. W. R. N.

Evangelistic Movements.

Mr. DICK SPRAGG conducted a most successful mission in the Tolbooth Hall, High-street, Glasgow, during the month of June. The interest was great, and not a few professed faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. G. F. S.

MR. HENRY THORNE, July 22, Teignmouth; 23, Exmouth; 24 and 25, Exeter; 26, Newton Abbot; 27, Torquay; 28, Liskeard; 29, Falmouth; 30, Truro; Aug. 1, St. Ives; 2, Penzance.

Requests for Prayer.

For a speedy settlement of the South Wales coal-miners' strike.

For much blessing at the opening service at the Hall-by-the-Sea next Sunday.

A widow in much trouble asks earnest prayer for the conversion of her only child.

That God may bless the effort of this summer in connection with the tent work of the Gordon Evangelistic Mission.

For one in very trying circumstances, whose faith is beginning to fail, that God will speedily send deliverance that she may be kept faithful.

Praise.

For several cases of blessing at daily week evening Gospel meetings on Margate sands in connection with the Y.M.C.A.

The Cause of Peace.—Friends of this movement will be glad to possess copies of a pamphlet containing a reproduction of the famous picture, "Les Grands Artisans de l'Arbitrage et de la Paix." M. Ansbert Labbé, for whom M. Danger painted this picture, has kindly placed at disposal copies of the pamphlet. About 100 celebrities are represented in the picture, for which an excellent key is provided. Copies may be had, with an English translation, on application (with a penny stamp for postage) to Miss Wade, manager of the Wisbech Peace Association Depôt, 4, High-street, Wisbech.

"Gospel Stamps."—Mr. H. M. Gooch, son of Pastor Fuller Gooch, has designed a series of stamp bearing Scripture testimonies and appeals. The object of the stamps is to reach postal employés and others in all English-speaking countries, relying upon the blessing of God to accompany the plain reading of his Word as contained in the texts. There is also a special text for Roman Catholics, and one text for use among those "waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." Should the sales be large enough to allow of profit, the same will be devoted to the Lord's work. Mr. Gooch's address is "Lansdowne," Park-road, West Dulwich, S.E.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

THE TRUTH-SEEKER.

Dear Sir,—I am glad to see the article on the above subject by "M." in this week's Christian; but, while largely agreeing with his contention, I feel that we need always to bear in mind the circumstances under which various Scriptures were written, else confusion must result. Take, for example, the passage in Ezekiel xviii. "The soul that sinneth it shall die," is true to-day, the New Testament and experience bearing witness; but what about another principle taught in the chapter, namely, that "when the righteous turn from his righteousness and committeth iniquity...all his righteousness shall not be mentioned;...in his sin that he hath sinned...shall he die"? Such a principle may hold under law, but does it hold under grace?—Yours sincerely, C. S.

July 15, 1898.

[Certainly not. Fundamental principles are always true. The legal dispensation proved that by deeds of the law shall no flesh be justified. Every dispensation had its own special teaching. Contrasts are as vital as comparisons and analogies.—Ed.]

DANIEL AND THE REVELATION.

Dear Sir,—Your notes of comment in the review of Mr. J. Tanner's "Daniel and the Revelation" appear to me to touch upon so important a point that I should be glad, by your favour, to lay before your many readers a few remarks enforcing the important fact you bring into notice when you say, "We think, also, the good and evil principles and forces which have marked the Papacy existed under Pagan Rome, and must be concentrated and intensified in the final crisis." If the evidences of the former are allowed their due weight the prophecies of the latter will more readily be accepted in their natural sense. Illogical as is such a result, I have often felt as though "Futurist" writers, as they are termed, expressed themselves in only too many instances as though Papal apostasy fell short in character of the first manifestation of Antichrist. If they have done so, by so much they have injured their own position. "Historicists," feeling assured that they are on true and firm ground in uncompromising denunciation of a character whose chronic desire and practice, wherever practicable, is to be drunken with blood, forget that such a character nevertheless admits of growth, progress, and, adopting your words, of concentration and intensity, and must of necessity wax worse and worse.

I look with the greatest hope to an endeavour to assimilate these truths by both schools quitting the region of opinion for absolute dependence on the Word of God. There we read that Satan had his throne at Pergamos, and Gentile history, the Gentiles having been his all but undisputed prey, informs us, in perfect conformity with Scripture, that this was on the expulsion, under Cyrus, of the Babylonian mysteries from Babylon. They subsequently moved to Etruria, and finally, so far as concerns the present time, settled at Rome. This system has never varied in its character, always clothing its infamy under religious pretence, but never able to deny its pedigree in action; it is at every stage the same, the counterfeit of revelation, the travesty of the truth which in all ages it has professed to uphold and teach to the "initiated." It is Babylon the Great, and must display itself in all Satanic attraction and power whenever the Spirit of God will withdraw the testimony of Jesus by the rapture of the saints.

To treat the Papacy as a Christian Church is to take the cloak for the beast which it conceals.—Yours faithfully, M. H. Synge.

A Garden Party.—The fifth annual missionary garden party arranged by the Young People's Missionary Association was held a few days ago in the grounds of the Stockwell Orphanage. The missionaries at home on leave were introduced to the visitors by Mr. A. H. Baynes, and Mr. F. J. Marnham presided at a meeting held on the lawn. The principal speakers—Mrs. W. Holman Bentley (Congo), Rev. F. D. Waldock (Ceylon), and Rev. Herbert Dixon (China)—related their experiences in their sphere of work, and a collection was made in aid of the India and China Schools. The Orphanage boys exhibited their skill in musical drill and hand-bell ringing.

Obituary.

MRS. N. M. BROWN, LIMAVADY.

On the morning of June 24 the wife of the Rev. Dr. N. M. Brown, of Fairy Fort, Limavady, was called home peacefully, after a long and trying illness, borne with great patience and submission. She was greatly beloved by all classes of the community, both on account of her gentle, unselfish disposition, and also for her untiring energetic work on behalf of all charitable and religious objects; and her death has left a vacant place which will be difficult to fill. The Connaught Schools, the Bible Society, the Orphan Society, and the Zenana Mission all found in her a willing worker and an indefatigable friend.

A Spurgeon Memorial.

Anniversary meetings were held last week in the temporary building of Hornsey-road Chapel.

On Sunday morning Mr. John G. Wheeler, of Mildmay, preached a most Scriptural and helpful discourse from Heb. ii. 4. In the evening an eager audience assembled to hear Mr. John Kensit. The preacher made slight allusions to his recent victory at the Quarter Sessions, and strongly urged Episcopolians (like himself) and Nonconformists to unite in contending earnestly for Scriptural teaching and practice in the Church of Christ, in view of the alarming increase of sacerdotalism. He was heard with close attention by an appreciative congregation. His text was 2 Tim iii. 15-17.

On Tuesday afternoon Pastor Fuller Gooch preached a sermon, marked by singular forcefulness and perspicuity, from Gen. xii. 9. Tea followed, after which a public meeting was held under the presidency of Mr. R. Cope Morgan. The pastor, Mr. Edwin Stuart, presented reports showing a steady increase in the various departments of Christian effort. During the year closed June 30, 1898, £135 had been paid on account of the site and building. Inspiring addresses were delivered by Revs. F. Carter (Wimbledon), W. C. Rhys (Stroud Green), Percy J. Smart (High Barnet), and J. M. Lane (King's Cross).

Palestine Exploration Fund.—At the annual meeting of the general committee, held recently, it was reported that a letter had been received from the British Consul at Jerusalem, conveying the information that permission to excavate in Palestine had again been granted by the Sultan, and that arrangements had been made for commencing work in the neighbourhood of Tell-es-Sâfi, the supposed site of Gath, about midway between Jerusalem and Ashkelon. The cost of these researches will be about £100 a month, and funds are needed in order that the work may be done quickly and efficiently. The office of the Palestine Exploration Fund is at 38, Conduit-street, London, W.

Anti-Infidel Tract Enterprise.—Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, of the Anti-Infidel Tract Enterprise, writes to say: "At this season of the year scarcely a day passes but we receive a communication from some open-air worker or Christian working-man, assailed by ungodly shopmates, appealing for a free grant of tracts to distribute; but, being absolutely without funds, what are we to do? In fact, our 'Gratuitous Tract Distribution Fund' is considerably overdrawn. Every subscriber of five shillings will receive an assorted parcel of tracts of the value of ten shillings. As Freethinkers readily supply their leaders with funds for the purpose of attacking Christianity, we feel it is only necessary for us to make our needs known to your readers to have them supplied." Communications should be addressed to Mr. Bradlaugh, at 70, King's Cross-road, W.C.

The Sorrows of the Potters.—Scarcely a day passes without its record of one or more specific cases in proof of the terrible sufferings and risks which workers in the Potteries have to endure for a bare livelihood—at the best—under conditions that are perilous to life. A recent case is thus alluded to: "F. has for some years been a dipper in the employment of one of the best-known pottery firms. Last September he was taken ill with colic, and he has been laid by ever since. Like numbers of other pottery workers, he has lost the use of his hands. One hand is weak and swollen, and the other dropped at the wrist, so that he can do no work. When, or rather if, he recovers the use of his hands he will have to consider whether he shall risk offending the great firm by venturing to ask for the chance of beginning life afresh in a safe branch of the trade. The firm has never given him a penny, and he thinks the chances of his regaining a place are slight." A few weeks ago the Home Secretary appointed Dr. Oliver, of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and Professor Thorpe, F.R.S., London, as experts to inquire into the causes and prevention of lead poisoning in the Potteries.

A New Training Colony.

At Lingfield, Surrey, memorial-stones of new buildings required by the development of a training colony for the unemployed, were laid last week by the Lord Bishop of Hereford and Rev. Dr. J. Monro Gibson. The Christian Union for Social Service, of which Mr. J. F. B. Tinling is hon. sec., co-operates with all Christian Churches and the Guardians of the Poor, from whom it receives men under forty-five years of age. It is expected that the new buildings will be ready for occupation in October. Next year it is probable that a home for inebriates and another for epileptics will be founded at Lingfield. It is also the committee's desire to establish a rescue home for women.

The training colony was established eighteen months ago by this society, which is little talked of in London, although it has long been doing a good work in endeavouring to divert the stream of unemployed men, who are willing to work, from the workhouse to the farm, to provide crippled children with some sort of easy, remunerative employment, and to inaugurate a system of social redemption work generally.

The society does not seek to gain by the efforts of the colonists. It gives them every encouragement to make their labour as remunerative as possible by crediting the men with the profit they make. By this means a colonist can save a sum of money sufficient to give him another fair start in life. The contemplated extension will include a directors' house, an annexe to accommodate thirty crippled children and their attendants, a dormitory for an additional forty men, and a room for the "Christian Brothers," who share the work and life of the colonists.

Relief of Persecuted Jews.

On 13th inst. a meeting was held for this society at the house of Louisa Lady Ashburton, Admiral Sir F. Leopold McClintock in the chair. An interesting account was given by the Rev. Dr. Sheilds of his recent visit to Jerusalem. He was impressed by seeing the great numbers of Jews in and around Jerusalem, many of them starving refugees from persecution in other lands. He visited Abraham's vineyard, a mile from Jerusalem, and there found a number of these poor Jews working happily and diligently under Mr. W. H. Dunn, the manager, some quarrying and dressing stone, some building, some ploughing, others at work on the olive oil soap. He saw that the efforts to help the Jews to help themselves—already a blessing, would be greatly extended if British Christians only perceived the extensive opportunity now available for succouring the suffering Jews in Palestine. The sec., Mrs. Finn, gave an account of recent attacks upon the Jews in Russia, Roumania, and Galicia. The aim of this society is to show practical sympathy to those who have suffered at the hands of our erring fellow Christians. The office of the society is at 41, Parliament-street, S.W.

Personalia.

Dr. Barnardo will (D.V.) visit Guernsey at the end of July, and conduct a series of lectures there.

Rev. John McNeill was married at Belgrave Presbyterian Church, West Halkin-street, on Thursday, to Miss Millar, only daughter of the manager of the Union Bank of London (Charing Cross branch).

An L.C.M. Outing.—Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Veitch entertained the missionaries of the London City Mission on Wednesday, July 13, at East Burnham Park. The party numbered 380. After a day of recreation, brief addresses were given by Revs. J. G. Train (Upper Norwood) and S. L. Dixon (Park Chapel, Chelsea), who spoke with earnestness and power. The day was thoroughly reinvigorating to mind and body, the missionaries returning revived and refreshed for their work in the metropolis.

The Distressed Colliery District.—The Undenominational Christian Mission at Pontymoile, Mon., celebrated its twentieth S.S. anniversary on Sunday, July 3. The sweet singing of the children and their well learned recitations delighted the auditory. The cheerful faces did not reflect the sadness of their homes. Mr. Wintle, the devoted friend and helper of the workers (now out of work) in all that district, said that many a neat attire told of the self-sacrifice of a mother anxious to send her children nicely dressed. Long seasons of fasting and of eating unwholesome food have greatly increased sickness among them. Mr. Wintle desires to send some of these young sufferers for a fortnight's change of air and suitable food and nursing. Any friends desiring to lend a hand in saving a child from permanent debility or shortened life may send to our care. R. C. M.

In one of the Manchester churches it has been arranged that twenty-four members shall be on the look-out for strangers so that it will be impossible for anyone to attend the church for any length of time and remain unknown and solitary. They are also to note the absence of regular attendants, so as to prevent absentees from illness and other causes being overlooked.

A crowded and influential meeting, convened by Mrs. Basil Wilberforce, has been held in the Jerusalem Chamber of Westminster Abbey, to consider what steps can be taken to protect match-girls from the horrors of phossy jaw. Baroness Burdett-Coutts and the Duchess of Sutherland took part in the proceedings. The Duchess of Sutherland has given instructions that "Darkest England" matches only shall be used in her establishments.

The temperance party in Launceston have approached Mr. Kyffin Freeman, F.S.S., F.G.S., with a view to his becoming a candidate for the Launceston division. In the Stevenson Memorial College connected with the Irish Presbyterian Church at Ahmedabad thirty natives are in training for the ministry, and employ their vacation in doing evangelistic work.

The Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland, which was started seventy-six years ago by Chief Justice Lefroy, has as one of its rules that only one book—the Bible—be used, and that only one subject—what God has done for sinners—be spoken of. The society still continues to do a good work.

The largest temperance demonstration witnessed in the North of Ireland for a long time has taken place at Bandoran, and was attended by about three thousand people. Rev. Dr. Wylie, of Philadelphia, has just died after a long and honoured ministry of over fifty years. His father, Rev. Dr. S. B. Antrim), and left there in 1797 for the United States. The congregation to which he was called was then very small, but it became one of the largest and most influential in the city, and was the mother of ten other congregations, while several of its members became missionaries in India.

CHINA.—The British Minister has despatched a gunboat to Chinkiang and demanded the immediate restoration of order in that neighbourhood.—The Protestant and Catholic Missions of Shun-King-fu have been attacked by rioters, and a French priest, who has been captured by brigands, is held to ransom.—The rebels have captured nine towns and defeated the Imperial troops west of Wu-Chau. The famous secret society of the Triads is supporting the rioters in Southern China. They aim at the conquest of Kwei-lin-fu in the North, and Nan-ning in the south of Kwang Si.—An outbreak against the Dungans at Kansu is reported, while serious riots at Shanghai against the French have taken place.

THE WAR.—On Sunday, at mid-day, the "Stars and Stripes" was unfurled on the Governor's palace at Santiago by Captain McKittrick. At the same moment there drifted on the still air the distant booming of Captain Capron's battery firing a salute of twenty-one guns. In this manner, amid an estimated crowd of 10,000 persons, was the event of the war, so far as it has progressed, proclaimed—Santiago capitulated. But the surrendered city presents a pitiable sight. "Most of the houses have been sacked. The stores are all looted. Nothing eatable can be had for love or money." And the people themselves are starving! The docks are crowded with starving refugees awaiting the arrival of the Red Cross Society's steamer, State of Texas. Meanwhile Spain has made no overtures for peace, and the United States Government is not disposed to let matters drift. Vigorous methods are being adopted for a descent on the coast of Spain and for an attack on Porto Rico. Before either of these things can happen we trust that peace negotiations will preclude so stern a necessity. Meantime, the Spanish Government has suspended constitutional rights throughout the peninsula, so as to have a free hand in dealing with any disturbance which may follow the conclusion of hostilities.

THE BOOK WORLD.

Parliament's Tribute to Gladstone (1s. Jas. Bowden) contains the speeches delivered in Parliament on the occasion of Mr. Gladstone's death, compiled by D. Williamson, with notes and illustrations.

Scientific Method in Biology. By Dr. Elizabeth Blackwell. (Elliot Stock.) A serious impeachment of vivisecting experiments involving pain, on the grounds both of essential morality and of true scientific research.

A capital little work on the foundations of domestic happiness is Home, Marriage, and Family Relations, by James Inglis. The subject is dealt with in the light of Scripture, and with the practical wisdom that comes from experience. Mr. H. L. Hastings writes a preface, and embellishes the pages with choice poems, original and selected. (Covers, 6d.; cloth, 2s. Boston, U.S.A., H. L. Hastings; London, Marshall Bros.)

Penelve. By Richard H. Thomas, M.D. (3s. 6d. Headley Brothers.) An American story, designed to portray home-life among the Quakers in the Eastern States. Needless to say the book is pervaded by the sweet refreshing aroma that pertains to character formed on the calm and serious views of the Society of Friends. The distinctive tenets of Quaker teaching are interwoven with the tale, which is therefore of historic worth as well as social interest. Mrs. Thomas furnishes some amusing illustrations.

As the first of a series of pamphlets on "Ritualism in the Church of England," Bishop Ryle has issued, through Mr. C. J. Thynne, a bold and timely sermon, The Rights and Duties of Lay Churchmen (2d.). He holds that the laity should have an equal share with the clergy in the councils of the Church, and that every parish and congregation should have some voice in the appointment of its minister. In Dr. Ryle's view there is no Church Defence to compare in value with Church Reform, and on this important subject we trust he will gain a wide hearing.

A Concise History of Missions. By Rev. E. M. Bliss. (75 cents. F. H. Revell Co., New York). "Concise" is exactly the correct word to describe this comprehensive handbook. The subject is treated in three divisions: (1) The development of the missionary idea and spirit in the Church; (2) the progress made in the different fields; and (3) organisation and methods adopted. The book is clearly the outcome of large knowledge and deep sympathy with the subject; it is therefore inspiring as well as informing.

Those who value short and bright sermons, will be glad to read Paul and his Friends, by Dr. Louis Albert Banks, of Cleveland, Ohio. (6s. Funk & Wagnalls Co.) This is the third volume of a series of revival sermons by a well-known preacher. Thirty-two in number, the discourses are sound in teaching and striking in style. They bring much suggestive and illustrative material to the help of preachers, Sunday-school teachers, and soul-winners of every class. The volume is fully up to the high standard of Dr. Banks's previous works in the field of sermon literature.

Prayer and the Lord's Prayer. By Charles Gore, M.A., D.D., of the Community of the Resurrection, Canon of Westminster. (Wells, Gardner, Darton & Co.) Whatever "the Community of the Resurrection" may mean, every true Christian is de facto a child of the Resurrection. Some people do not use the Lord's Prayer because they dare not ask to be forgiven as they forgive. Others reject it for some dispensational reason or unreason. Canon Gore rightly regards it as the model for our prayer, and has applied its principles with truth, wisdom, and pungency to the circumstances and conditions of the present time.

The Religious Tract Society has issued a series of GOSPEL EMBLEMS, which should prove very acceptable in many quarters.

CONDITIONS OF BLESSING, by Captain W. H. Dawson, is the title of a booklet giving the text of an address delivered at the recent Mildmay Conference. (1d. J. F. Shaw & Co.)

HOLIDAYS.—A very attractive pamphlet is sent from 30, Fleet-street, E.C., giving particulars of increased facilities, by the G.E.R. Royal Mail Route, for holidays in Holland, Germany, Switzerland, Norway, etc.

The life of the late James H. Raper, the well-known temperance reformer, for many years Parliamentary agent of the United Kingdom Alliance, has been written by Mr. J. Deane Hilton, and will be published shortly by the Ideal Publishing Union.

DIVINE HEALING; or, Jesus the Great Healer of Diseases From the Author, Silas Henn, Henley-road, Dudley, Worcestershire (3d., post free; 2s. 3d. per doz.). This is a temperate statement of the faith of those who believe that "in the redemption of Jesus Christ provision is made for the cure of sickness, that the Divine offer of healing is a part of the Gospel, and conditioned on faith in the Great Healer."

The Bishop of Glasgow preached in Manchester Cathedral to a crowded gathering of the members of the Mothers' Union, and pointed out that nothing does more to shape the character of the child than the influence, example, and teaching of its mother. Well was it to have a Mothers' Union to remind them of a mother's duties; and he asked them to keep its rules, use its privileges, and add to its numbers.

Wesleyan Methodists of Birmingham are busily engaged in arranging for a great simultaneous mission, to be held in October.

After balancing the accounts of the Leeds conference, a surplus remained, £25 of which was voted to the Rehoboth Central Mission, and the remainder to the Leeds Chapel Extension Fund.

The Missionary Prayer League, promoted by Rev. W. Eddon, jun., already numbers between 300 and 400 members, and the members' small subscriptions have met all the expenses up to date.

The unanimous election of Rev. E. D. Cornish, of Eccles New-road Church, Manchester, to the presidency of the Free Methodist Connexion has given the greatest satisfaction to Free Methodists throughout the country.

The devotional element of the Wesley Guild is said to be its strongest point, and home mission work, especially in villages reached by cycling members of the guilds, is making rapid headway. The helping of foreign missions is also spoken well of in the report.

The first draft of ministerial changes in the Wesleyan Methodist circuits has been issued. Altogether the Conference has decided upon 696 appointments, subject to alteration and correction before the close of the forthcoming meetings at Hull. A number of applications from important circuits have been received for permission to remain over the three years' term.

The class-meeting question came under discussion last week at the London Wesleyan Council. Rev. William Middleton, Ealing, read a paper setting forth at length the value and possibilities of the class meeting, and a number of ministers and laymen followed in a similar strain. Mr. Owen Thompson, Hampstead, said numbers of their intelligent and best supporters, thoroughly loyal and attached to Methodism, were being driven into other churches because they could not conscientiously meet in class. During the debate, which lasted two hours, suggestions were offered for the improvement of this Methodist institution, and the wish was generally expressed that means would be speedily adopted to recognise, by the church roll and public admission, the large number of influential Wesleyans at present excluded.

Presbyterian.

John Beveridge, B.D., Wolverhampton, has been invited by the National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches to go to Norway, with the object of inducing the scattered fragments of Nonconformity there to unite for common purposes and mutual support. Mr. Beveridge is also entrusted with arranging for the holding of Free Church services in Norway for English tourists next year, a beginning having been made in Switzerland this year.

Another Chinese corps has been established at Pacific Grove, California.

Finland has now thirty-one Salvation Army Corps, despite difficulties placed by the authorities in the way of extension.

Every week Scottish rescue officers visit the Glasgow, Greenock, and Ayr prisons, to which work they have been specially appointed by the Prison Commissioners.

The Army has secured a most suitable property for an additional Rescue Home in Christchurch, N.Z. The Prisoners' Aid Society, of Townsville, Queensland, will hand its Rescue Home over to the Army.

Premises have been secured at Aldershot for the opening of a rescue home. The home for naval and military men there is also doing good work. The Chatham Rescue Home has been enlarged to accommodate seventeen girls.

The latest advance in the social work in Chicago is the securing of a large building for a salvage warehouse. The Salvage Department in that city is now handling over a ton of waste-paper per day. A working men's hotel, containing over 300 beds, has been opened in Cleveland, Ohio.

Progress is being made with the colonisation section of the Social Scheme in the States. About twenty families have settled on the sugar-beet farm at Fort Romie, California. Fort Amity, in the Arkanas River Valley, Colorado, is occupied by fifteen families. A third colony, near Mentor, Ohio, is expected to accommodate fifty families.

Notes and Comments.

MANY of our readers who have enjoyed the perusal of Rev. Andrew Murray's devotional works, and received much spiritual stimulus from them, will have heard with pleasure of the recent celebration of his jubilee as a minister of the Dutch Reformed Church. The Congregationalist, of Boston, says of him :—

> For a number of years he was the only minister in the Transvaal. His parish was very extensive, and he travelled through the country holding meetings for the farmers in the open air, performing baptismal and marriage services, and preaching the Gospel....The devotional books of Andrew Murray have been widely read in Europe and America, and few men have entered into the spiritual life of so many persons as he has.

Mr. Murray's jubilee was celebrated at Wellington, U.S.A.; twelve hundred teachers and students participated in it, and over a hundred telegrams of congratulation were received. Fifty years ago he was ordained in South Africa, and has now reached the ripe age of seventy years.

At the recent Manchester Assizes was heard a charge of libel brought against the editor of a scurrilous print by Mr. Gilbert A. Kirlew, a well-known Christian worker in that city, and more lately in Lancaster. The libeller was convicted by the jury, and sentenced to six months' imprisonment by the judge. At the trial the libelling editor sought to prejudice Mr. Kirlew's case by commenting on the fact that a previous prosecution, which he instituted two years ago, had been withdrawn, partly through the injudicious advice of his counsel and partly through lack of funds. The libellous accusations having been repeated, Mr. Kirlew once more commenced legal proceedings, which, after a very lengthy hearing, resulted as we have stated. Mr. Kirlew's reputation has now been fully vindicated by a jury of his countrymen.

We have received a communication with respect to the case from Dr. Barnardo, who, with a complete knowledge of all the circumstances, expresses the most absolute confidence in Mr. Kirlew's moral integrity. In his belief and desire we very heartily concur. Dr. Barnardo says :—

> That public opinion will now rally to the side of the brave couple—Mr. and Mrs. Kirlew—who have so long suffered in silence one cannot doubt. But the question arises whether Christian men who all along respected this falsely accused servant of Christ should not take some steps to manifest their sympathy with and confidence in Mr. Kirlew. Possessed of a very limited but sufficient income to meet the modest wants of himself and his wife, they have both delighted to labour for years in an honorary capacity on behalf of others. But to raise the amount necessary to defray legal expenses in the recent trial they have had to enter into a mortgage which must for some time embarrass and burden them. £300 would wipe all this obligation out, and another £200 would enable them to establish on a firmer basis the work in Lancaster among boys which they have already so successfully carried on chiefly by their own earnings. I confidently appeal to Christian people in Manchester and elsewhere to contribute at once towards the Kirlew Testimonial Fund.

We shall be glad to receive and forward any contributions entrusted to us for the purpose.

We much regret to hear that the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews, with such a splendid record of fifty-six years' labour among God's ancient people, is now in a most critical financial condition owing to a deficit of £2500, which greatly hampers its efficient working. The society, which has an unsectarian basis, was founded by Ridley Herschell, father of the present Lord Herschell, J. S. Stamp, R. Murray McCheyne, James Hamilton, Andrew Bonar, George Yonge, and other men of note who have since gone to their rest, all of whom longed, believed, and prayed for the conversion of Israel.

The serious accident which befel the Prince of Wales at the house of Baron Rothschild last week, through which he fractured his kneecap, has called forth great sympathy, not only in this country but throughout the world. It is, however, not likely to be in any way dangerous. The Prince is such a busy man that he will doubtless find compensation in the enforced rest to which he is condemned. The life of public men nowadays, and of members of the Royal Family in particular, is so crowded with incident and excitement that a misfortune of this kind is often a blessing in disguise. It is the loyal wish of all the Prince's future subjects that it may prove so in this case.

Week by week the steady drift of events points to the fateful changes soon to be wrought by the appearance of the United States among the maritime Powers of the world. The question how far that country will join Britain in a formal alliance is of little importance compared with the fact that our kinsmen in blood, ideals, and language intend to take their place in the wider tasks of human civilisation and progress. Let us hope it will prove an impulse to the causes of enlightenment, liberty, and Christian influence all over the world—an effective blow at despotism and mediæval superstition. The statesmen of America need all possible wisdom, self-control, and foresight in their shaping of the national affairs entrusted to their hands.

This "incidental" result of a war that at first seemed to have for its final end only the liberation of a single island from a helpless condition illustrates a truth which appears on every page of history. All through the ages God has been leading men and nations to their appointed tasks, "in paths that they have not known." Human purposes may succeed or fail of achievement; what is certain is that the Divine purpose is sure of accomplishment. Whichever side wins in a war, the "God of battles" still holds the final victory in his hands. "There is a divinity that shapes our ends, rough hew them how we will." To the true believer this thought is an anchor of hope in the midst of the gravest misfortunes and the most bewildering perplexities of life. "The Lord reigneth; let the earth rejoice."

Very gratifying is the intelligence published in The New York Observer on the religious character of many of the officers in the American army and navy now engaged in the conflict with Spain.

> Admirals Dewey and Sampson are men whose spirit is that of a thorough respect for religion. Commodore Watson...is a devout member of the Presbyterian Church, and an earnest, unostentatious Christian. Captain Sigsbee, of the St. Paul, is reported to have observed lately that when all has been said respecting the superior gunnery of the American sailors in their fight with Cervera, it is to the interference of Providence that we are to look for an explanation of the result. Captain Higginson, of the Massachusetts, is the man who proposed to found a sailors' lodging-house opposite the gate of the Brooklyn Navy Yard. Captain Philip, of the Texas, had the courage, after the conclusion of the dramatic fight off Santiago, to summon his men to the quarter-decks and say to them, "I want to make public acknowledgment here that I believe in God the Father Almighty. I want all of you officers and men to lift your hats, and from your hearts offer silent thanks to the Almighty"... Colonel Wood, of Santiago fame, is described by one who knows him well as a rare Christian gentleman.

There are, doubtless, many others who lack only the opportunity to testify to their faith in God and his Christ.

Prince Bismarck is credited in a German paper with saying that but for his firm belief in a future life he would have lost his chief motive in his public work. Without endorsing his political ideas or methods, it is quite certain that this remark represents a great truth. Those whose outlook is limited to this life, and whose motives are drawn purely from present-day sources, are bound to betray their lack of faith in the narrowness and poverty of their whole life's work. The old Latin painter who said "In æternum pingo" struck on the root of all noble and enduring achievement. It is one of the most serious aspects of modern life that the great future holds comparatively so subordinate a place in its thought. We must live in the light of eternity if we would leave a worthy memorial of our energy and devotion behind us.

Lord Salisbury's remark as to the present lack of discipline in doctrine, ritual, and morals in the Church of England has been warmly repudiated by the Archbishop of Canterbury, but it has received strong corroboration from the Bishop of Liverpool, who, in reply to an appeal to stop the Romish practices at St. Thomas's, Toxteth Park, Liverpool, which was the scene of such disorder a week or two ago, has stated—

> You cannot dislike extreme Ritualism more than I do; but you are mistaken in supposing that I have power to put a stop to it. Parliament has much power to stop it, but a bishop has very little.

The assertion of popular right to a hand in the government of the Church would be but a return to apostolic usage and custom. For many centuries, as there are clear proofs, laymen exercised a determining voice in the ecclesiastical councils of their day. It was only very gradually, and for reasons that are easily noted, that the priest grew paramount. When his authority was finally established the day of decline began in the Church, which did not wake to its sad condition till, at the Reformation, the voice of the people once more began to make itself heard. In every age and land since then the Church has been healthy and progressive in proportion as it has been governed openly by the "assembly of the saints." If at the present crisis the members of the Church of England make an effective protest against Romanising doctrine and practice, the knell of these things will be speedily sounded—but not till then.

Whatever were the determining motives and reasons, we are glad to see it announced that the Government, after full and careful consideration of the matter at more than one Cabinet Council, have finally decided not to proceed further with the idea of establishing a Catholic University in Ireland with the aid of public funds. They realise that if they carried it a victory of this kind must seriously offend many of their supporters both in Parliament and in the country, with the effect of greatly weakening the cohesion of their party, and they do not care to take the risks involved.

Now that the project is on the shelf, let us hope that a great many persons who supported it, but who ought to have known better, will see their mistake. The rising tide of Protestant feeling in the country may aid their conversion.

Since "no law can execute itself" it has long been felt that the interests of those employés who lose their situations because they have had the courage to tell Government officials the truth about the conditions of their labour should be safeguarded, and that they should be protected against the consequences of wrongful dismissal. This is the purpose of the Industrial Law Committee; and last week a meeting was held under the presidency of the Bishop of London in order to inaugurate an indemnity fund for this purpose. Anything which will put an end to intimidation of this kind is praiseworthy, in the interest of employers as well as employed. Oppression fears nothing so much as the light of day.

The cry for the opening of nunneries and convents to the same kind of inspection as all institutions in the country will not be diminished by the exposure which Mr. S. J. Abbott makes of "Slavery in Convent Laundries." The life of the girls is hard, monotonous, and depressing. The work is done by unpaid labour, not by the nuns. The laundries are not under the Factories and Workshops Act, yet they compete with laundries that are. It is said that a device to prevent escape is to change the name of an inmate; when she is inquired for under her proper name the reply is that no one of that name is there. These intolerable encroachments on the civil rights of the people by an alien Church are bidding fair to thrust all other political questions into the background, and to range Englishmen under the banner of the Bible as the religion of Protestants.

In holiday seasons, such as is now about to commence, the question is often raised, "What books shall I take to read?" This is no unimportant matter. Many busy people have little time for reading except during their annual trip to the seaside or the country. The bookstalls are crowded with ephemeral literature, got up to attract the eye and pass the time with the minimum of exertion and the maximum of evanescent excitement. And so with most the annual holiday passes with no addition to the mind's treasury of thought, with no impulse given to the heart's best motives. And yet, wisely used, each holiday might be made memorable, not only in its experiences, but in the expansion and uplifting of the soul by means of noble books, such as are now happily within the reach of the poorest. That is a poor holiday in which bodily health is cultivated to the ignoring of the higher interests.

This matter raises the widest question of the continued spread of novel-reading as a "recreation." There is, of course, fiction and fiction—good, bad, and indifferent; the fact we would here make prominent is the tendency which is everywhere growing, even among intelligent and well-disposed people, to read nothing but what takes the form of a story. The ultimate result is inability to follow any serious and thoughtful book which aims exclusively at enriching the higher life. How much harm is done to young converts by this practice, and to those whose Christian life is as yet weak and unstable, is incalculable. The deepest impressions are in peril of vanishing under the debilitating influence of the latest society novelette. Even where this kind of reading is in itself harmless, it tends to usurp the place of serious spiritual discipline, and so lays the soul open to attack.

Revelations continue to be made as to the amount of aggressive ruffianism prevalent in Lambeth, as well as the haunts of vice with which it abounds. But the facts go to show that if it were not for the various Christian agencies at work in the district it would be a veritable pandemonium. Let Christian workers take courage, amid all that casts them down, from the assurance that London would be unbearable were it not for their steady and faithful labours.

Amid the wide-spread pessimism of the age, it is important to remember that the New Testament gives no sanction to the spirit of gloom and despair. It is a book in which the darkest outlooks are bounded by a horizon of light. However bad things are, and however there may be signs that things will become worse before they are better, a glorious end is assured. Obviously this Christian optimism does not arise from a too rosy view of the actual condition of the world, nor from shallow views of human nature, but from faith in God. He is "the God of Hope," and faith in Him will make his people to "abound in hope," in the power of the Holy Ghost. Jesus saw the end from the beginning, the harvest in the green blade, the triumph of God's redeeming purpose through the eclipse of death. It is our privilege to maintain a bright and hopeful spirit. "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world."

Dr. Robertson Nicoll, in an able address to ministers on "What is our Chief Peril?" published in last week's British Weekly, says that this peril is the peril of "fainting." The many references to this state in the New Testament show that it is no new danger, but one intimately associated with Christian work. Its chief occasions are reason's chastisement, the weariness that comes of long labour with no visible result, and the discovery which comes to all sooner or later that their work has ceased to command the appreciation of men. The remedies are, first, prayer—"men ought always to pray and not to faint"; earnest and continuous industry, "be not weary in well-doing"; and faith that "in due season we shall reap if we faint not." Here is a programme of spiritual exercise and work that would keep many drooping spirits fresh and young if they but followed it faithfully. Prayer, service, and faith are sovereign remedies for spiritual gloom

The Lord's Day Observance Society has just issued an appeal to the London County Council on behalf of the Metropolitan tramway men. By the terms of the agreement between the Council and the North Metropolitan Tramways the whole staff of the employees of the company are guaranteed one rest day in the week. The appeal urges efficient vigilance on the part of the Council to ensure that the terms of this agreement be faithfully adhered to. The memorial further recommends that as far as possible diminished hours of Sunday labour and frequent recurrences of Sunday rest be secured. This last point is deserving of special mention. A rest day during the week may fulfil the physiological and social needs of the case; but only diminished hours on the Sunday can secure the chances of worship which provide for the needs of the soul. It would be a great boon, also, if these restrictions and privileges were made compulsory, so that employés might not be tempted to barter their rest for their chance of earning more money.

Another class of employés that need help in this matter is that to which milkmen belong. An attempt has been made in the North of London to enlist the sympathy of customers on behalf of these overworked men, many of whom often work between eighty and ninety hours a week, ten of these being on the Lord's day. This is a movement that might be made in all large towns where the same evil exists. The evil has become widespread and formidable through the keen competition between employers; but it could be easily suppressed if once the public sympathy were really aroused on behalf of a much-tried and helpless body of workers. By a little forethought and consideration on the part of customers much relief could be given.

Mr. Shishkoff, a Russian gentleman, expresses the opinion in The Nineteenth Century that the true way for England to get out of her international troubles is to forget her hatred of the monarchies of Europe and to promote friendly relations. He believes that there is not a people on earth who would not requite sincere friendliness with friendliness, and trust with trust. It would probably take less trouble to bring the great nations of Europe into close and friendly communication with each other than it has taken to make them enemies. At the same time allowance must be made for our vital difference from many other nations, including Russia, with respect to civil and religious liberty. Dislike of the forms of government must not be mistaken for dislike of the nations themselves.

Writing with reference to a recent paragraph on "blue Monday," a correspondent recommends a book, "The True Science of Living," by Edward Hooker Dewey, M.D., with Introduction by Rev. G. Pentecost, D.D. (J. & J. Bumpus, 350, Oxford-st., W.C.). Dr. Pentecost mentions that for many years he had been a victim of sick headache, that through a friend he heard of Dr. Dewey and his method of "right living," which simply seems to be—give up eating breakfast and content yourselves with two meals a day Dr. Pentecost says:—

I learned from friends in my own calling who had suffered for years on Monday with fearful headaches as a result of physical and nervous exhaustion, who, having given up their breakfasts, had recovered entirely from the dreadful Monday prostrations, and were enabled to do more and better work than ever before, both in their studies and in their pulpits.

Dr. Pentecost mentions receiving personal testimony from both men and women, delicate and strong, working-men, merchants, doctors, and preachers, delicate ladies for years invalided and in a state of collapse, and some who had never been ill, but who were "a hundred per cent. better for living without breakfast."

The Keswick Convention.

BY AN HABITUAL ATTENDANT.

ON all hands it is acknowledged that this Convention has reached a higher water-mark than any—certainly in recent years. It is not that some special teacher or line of teaching has been prominent, but that there has been quite an unusual humbling before God, and as distinct a consciousness of his mighty power.

. . . . .

Most of the well-known leaders of this remarkable movement were present, some of them looking a little older and greyer, but beside them many younger men, whose clear-cut, vigorous, and deeply spiritual utterances were delightful as an addition and a contrast to the veterans. There is no fear that the Keswick Convention will lose its charm or power so long as it affords a meeting-place for men so various in methods of thought and expression, of ecclesiastical affinity and order, of age and experience, and yet so absolutely one in all the deeper aspects of the Christian life.

The weather has been for the most part clear and beautiful. Only once was there a heavy downpour of rain on the tent. The curtains, therefore, were generally raised, and from the platform, as well as from many of the seats, side glimpses of the glorious hills were possible; whilst many a lovely stroll amid valley, wood, and mountain, or expedition on the lake, has given relief from the strain of the meeting, made permanent some memorable address, or witnessed some life-moulding resolution.

. . . . . .

The attendance has been very numerous. It is calculated that six or seven thousand persons must have been attending. Often there would be a thick rim of people standing gathered around the tent, whilst all the 3,000 seats were occupied. In addition to this, meetings were being held in two or three other spacious halls in different parts of the town.

. . . . . .

An address by Prebendary Webb-Peploe was constantly referred to, on "Our Nothingness before God"; and many appear to have obtained new views of their unworthiness and helplessness apart from Christ. It has been often remarked, "We do not preach a perfect sinner, but a perfect Saviour." All suggestions that the teaching has tended to spiritual pride or perfectionism will be put utterly out of court by the slightest perusal of any of the addresses.

. . . . . .

The true gauge of a convention is to be found in the closing meetings. Those on Friday were remarkably solemn. On Friday evening hundreds rose in the after-meeting to testify to the great blessing they had received, whilst it took quite three-quarters of an hour on Saturday morning to read brief résumés of the requests for praise which had been sent in. It seemed as though every one had had a new song put into the mouth, even praise unto the Lord. Again and again the glad choruses and hymns broke out, as though to say, "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad." It was announced that there were four times as many requests for praise as on any previous occasion.

Mr. Wilson has borne the great strain of his onerous duties as chairman with remarkable vigour and freshness. We wish that he may long be spared. He is an almost ideal chairman, from the sententious brevity of his remarks, his transparent simplicity, and the absence of fuss or haste. As we look on that strong honest face, with the crown of silver hair over the broad brow, or listen to his brief remarks, we recognise that the Convention owes more than many realise to the man whom God has so remarkably raised up for this responsible position.

Prince and Princess Bernadotte, of Sweden, have been regular attendants at the meetings, and have expressed their profound enjoyment. They have attracted to themselves universal respect and goodwill by their unostentatious and simple deportment. They have been quite content to take their place as fellow-believers with others of the family of God. At the close of the Convention they presented their photographs, with autograph signatures, to Mr. Wilson.

. . . . . .

There have been many groups of Christian workers and others staying in various parts of the town: one of young men from Lancashire and Yorkshire in the camp, one of students from Oxford, another of mill-girls from Manchester, another of some 150 missionaries; yet another of clergymen, together with many more. And it is probable that no one has attended the meetings without receiving permanent help.

Christ on the Heart's Throne.

BY REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D.

TWO rival kings cannot reign together in the same palace. Self and the Saviour cannot control the same heart. The essence of regeneration is a change of heart-rulers; no one is a genuine Christian until stubborn, sinful self has yielded, and opened the door to Jesus, and seated Him on the throne. If this process could be performed once for all, then a Christian life would be a simple and easy matter; but self is cunning and persistent in stealing back again—often in subtle guise and under smooth pretexts. So the door must be guarded continually. Keep thy heart's throne with all diligence; no man can serve two masters.

At certain rocky cliffs on the ocean-side curious molluscs may be seen sticking closely to the rocks. Each mollusc clings so tenaciously that the dash of the waves cannot tear it away. The secret of its hold is that the mollusc is empty; if it were filled either with flesh or air, it would be swept off immediately. This illustrates the spiritual condition of every sincere, conscientious Christian who has been emptied of self, and clings to the Rock of Ages by the law of adhesion. If that Christian allows pride or self-conceit to steal in, or if he begins to gorge himself with the sins of the flesh, he will soon yield to the waves of temptation and be swept away. Just as long as he is weak in himself, he may become immovable through Christ Jesus dwelling in him. "When I am weak, then am I strong," said the great Apostle; that is, when Paul got emptied of self, Jesus flowed in and endued him with power unto all long suffering and joyfulness.

That is the conflict with us ministers every Sabbath. Shall self or our Saviour get into that pulpit? Shall the sermon be for our glory or his? Spurgeon tells us what a blessing to him in his youth was that text, "Seekest thou great things for thyself? seek them not"; and there are plenty of us who have had that text used as God's rod to rap us hard. All our best Sabbaths have been when Christ was in the pulpit, and self down under the stairs.

This is the battle which our people have to fight every day in the week—the endless conflict between self in some form and the claims of Jesus to the heart's throne. In the simplest things this rivalry comes up. When the bell for prayer meeting rings, self has its ready excuse of fatigue, or bad weather, or attractions elsewhere; and unless these imps of self-indulgence are silenced, and Christ's voice is heard in the conscience, that church-member's seat is vacant, and his heart is the worse for it. What is true of his devotional duties is equally true as to his duty of contributing to the Lord's treasury. Self mutters the stereotyped pleas—"The times are hard," and "I can't afford it," and "There is no end to these calls of charity." No; there will never be an end to such calls as long as human misery and suffering and ignorance remain. The real trouble is that selfishness has got hold of the purse strings, and the servant of Christ is trying to rob his Master. If Jesus has the heart-throne, He will hold the purse also; and giving will be a solid satisfaction, even if it costs the surrender of many creature comforts. In great things and in small things a Christian's crowns are made out of crosses borne for Jesus' sake.

Christians as Intercessors.

MANY Christians at the present time are seeing afresh their duty as intercessors. Especially is the work of intercession seen to be the work of those whose infirmities, cares, or limitations prevent them from active physical service. The aged, the disabled, the "shut-ins" are privileged classes, since the sanctuary is ever with them, into which they can enter in the depth of their spirit, in prayer for those who need God's grace. But the prayer of intercession is not limited to these. All may take this position of privilege. It requires only knowledge of the need of the human heart, and belief in the reality of God's grace, given in answer to believing prayer.

The intercessor does not need to know the precise and definite and hourly want of the one for whom he prays. This is impossible, even when we are living with the subjects of our prayers, since the inner being of another is always concealed from us, nor can we ever fathom the depth of any spirit. But knowing that spiritual need is always great, and failure always possible without God's help, we are qualified to pray for others—child, relative, pupil, friend, knowing that God's infinite insight and goodness will both see and bestow according to his own knowledge of need, not according to the intercessor's limitations of knowledge.

With Epaphras we may "labour fervently in prayers" for those who are already Christians, that they "may stand perfect and complete in all the will of God." And the all-inclusive prayer for those who sin not unto death has the command to ask, and "He shall give him life for them that sin not unto death." We may pray for each one we know, either that spiritual life may be quickened and nourished, or that, if the Divine life has never begun, the work of grace may begin under the working of the Spirit of God. Have we ever really learned to pray unless we are using this immense power for the good of others?

Consecrated to Consecrate.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER.

"For their sakes I sanctify Myself that they themselves also may be sanctified in truth." (John xvii. 19, R.V.)

"THE most precious fragment of the past" is the unstinted eulogium which a thoughtful man has passed on this transcendent prayer; transcending in its scope of view, its expressions, its tender pathos, all other prayers of which we have record.

Its primary characteristic is timelessness. Though actually uttered within a few hours of Calvary, it contains thoughts and expressions which must have been familiar to our Lord at any moment during the centuries which have followed. As we study it, therefore, we are listening to words which have been uttered many times on our behalf, and will be uttered until we are with Him, where He is, beholding the glory of the Divine Son superadded to that of the Perfect Servant.

The R.V. margin substitutes the word consecrate for sanctify, and it probably conveys a better meaning; because devotion to the will of God is prominent, rather than the holiness of personal character. Devotion to God's will is the primary thought suggested by the word; but, of course, it involves a blameless and spotless character. Thus we might read the words, "For their sakes I consecrate Myself, that they also may be consecrated in truth.' Through the dim twilight the Lord clearly foresaw what was awaiting Him—the agony and bloody sweat, the cross and passion, the forsakenness and travail of his soul. The cross with outstretched arms waited to receive Him; the midnight darkness to engulf Him; the murderous band to wreak their hate on the unresisting Lamb: and yet He flinched not, but went right forward, consecrating Himself.

'Twas thus He suffered, though a Son,
Foreknowing, choosing, tasting all,
Until the dreadful work was done,
And drank the bitter cup of gall.

I.—The Subjects of Christ's Solicitude.

In the earlier verses the Lord speaks of Himself, of his finished work, of the glory which He had left, of that to which He went; asking only that He might be able to glorify the Father in every moment of his coming sorrow (1-5).

Then He launches Himself on the full current of intercession, and pleads for those who had been given to Him, as distinguished from the world of men out of which they had come. Evidently the same thought was in his mind as inspired his words in John x., when He spoke of the sheep whom the Father had given to Him, that He might give them eternal life (27-29). And it may be that each of these two utterances was inspired by older words yet, that Zechariah had addressed to the poor of the flock when he cut asunder his two staves, Beauty and Bands (Zech. xi. 7-14).

The underlying conception in all these passages seems to be that the Father has entrusted to the special keeping of Jesus certain elect spirits who have an affinity to his nature, and who shall stand in the innermost circle to Him because associated with Him for high redemptive purposes. All souls are God's by right of creation, and all are included in the redemption wrought on the cross; but not all have been included in the Divine gift of which Jesus speaks, "Thine they were, and Thou gavest them Me." We conclude that in the eternity of the past, as the Father beheld all future things as though they were present, and surveyed the vast multitudes of the human family, he discerned those who would be attracted into indissoluble union with his Son manifest in the flesh; and whom He did foreknow these also He did predestinate to be his flock, his brethren and sisters, his chosen band of associates in his redemptive purpose. These were the subjects of his prayerful solicitude, "I make request, not for the world, but for those whom Thou hast given Me."

What then? Did not God care for the world? Certainly. He so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son.

How then can we reconcile the love of God to the world with the selection of some to be the flock of the Lamb, whilst the great world seems expressly excluded from his prayer? That question is fitly put. The emphasis is on the word seems. It is only to the superficial view that the world is excluded. Are the planets excluded from the law of gravitation because suns are filled with fire and light? Are the lower orders of creation excluded from the circle of enjoyment because man with his high organisation is more richly endowed than they? Are sufferers excluded from the healing virtues of nature because a comparative few are specially qualified as surgeons and physicians? Can a missionary be charged with neglecting a dark continent because he concentrates thought and care on a few elect spirits gathered around him? For instance, could Columba be held guilty of neglecting the Picts and Scots when on Iona's lone isle he focussed his care upon the handful of followers who assembled around that ancient pile whose ruins are his lasting memorial? There is but one answer to these questions. Election is not exclusive, but inclusive. Its purpose is not primarily the salvation or delectation of the few; but their equipment to become the apostles to the many. And if Jesus thought, cared, and prayed so much for those whom the Father had given Him, his ulterior thought was that the world might believe that the Father had sent Him (v. 21).

What are the marks, then, that we belong to the inner circle of the given ones? They are these:

(1) That we have come to Him (John vi. 37).

(2) That we hear his voice, listening for the slightest indication of his will (John x. 27).

(3) That we follow his steps through the world.

(4) That we receive his words and believe that the Father sent the Son to be our Saviour.

(5) That the world hates us (xv. 18).

Wheresoever these marks are present they indicate the hand of the Great Shepherd and Bishop of Souls; and though we be amongst the most timid and worthless of the flock, He is pledged to keep us, so that none shall snatch us from his hand, and conduct us through the valley of the shadow to those dewy upland lawns over which He will lead us for evermore.

II. What He Sought for Them—"that they might be consecrated in truth."

Christ does not ask that his own should be forgiven, comforted, supplied with the good things of life—all thought for these pales in the presence of his intense desire that they should be consecrated, i.e., inspired by the same consuming passion as was burning in his heart. He knew that He was no more in the world. High business connected with its interests summoned Him to the far country, whither He went to receive the kingdom and return. But He desired that the passion which filled his soul, his tears, his prayers, and, to an extent, his sufferings, might always be represented amongst the sons of men, embodied in human lives, finding utterance through human lips. He could not Himself perpetuate his corporeal, visible ministry among men, and therefore desired with a great desire that those whom the Father had given Him should evermore show forth his death till He came. Not simply by gathering at his table, but by going forth to live his life, and fill up that which is behind of his sufferings.

Is this your life? We have sometimes heard consecration stated as though it were a matter of choice whether believers should bind themselves by its obligations or not. When a student enters the university there are certain subjects in which he must matriculate, but there are special ones which he may graduate in or not as he pleases. Should he refuse them, he is not blamed. The matter is within his option. Now, let it be clearly understood from these words of Christ that consecration is not in the same sense optional, but obligatory. For all those whom the Father had given Him He pleaded with his dying breath that they should be consecrated; and if you are not consecrated, if there are extensive reserves in your life, if you are holding back part of the price, if you are saying of aught that you have, "It is my own, I shall do as I choose," then understand that you are in direct conflict against Christ's purpose and prayer. He asked that you might be consecrated; and you have chosen to regard consecration as the craze of the fervid enthusiast.

(To be concluded.)

A Strange Dream.

WHEN Rev. E. Payson Hammond was preaching in Glasgow some years ago in Rev. Wm. Arnot's church, a gentleman was asked to tell the story of his recent conversion. He said he had been encased in prejudices against revivals. He had heard of the revival in Dumfries, under Mr. Hammond, but had no idea of his appearance. When he heard that he had been invited by Dr. Robert Buchanan he attended the first service with no thought of being benefited. The night previous he had a dream, in which he saw a person whom he had never seen before, and heard earnest words which he forgot on awakening. To his amazement, on entering the church he recognised in Mr. Hammond the man he had seen and heard in his dreams. As soon as he began to preach he showed the broad difference of knowing about God and knowing Him personally. To his still greater astonishment, Mr. Hammond repeated the very words which he had heard in his dream the night before. He was deeply convicted of sin, and as Christ and Him crucified was preached the way of salvation came clear, and he accepted the offered pardon. The words, "You have heard of God all your life, but was the winged messenger that brought him face to face with God.

Does not this fact, he asked, impress the truth of the words in Acts ii. 17: "And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of My Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams"?

The words of this gentleman made a deep impression on the audience, and every one was led to realise that of a truth God was among his people, and using unusual means to convict some of sin and bring them to Christ. Is not God, now, in answer to prayer, as ready to make bare his arm, and bring hundreds and thousands to Him as He did in those meetings in Scotland?

A New Cottage Hospital, for the accommodation of twelve in-patients, was opened in connection with the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission at Ajodhya, in the North-West Provinces of India, on April 19. Four years ago a dispensary was opened in the town, which is a great centre of Hindu pilgrimages, being the birth-place of the god Rama. The dispensary is in charge of a native Christian lady, who has been trained as hospital assistant, and last year was attended by 2661 patients, their visits amounting to upwards of 8000. The work is superintended by Dr. Jane Haskew, of the Lady Kinnaird Memorial Hospital, Lucknow, who visits Ajodhya monthly to undertake any difficult operations and attend to important cases.

Antwerp Sailors' Rest.—Much difficulty was experienced at the outset in securing suitable rooms for this work, since it was impossible to rent a whole house; but at last, in answer to prayer, the present ones were found at 37, Canal des Vieux. They are light, airy, and cheerful, and, as the sailors say, "so home-like"; the main desire being to provide a place where they can read, write their letters, listen to God's Word, and enjoy personal conversation with those who take an interest in their bodily as well as spiritual welfare. Many of the men on board the sailing vessels, whose stay in port frequently lasts for months, look upon the "Rest" as their home, and visit it regularly. The treasurer is Mr. W. C. OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, July 31.

"He was full of heaviness because that ye had heard that he had been sick."—Phil. ii. 26.

SOME have identified Epaphroditus here with Epaphras in the Epistle to the Colossians. Here he is represented as sorrowful even to agony because his friends had heard of his illness, and he would have wished that no one should be burdened on his account. But in the other Epistle he is represented as always striving for the saints in prayer.

It is very beautiful to discover his unwillingness to have his sickness published. When we are in trouble it is best not to speak much of it, save to God. "Only inexperienced sufferers are voluble. Those familiar with the secrets of anguish are silent." Let us anoint the head and wash the face that we may not appear unto men to fast, but to the Father who is in secret; and our Father who seeth in secret will Himself reward openly. The Comforter will draw near, will whisper his own consolations, and amid much sorrow we shall be calm and strong.

But with Epaphras there was probably another thought. He knew that the Philippians were bearing a very heavy load of sorrow. It was a hard and difficult fight for them as for him. And with much generosity he was most unwilling that the news of his illness should add a feather-weight to their grief.

This eagerness to conceal pain lest it should add sorrow to those who already have almost as much as they can bear is very characteristic of noble souls. And we may quote here Robert Hall's words on recovering from a keen paroxysm of anguish: "I have not complained, have I, sir? No, and I will not complain."

MONDAY, August 1.

"The working whereby He is able even to subject all things unto Himself."—Phil. iii. 21 (R.V.).

What cannot He do? From the dust of mother earth He was able to build up man in the image of God, in the first creation; and from the dust to which death shall again reduce us He will build up again our bodies in the likeness of his resurrection body. The formless clay shall be obliged to yield to his voice, his touch; and if He can do this, what cannot He do?

There may be sins within your heart that have long resisted control. Do with them as you will, they still defy you. So long have they been entrenched within the citadel of your soul that, like the Jebusites in the days of David, they laugh you to scorn. But if you will hand over the conflict to Jesus, He will subject them, He will bring them under his strong hand. Be of good cheer. What you cannot do He can. Whenever the old temptation arises, directly you are aware of it, lift your heart instantly to Jesus, and reckon on Him to cope with it in your behalf. The Lord will fight for you, whilst you shall hold your peace.

So with other difficulties in your life. The raising of a noble nature and character within you, the calling of souls from the death of sin to a life of righteousness by your voice, the bringing forth of a fair and well-ordered work from one which seems mere chaos and ruin—all such things are within the scope of this wonderful text. They must be easy to Him who from the dust can raise the ethereal vehicle of the new life.

TUESDAY, August 2.

"In nothing be anxious."—Phil. iv. 6 (R.V.).

Black care! It has always been among men, and perhaps more so to-day than ever, when the pressure of life is heavier and the constraint of circumstances more imperious. Are there not hours in which the clouds gather densely over the Ark of God, and the stoutest hearts tremble? Is it easy for even the Christian soul to look on a family of little ones, sleeping soundly, and know that they will certainly awake hungry for food, of which the cupboard is bare, and have no tinge of anxiety?

It is at such times that the Apostle bids us pray. "Make your requests known unto God." We have not to agonise before Him, as though, like the priests of Baal, who cried and cut themselves, we shall move Him by our anguish. Calmly, quietly, simply, make your requests known. Take your burden into his presence and lay it down there. He is your Father. He who made the body and gave it you will see to the supply of its needs. Your health, your children, the condition of his Church, are dear to Him who notices a falling sparrow, and by whom the very hairs of your head are all numbered.

We shall not escape life's discipline. We may expect to abound here, and to be abased there. But amid all, Peace, God's white-winged sentinel-angel, shall come down to keep the heart with its affections, the mind with its thoughts. Worry, unrest, anxiety will stand without, as the noise of the street breaks in vain on the double windows of the city counting-house, whilst the child of God learns humbly and patiently the lesson of his Father's love. Careful for nothing, prayerful and thankful in everything.

WEDNESDAY, August 3.

"The riches of the glory of this mystery... which is Christ in you, the hope of glory."—Col. i. 27.

The only son of a widow runs off to sea when quite a lad. She must needs work for her living, and takes lodgers in her little home. After years have passed a bronzed and bearded sailor comes to her door for accommodation, which she gladly affords at an agreed price. She has no idea who has come to dwell beneath her roof—it is a secret, a mystery.

By-and-by, one day as they are sitting at the midday meal, a remark, a gesture, startles her; she looks hard into the stranger's face, recognises him, and with a cry rushes into his arms and weeps out on his bosom her joy: "My son, my son, what deceived my old eyes, that I didn't know thee!" That is the glory of the mystery, which breaks in smiles and kisses.

Then he says, "Mother, how hard life has gone with you, your hands are hard with toil. But see, I have plenty of money, and you shall go shares in all. I will take a nice little home, and you shall live there to keep it as long as you live, and never have to do a stroke of hard toil." That is the riches of the glory of the mystery.

So at your conversion Jesus came into your heart to abide. Too long He has been unrecognised, though of late you have been more aware of the nature and worth of your Heavenly Friend. The mystery has broken in light. Henceforth realise that all his riches are yours, to be shared and enjoyed, so that all your needs may be fully met, even to the abundance of his unsearchable riches.

THURSDAY, August 4.

"As therefore ye received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk in Him."—Col. ii. 6 (R.V.).

When we were first brought to Jesus we received Him into our hearts by faith. Throwing open the door we bade Him be welcome, and He came in never to depart again. Though He was viewless as the wind, and silent as light, He came.

Now the Apostle says that all our after Christian life is to be lived on the same principle. The holy life is not an attainment, but an attitude. It is not an acquirement of which we may make a boast, but an openness of soul towards the Lord Jesus, as of a window unshuttered and uncurtained to the light. The believer is never independent of Jesus; but at every moment he is receiving out of his fulness, and grace upon grace. He does not receive his qualities and attributes alone, but the Lord Jesus Himself.

Our daily life is here compared to a walk. We cannot choose it. There is no alternative than to take what God has marked out for you; but you may choose your atmosphere, or, to use a modern word, your environment. Every step may be taken in Christ, rooted in Him as a tree in rich soil, builded up as a house on a rock, breathing in his very breath as the life of life. And whatever the need may be which the exigencies of the path demand, there is always an abundant supply in the Lord Jesus, in whom all treasures are hid.

FRIDAY, August 5.

"Let the peace of God rule in your hearts, to the which also ye are called."—Col. iii. 15.

The peace of God is the peace of the Divine nature—the very tranquility which prevails in the heart of the God of Peace. It was of this that Jesus spoke when he said, "My peace I give unto you," for his own being was filled and blessed with this during his earthly career. In each of us may be a sea of glass, reflecting on its pellucid and tranquil bosom the untroubled calm and rest, which are unspeakable because eternal and Divine.

There are three things against which we must ever be on our guard, lest they rob us of our peace. First, unconfessed sin; second, worry; third, the permission of an unrebuked selfish principle. As on the Sabbath the good Ezra carefully excluded the Tyrian fishwives from Jerusalem, lest they should mar its spirit of rest by their cries and traffic, so we must preserve an unbroken Sabbath-keeping within.

The Apostle says, Let it rule. The Greek word means arbitrate. Whenever there is a doubtful issue to be decided, and on the one hand your peace may be disturbed, whilst on the other it may be maintained, let its maintenance be the deciding voice in the decision, so far as may be consistent with a due consideration of the rights of others. Let God's peace act as umpire.

SATURDAY, August 6.

"Always striving for you in his prayers...he hath much labour for you."—Col. iv. 12, 13 (R.V.).

This is a very beautiful epitaph on a good man's life. He had come from Colosse with tidings for the Apostle, but amid all the crowding interests of his visit to Rome his heart was with his friends, and he sought to help them, as we may all help dear ones far away.

He strove for them in prayer. It was no runaway knock that he gave, no light breathing of desire, no formal mention of their names, but it seemed as though he were a wrestler whose muscles stood out like whipcord as he agonised for the prize. He laboured. We shall never know till we stand in the clear light of heaven how much has been wrought in the world by prayer. Here, at least, there is mention of a man's labours. Probably the work on which we habitually pride ourselves is due less to us than we suppose, and more to unrecognised fellow labourers.

Let us be careful to mingle much intercession with all our prayers, especially on the behalf of missionaries and lonely workers, that they may realise that we are actually working and labouring beside them, though thousands of miles intervene.

FROM OTHER LANDS.

A Night in Africa.

By Miss LUCY E. GUINNESS.

SLOWLY, majestically moving, the holy day of God has passed around the globe. Its stately, calm procession has visited with light the lonely ships on the great Pacific, coral islands in warm South seas, desert wastes and busy coast-lands of Australia, the chill of white Siberia, the tropics of Malayland, the teeming plains of India. Even the stagnation of the Empire of the East has felt, from her great wall and western mountains across to her busy Shanghai bund, the thrill of 80,000 hearts, among her 300,000,000, beating in harmony with the new glad "first day."

And now the Lord's day comes to Africa and Europe. The big pulse of the world's heart beats a leisurely long stroke. There is no post in London to-day. Five millions, tired of toiling for business and pleasure, rise with a sense that another week has opened; not a few of them to say, "This is the day that the Lord hath made, let us rejoice and be glad in it."

But there is a world more timeless than the luxurious East, a world whose people little guess the existence of a Sabbath; still less do their hearts gladden at the memory of Jesus' resurrection.

To-night in the heart of Africa our thoughts find out a silent lonely spot, weird enough with the sun gone down. At the margin of the river black shadows cluster among strange tropic growths. The hot, damp-laden night air drifts over sand-banks, cools itself in the open river, or lies in a misty whiteness close to the moonlit shore. Vast forests lie around us, silent now save for the ceaseless hum of insect life. All day long rattling native drums have announced the death of a little child. Now their noisy mourning is over. The dancers have ended their funeral performance, and lie sleeping in the grass-hut village near by. Under the "bocumba," a roof of leaves stuck up on poles, where the little corpse is lying, a single watcher lingers—the mother of the child. This wee girl was her only one. The bonny face comes back to her, as she rocks to and fro—the bright child face disfigured and hidden now!

The woman stretches out a thin brown arm, and pushes aside the bunch of leaves that hangs from the roof and covers the stiff features. The melancholy sight below comforts her lonely heart. The little face looks ghastly, smeared over with white clay. By each ear and under the chin lumps of bright-red composition are stuck, and the body is otherwise decorated, so that when left in its narrow home among the other graves it will not be laughed at or seem to have been friendless or neglected.

"Medicine, good medicine," murmurs the mother, rocking to and fro. But a doubt steals across her.

"What was it the Mama said? White woman—kind and gentle! What was it she said to-day? A better medicine? Another—can it be—another life?"

Only quite lately the missionaries have come here. Their message is a new one, uncomprehended still. But an echo of it lingers in the dark, untutored heart.

"Soul-medicine...better medicine? New life... another life?"

. . . .

On the river all is silent. The boat of a Congo State official lies moored at the mouth of the Bolombo. The white man and his crew have turned in for the night.

Suddenly a sound of singing comes floating down the stream. In and out among the shadows of the forest five canoes paddle swiftly, laden with slaves and spoil, their owners bringing home the booty of a raid. The Belgian officer and his men put quickly out amid stream. Stealthily, silently they come within range of the traders. A bullet shot cracks sharply through the night air.

The surprise is complete. An angry native war-cry rings out, mingled with shrieks of terror from the captives in the boats. The first canoe is riddled and sinks with its entire freight, but not before the wretched prisoners have escaped into the swift flowing stream. Three remaining canoes are seized, six prisoners taken. Others plunging into the river are shot. The last canoe is destroyed, some of its crew drowned, others escaping.

The State boat making in shore is watched by anxious faces, white faces among them, on the bank.

"Who have they caught?" asks an Englishwoman's voice.

"Traders, slave traders, Mama!" replies a stalwart black fellow.

"Where from?" "From Jimboyo, Bokutu, Jimpongo. Our own people, Mama!"

"Our own people?" she exclaims incredulously, turning to her husband, a tall slight Englishman, worn by the fevers of the Congo forest in the midst of which he lives and works for the sake of Jesus Christ.

"Yes, our own people," he answers, scanning the nearing boat, "our own people, if they live in those villages—about three miles away. I know them well."

A dozen hands are stretched out to pull the boats ashore.

"Horrible!" exclaims the State official, shuddering as he grasps the missionary's hand. "Atroce!" He points to the canoe in the dark water.

"Human flesh in abundance, cooking pots full of legs, arms, hands boiled and boiling—other pieces roasted and dry. As figurehead, one of the canoes bore hoisted on a stick the jaw bones of one victim. I have thrown a mass of revolting stuff into the water. These I shall keep."

He holds out a pair of human jawbones!

A few hours later, when the dawn of a new day strikes across the Congo forest, the missionary's wife writes home the story, describes with a sick heart that "figurehead." "Recently cooked, a few of the teeth remaining, little bits of flesh which still adhered were quite moist....We saw them, handled them, tokens of the extreme degradation of our Mongo people, the people who work for us, who are about us every day....No one who has not really lived among them can form any idea whatever of the depth to which they have sunk."

. . . . . .

Another Sabbath rises and passes round the world, a million Sabbath bells ring out, and Christian millions gather to kneel in countless churches, to worship the world's Saviour — still ignoring half the world for which He died. The missionary sleeps in a Congo forest grave—laid there by Congo fever. His wife is working day by day, working quietly on, with the other patient labourers of the Balolo Mission to bring the Better Day, the rising Sun of Righteousness. To hasten his bright advent is your life also given?

Friends desiring to further the work of the Congo Balolo Mission should write to Dr. Grattan Guinness, Harley House, Bow, London, E.

Tunis.—Mr. Arthur V. Tiley (N.A.M.), writing from 10, Rue de la Madersa, Es-Slimania, speaks of a diversity of operation in his work of God in that place—receiving visits, tending the sick, sympathising with the tired and sorrowful, instructing converts, answering inquirers and objectors, and preaching the Gospel. Among those who come to the depôt are high-class Arabs, educated students, ignorant working-men, and black Soudanese. English ships coming to the port have been visited, tracts have been given, and a few words have been spoken for Christ as opportunities offered. All have heard the same message, for they need the same Gospel.

Progress in the New Hebrides.

AT the New Hebrides Mission Synod, recently held in Aneityum, reports full of encouragement were given in from many of the islands of the group. A minute passed on these reports recorded "progress almost all along the line. Not only is work progressing, at old stations and new, but Santo and Malekula in particular, and even dark Tanna are crying out for more teachers, no figuratively or by their wretched condition alone, but by the lips of many who come to the missionary beseeching him to come over and help them."

Disappointments and distresses have not been wanting. The angel of death has visited the islands, and valued workers have been compelled to retire from the field.

The minute continued:—As in former years, the work on Nguna and adjacent islands, under Mr. Milne, is particularly encouraging. The people are now all professedly Christian, there being over 800 church members, who support their own teachers, while over forty couples have gone out as teachers under other missionaries. Twenty-one students are in course of training at the Tangoan Institute. Epi continues to advance, a special feature being the remarkable demand for books, manifested by the fact that at Nikaura 800 copies of a new hymn-book were purchased within eight days, so that by the return mail the missionary was enabled to defray the cost of the book almost in full. A new primer, too, is almost sold out, and the newly translated Gospel of John has likewise had a good sale.

Malekula is at a most interesting and hopeful stage, more especially at Uripir, where the long, dark night of toil seems to be over and morning fairly advanced. The catechumens' class has an attendance of thirty, over 300 attend services regularly, and some fifty have moved to the mission station, where they live in primitive Christian fashion, having "all things in common." The natives of the Maskelyne islands, off the south end of Malekula, are intensely eager for a missionary, and Synod rejoices at the prospect of a station being opened there in the course of a few months. Amongst the bush tribes of the island there is a constantly expressed desire that the missionaries should settle teachers with the view of putting a stop to inter-tribal wars. On the large island of Santo the three new missionaries give in favourable reports, while a large number of the people about Cape Cumberland have begun to attend services, and at Nogugu 200 have broken caste, and now form a distinctively Christian party, which exercises great moral power in the district. The Christian liberality of the natives in many stations was remarkable beyond precedent.

Paris City Mission.

THE eighteenth annual report of this society is a record of successful evangelistic work in the pleasure-loving capital of France. Founded at the close of the Paris Exhibition of 1878, the Mission commenced operations in 1880 with three missionaries. It has for several years employed ten agents, who make visits from house to house, preach the Gospel in various halls, including those of the McAll Mission, Miss de Bröen, and others; also distribute Bibles, Gospels, and evangelical tracts.

Pastor S. H. Anderson, the Paris secretary, has for many years been preaching Christ to the Parisians. Mr. J. M. Weylland, who received his home-call last October, was from the commencement the honorary secretary in London. Mr. W. J. Lockie, who was for sixteen years the Paris secretary, now acts as general secretary in conjunction with Mr. H. E. Weylland, who will act as financial secretary.

In view of exceptional opportunities for evangelistic work at the coming Paris Exhibition of 1900, the committee hope to increase their present staff of missionaries to the apostolical number of twelve. By the decease of Mr. J. G. Barclay the Mission has lost an annual subscriber of £50; and as this amount is equal to the support of one of the missionaries (the French churches raising the other half of each agent's salary), unless fresh friends come forward it may be necessary to dispense with the services of one of the missionaries. Mr. H. E. Weylland, 14, Nicoll-road, Harlesden, N.W., will gladly forward copies of the report.

The China Inland Mission.

A FORWARD MOVEMENT.

REV. J. HUDSON TAYLOR believes that the Lord's time has come for the making of a special effort to "preach the Gospel to every creature" in China. This must be done by itinerant workers, both native and foreign; and as the existing work of the Mission is growing so as to constantly need reinforcements, it is evident that for a new and widespread Forward Movement many new workers must be called and sent forth of God in answer to prayer. It is proposed to form a special itinerant evangelistic band, composed of consecrated young men, who are willing for Christ's sake to devote five years of their lives to itinerant preaching in specified districts, without marrying or settling down until after this period of service. The work will be hard, and will call for much self-denial, but "in keeping of his commandments there is great reward" (see Psalm xix. 11).

Mr. Taylor has arranged for the commencement of this work in the province of Kiang-si. Central stations in each district will be put in charge of experienced missionaries, who will guide the younger workers in their studies of Chinese and in their evangelistic efforts.

Two evangelists and two Chinese helpers will usually journey together, preaching and selling Scriptures and Gospel tracts, and returning after a time to the central station, where the missionaries will pursue their Chinese studies, and the native workers will receive systematic Bible teaching. Mr. Hudson Taylor says, "To begin with, we need forthwith

TWENTY ABLE, EARNEST, AND HEALTHY YOUNG MEN."

Will all who read this article pause and raise their hearts to God, praying that He will select and send forth these men, so that their necessary preliminary Chinese studies may be commenced as soon as possible?

Offers of service, whether for the general work of the Mission or for the Forward Movement, may be addressed to the secretaries, China Inland Mission, Newington Green, London, N.

Chinese Leper Children.

OVERLOOKING the city of Lo-Ngwong is a village one side peopled by those who, though the offspring of lepers, are themselves untainted. Through the help of the "Missions to Lepers" I have employed a native catechist to work amongst those people. All the villagers have put away their idols, regularly attend Christian service, and many give unmistakable signs of real change of heart.

The children are almost all untainted, but as long as they continue amongst their diseased seniors they are liable to contract leprosy. Many are motherless or fatherless, and some have lost both parents. I want to start a boarding-school specially for the untainted ones, away from the leper village. They would, after a few years' separation, be able to start life like the ordinary native. A building for forty children, fitted up as home and school, would cost about £150. Meanwhile, I have started a day school in the village itself, taught by a native Christian schoolmaster.

Help to get hold of the untainted children of lepers in this part of China may be sent to the C.M.S. House, Salisbury-square, E.C. It should be clearly stated that gifts are for leper work at Lo-Ngwong, Foo-Chow. W. LIGHT, C.M.S. Missionary.

Nestorian Orphanages.—Some sixty-five inmates of these Homes have to be boarded, clothed, and educated, and, foremost of all, are taught daily those things which concern their souls. Many a bright and encouraging testimony to the value of his labours has been afforded to Deacon Abraham, not only by those who are now actually under his care, but also by those who formerly were so but are now out in the world, yet who still remember him who proved a real friend to them when they were friendless, helpless, and homeless. Much has been done by Deacon Abraham to alleviate the distress which resulted from Moslem onslaughts upon Nestorian and Armenian Christians; but the distress is so widely and deeply felt that it will be long before many of these people can be in a position to help themselves. The hon. treasurer for the work is Mr. Henry Tasker, Brookside, Andover, Hants.

Poor Children in Rome.

IN the midst of poverty, unbelief, and opposition, the Victoria Industrial Home has been working for many years. It is meant for Protestant children, but Roman Catholics are not refused, and it has gathered within its walls over two hundred children, who have gone out, many of them, as lights in the world. One who was admitted at the age of seven, and has been with us more or less for twenty years, is now master printer, has married a girl brought up in the Home, and is showing true Christian character. Another boy was brought at the age of six by his father, a colporteur, who worked among the mountains (and who died shortly after). The lad became an expert shoemaker, and joined the church in which he was born—the Wesleyan. He has now gone as a conscript for three years, is making a smart soldier, and influencing those around him for good.

Among the present inmates of the Home are some very young children with sad stories, who before arriving at the age of seven have seen and known misery and wickedness. One little girl, when she had been in the Victoria Home a few days, said, "What a strange house this is; no one is beaten!" Utterly ignorant a few months ago of a Saviour and his love, she now shows He Himself is speaking to her heart. Another sad instance is that of a little boy of six, whose mother, a widow, died at the railway station, Rome, just as she had arrived with five children.

We could go on enumerating cases, for every boy and girl has a history, and generally a sad one, but space fails. It is to enable us to continue this work of saving a few of the little ones in Rome for Christ that we earnestly plead for help. During these hot summer months we are left quite alone. All our friends, English and American, have left the city for cool breezes and a less trying climate. Yet these little ones must be fed, clothed, housed, and educated.

The bankers, Messrs. Sebasti and Reali, 20, Piazza di Spagna, Rome, will receive donations for the Home, or subscriptions can be sent direct to (Miss) E. Edwardes, The Victoria Home, Via dei Villini, Via Nomentana, Rome.

Animals at Naples.

THE Naples Society for the Protection of Animals has done good work during the past year, as the following statistics will show:—Carts, to which more animals were attached, 41,330; of which the load was diminished, 13,117. Confiscated: Sticks, 35,374; stakes, used for beating, 4936; spikes on curb-chains, 1162. Convictions: Working in an unfit state, 2848; beating, 1595; over-loading, 768.

We have sixteen inspectors constantly on duty, and they are active and energetic; but anyone who knows Naples and its hills will understand how inadequate they are. Of the drivers convicted for beating during the last two years, thirteen had knocked out their animals' eyes, and four had beaten their horses until they fell dead in the street.

Last December an attempt was made to assassinate our hon. director, Mr. Leonard T. Hawksley, presumably by cabmen who had been convicted for cruelty. After five months of illness he has resumed the direction of the Society's operations. Of course, he is doing so at the risk of his life, as all of us are. Contributions may be sent to the hon. sec., Miss P. H. Johnston, The Beeches, Carlisle; or to the hon. director, Leonard T. Hawksley, 22, Piazza Garibaldi, Naples.

Tibetan Mission Band.

SIR,—We shall be glad to let it be known, through the medium of your widely read paper, that suitable men, upon whose hearts God has laid the needs of Tibet, will be welcomed amongst the band now labouring on the Chinese frontier of Tibet, under the leadership of Mr. C. Polhill-Turner, and in association with the China Inland Mission. The mission band now occupies two important stations on the confines of the great closed land, viz., Songpan and Dachienloo, and is on the point of opening a third station at Batang, a town of considerable size and importance on the road to Llassa, and just on the frontier; whilst, as soon as reinforcements can be obtained, a fourth station at Atentze, south of Batang, might also be opened.

It has been arranged with Mr. Hudson Taylor that applications for joining the Tibetan Mission Band in Western China may be made to the China Inland Mission, Newington Green, London, where they will be duly considered. The opportunities for Gospel work amongst Tibetans from our present stations are but little, if any, less than if they were in Tibet proper, as the surrounding population is very largely Tibetan. Facilities for acquiring the language under the guidance of those already in the field are greatly improved over what they were two or three years ago.

We should be glad to have ten or a dozen offers of service for Tibet, with a view to any such volunteers going out in the coming autumn or winter, or to their undergoing, if found necessary, a period of training in England first.—Yours faithfully,

WILLIAM SHARP,
Hon. Sec. and Treasurer of the Tibetan Mission Band.

Work among the Young.

AT a missionary convention in Allahabad, India, the statistics given by Dr. T. J. Scott, of Bareilly concerning the different ages at which a thousand persons were converted are truly an important testimony to the importance of Christian work among the young. It is a coincidence that we have this week received a letter from Rev. E. Payson Hammond, of Hartford, Connecticut, the evangelist to children. He says:—

"Some few years ago the Tract and Book Society at Madras published my book, 'The Conversion of Children.'* Dr. Murdock was interested in it, and corresponded with me about it. Some time after the Sunday School Union, at their annual convention, invited me to spend a year in India, and hold meetings especially among the young, with the object of getting as many as possible to come at once to Christ, and also to teach young ministers and evangelists and laymen how to lead children to the Saviour. I have been hoping year after year to go, but have been so pressed with work here that I have not got away."

There is a wide field in India and Burmah, and a welcome waiting for Mr. Payson Hammond whenever he is ready to come. His book on "The Conversion of Children"* has been translated into various languages, recently into Japanese. It can be obtained in English from The Bombay Guardian Book Depôt, together with several other works by Mr. Hammond.—Bombay Guardian.

France.—Mr. Thomas Hogben, of the Welcome Mission, Portsmouth, writes: "I have just returned from a tour in the West of France and have been struck with the ready way in which the people both listen to and receive the Word of God. Will you allow me through your valuable paper to press all Christians who are visiting France to take a large supply of portions of Holy Scripture for free distribution, and to speak to the people personally upon the salvation of Jesus Christ?"

Anglo-Chinese Students.—The other day I met an earnest Christian Chinese gentleman who was trained in an Anglo-Chinese college at Foochow. He was full of enthusiasm about some young men who had had educational advantages the same as himself, because their zeal for God had led them to go even as far as Hunan to preach the Gospel; and this without any regular means of support, but looking to Him by whom they were sent. He also stated that while some of these Anglo-Chinese students went to such a distance and to such a difficult province, others were carrying on the work of Christ nearer at hand. J. SADLER.

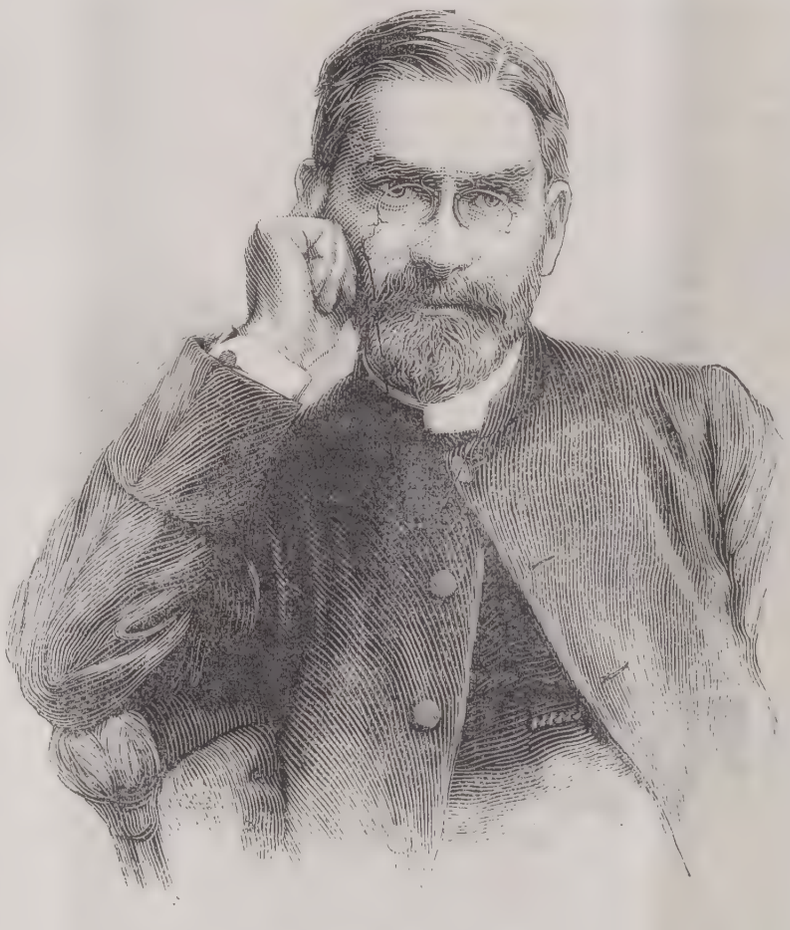
The Wesleyan Conference.

THE 155th annual Conference of the Wesleyan Methodists is at present holding its sessions in Hull. Last week the ministers of the Church met in pastoral session, and the representative session, consisting of ministers and laymen in equal numbers, is during this week transacting the more distinctly financial business affecting the interests of the Connexion.

The spacious sanctuary in which the Conference assembles—Great Thornton-street Chapel—presented an impressive spectacle at the opening session, when Rev. H. Price Hughes was elected President. Rev. W. L. Watkinson, the retiring President, occupied the chair during the opening proceedings, and looked well after his year of honourable toil, in which, as he told the Conference, he had travelled 17,000 miles, and preached or spoken twice on nearly every day of every week. The office of Wesleyan President is no sinecure.

Dispensations of absence were granted to certain aged and poor brethren, including Rev. William Arthur, whose "Tongue of Fire" still speaks, though his voice is silent; Dr. W. B. Pope, Dr. E. N. Young, Dr. Benjamin Gregory, and Rev. John Walton; all ex-Presidents. Vacancies in the Legal Hundred were filled by the election of Rev. Wm. Perkins, C. H. Crookshank (of Ireland), Henry Lone, and Hy. Soper.

The election of Mr. Price Hughes as President by a very decisive majority, gave rise to great enthusiasm. Doubtless the election of the most popular of Methodist preachers will give lively satisfaction among Evangelical Christians everywhere.



The public induction of the new President took place in a crowded chapel. Rev. W. L. Watkinson introduced his successor in a graceful speech, and Rev. H. Price Hughes proceeded, after some personal references, to deliver an impressive and timely address. He claimed that the great organisation represented by that Conference was not a human society, but a Divinely created church. He declared that an attempt absolutely unparalleled since the days of Queen Mary was now being made to Romanise the Anglican Church. He advised his brethren to read "The Secret History of the Oxford Movement." The facts there stated were undisputed and indisputable. Every Roman doctrine without exception was to-day taught in Anglican pulpits and symbolised in Anglican worship. He admitted that the Roman conspirators might be, many of them, men of blameless life and thorough sincerity. But having accepted the Jesuit ethic which Pascal exposed, their conception of truth, honour, straightforwardness, and duty differs toto cœlo from that of ordinary men. Their marvellous energy and enthusiasm were associated with the mediæval doctrine of the Church which Keble sang and Newman preached.

He confessed to a conviction that they themselves had been too negative and critical. They had not confronted the mediæval doctrine of the Church with the Apostolic doctrine. They had been called Protestants, Nonconformists, Dissenters. But they were more than that. They were Evangelical and Scriptural Churchmen. It was the presence of Christ that constituted the Church. The President proceeded to deal with great force with the question, "How can we be quite sure that any particular organisation of Christians is a living branch of the one Church?" He declared that the fruit of any ministry was the final proof of its validity. "Alas! for the churches that found their claim upon debatable theories or disputable speculations. Happy are the churches that stand upon the immovable granite of experimental fact." Mr. Hughes closed his powerful address by pleading for a great revival of spiritual life.

The urgent need to-day is neither a million guineas, nor a million new converts, but more Christ-like Christians. He had been urged from time to time to attempt to move the Methodist Church to renewed consecration on a combined scale. Now the set time had come. All anxious controversies had been settled, or could be postponed until they had received a fresh baptism of the Holy Spirit, and were better Christians. There was something thrilling in Mr. Hughes's tones as he said: "During the last few days there has been ringing in my ears and flashing before my eyes the word-picture of St. Luke, 'So the Church throughout all Judea, and Galilee, and Samaria had peace, being built up; and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, was multiplied.' May that bright picture be reproduced in all the churches we represent." He pleaded with his brethren that they should go before the flock in whole-hearted self-surrender to Christ. Assuredly the people would follow into the green pastures of heroic service, and beside

THE STILL WATERS OF SAINTLY LIFE.

Then followed the Conference Prayer-meeting, which Mr. Hughes prayed might become the Conference Pentecost.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes.

A deeper devotional spirit has characterised the opening services of each day's session of the Conference than has been the case in some former years. This is in part owing to the fact that the President has asked some minister of experience each day to address a few words to the Conference after the reading of Scripture and prayer. These love-feast talks have been much enjoyed. Dr. Rigg led the way on Wednesday with weighty words, which made a deep impression. He feared lest they should make claims as to the authority of their decisions which could not be sustained. They were accustomed to hear emphatic references to the Holy Ghost; but there was just so much of the Holy Ghost as there was of humble consciousness of God's presence, and true humble seeking of God's guidance.

On the following day Rev. G. W. Olver, the senior missionary secretary, reminded his brethren that they must be men of God, or God's men. They were to represent Him, and to show to their people a type of the highest Christian life.

On Friday morning Rev. Joseph Posnett, a veteran circuit minister who has seen forty-nine years of active service, with tremulous earnestness pleaded specially with the young ministers for more prayer.

THE PRESIDENT'S PROPOSAL.

On Wednesday morning the President outlined to the Conference the methods by which he is persuaded he can best serve the Connexion during his year of office. Briefly, Mr. Price Hughes suggests that district gatherings, which he will attend, should be held throughout Great Britain, of ministers and church officers, in order to seek a fresh baptism of Divine power. He referred to the great revival at Oxford some years ago, when in eighteen months they had 1500 conversions in a circuit that was supposed to be hopeless. The beginning of that revival was in a series of such gatherings of class-leaders and local preachers as he desired to promote on a large scale. So far as he understood Church history or the New Testament, the special Pentecostal blessing was bestowed on them not when they were alone and separated, but when they met together "in one place, with one accord."

The approval of the Conference was heartily given to these suggestions. Dr. Jenkins had not the least doubt that this preparation would bring to the Connexion showers of blessing. Rev. John Bond called to mind the Conventions held by Rev. Alexander McAulay during his presidency, with great spiritual results. Dr. Nicholas hoped that Ireland would share in such services; and Rev. Thomas Champness said the President would be nowhere more welcome than in the rural districts. He was certain that the men who followed the plough would feel that the Saviour had made Himself heard in that deliverance from the chair.

Questions of doctrine and discipline received careful consideration. Permission to become supernumeraries was given to brethren whose failing health or increasing years prevent them from discharging the full duties of the ministry. Some sixty-two candidates for the ministry were accepted, and forty-five probationers who have travelled four years, and will be ordained this Conference, were received into full connexion.

One of the most interesting sessions of Conference was that of Thursday morning, when a deputation of the Evangelical clergy of Hull presented an address of welcome to the Conference. It is fifteen years since such courtesies have been shown the Wesleyan Conference by the representatives of the Church of England, and that was at the last Hull Conference. The deputation on Thursday was headed by Archdeacon Hughes-Games and Revs. J. Ford Simmons and J. T. Lewis. The address was couched in warm terms of brotherly recognition, and the clergymen named also spoke words of hearty greeting. The President replied with geniality and power. He declared that they knew full well that no Church in Christendom had produced more learned theologians or more eminent saints than the Anglican Church. He concluded by quoting Richard Watson, who said in 1834, "Things will not be right until the Archbishop of Canterbury and the President of the Conference can exchange pulpits." "So far as my predecessors were concerned, and so far as I am concerned," added the President amid laughter, "there is no difficulty whatever. But if we cannot exchange pulpits, let us, at any rate, praise God that we can exchange courtesies."

Rev. F. W. Macdonald also spoke in response to the deputation. His address was most happily conceived, and delivered with grace and power.

The Nonconformist deputation will be received by the Conference during the Representative Session.

[By Our Special Commissioner.]

ONCE again the Convention at Keswick is over, and many are its happy memories. The attendance shows no sign of decline; and, without instituting comparisons with the efforts of other years, the addresses may be pronounced useful in a high degree. The platform included a few fresh faces, but for the most part the speakers were well known as teachers in connection with the movement. Going about among the audience, one met many worthies from various parts of the British Isles, who counted their score of visits to Keswick to attend the annual meeting, and here and there one who was able to speak of the first gathering, in 1875, and to register an attendance each and every year since then.

The large attendance included a multitude of young people, and as the meetings followed in quick succession and with an ever-growing volume of influence, one could not but pray that a deep and lasting impression might be made upon their minds. Like their elders, they were furnished with Bibles and hymn-books, to say nothing of the inevitable note-book; and these were by no means the only indications of real interest in the objects and work of the Convention. It was a pleasure one day to note the presence of two members of Parliament, widely known for their Christian life and activity; all were gathered in the spacious tent, over the entrance of which was stretched a scroll with the words "All One in Christ Jesus."

It was a great joy to note the way in which the people turned out to the early morning prayer-meetings. Seven o'clock is not everybody's time to begin the activities of the day; but morning after morning the tent seemed fairly full. Various subjects and classes of people were remembered in prayer, and brief addresses were delivered. As the week neared its close some attended these early gatherings for the first time; and with good reason did they blame themselves for not having more regularly been present at the morning prayer-meetings. A large volume of praise and prayer went up, and not without joy and profit did the words linger in the mind:

When thou wakest in the morning,
Ere thou tread the untried way
Of the lot that lies before thee
Through the coming busy day;
Whether sunbeams promise brightness,
Whether dim forebodings fall,
Be thy dawning glad or gloomy,
Go to Jesus—tell Him all.

Among the first questions that will arise to the lips of friends of the movement or persons of curious mind will be, What has been the result of all this effort—this speaking and hearing—this gathering from all parts to consider Divine truth and the path of service? It is impossible to give in few words an answer to this far-reaching question. If the gatherings were large, the attendant blessing was great beyond description. Those who were engaged in the work of speaking and dealing with inquirers—those who had occasional conference with the anxious and did service in guiding the perplexed, confirm the impression formed by the more ordinary observer that the spirit of inquiry was deep and widespread. At the after-meetings, and, indeed, at some others, opportunity was given for those in spiritual distress to indicate the same, also for those who had been helped to testify to blessing received. From these and other circumstances the conclusion was gathered that no previous Convention had been more fruitful or rich in definite results.

What the Convention will mean to hundreds of ministers and workers, who can say? There were missionaries from all climes, preachers belonging to various denominations, and teachers of every grade; and not only did they get a lift-up in the things of God, but they entered upon resolves which it is hoped will make them increasingly useful in the days to come. It was very gratifying to see among the company from time to time ministers of widespread influence taking their place with men and women whose work is much more limited in range and simple in character. "All One in Christ Jesus," they sat together at the feet of the Master to hear his word. Now they have dispersed to their different spheres; and if they are faithful to the grace which was besought from God on their behalf, they will henceforth labour in the spirit of the greatest of the prophets—"He must increase, but I must decrease."

And the social joys, the friendships of the gathering! We talk of "heaven upon earth"; and while the memories of last week continue, many a weary worker and humble Christian will have reason so to speak. Old acquaintances were renewed, and new bonds of affection were formed. Moreover, faces that had never met on earth exchanged loving glances, and each was privileged to help the other with stories of God's goodness and grace. A friend from New Zealand, taking Keswick as a welcome item in a holiday tour, was beyond measure surprised to find himself sitting side by side with a worker of whom he had heard much while in Australasia. In the hotel or lodging-house marvellous links were discovered in family story, as in pleasant conversation that proverb was illustrated which tells how man "sharpeneth the countenance of his friend." There was indeed goodly fellowship, for it was "in the Lord."

The missionary gathering on the Lake is an institution which agreeably combines pleasure with profit. Long before the proceedings began on the mid-lake island, on Thursday afternoon, boats were on the way with parties desirous of "assisting" in the gathering. Shortly after three o'clock the entire side of the island was occupied with people and the small craft that had conveyed them; and, at the call of Rev. W. E. Burroughs, about a score friends, representing work in many lands, spoke briefly on the great need of the heathen world to-day.

The praise meeting on Saturday morning had all the best characteristics of that gathering in a rich degree. To begin with, the notes of praise sent in were three or four times more numerous than in past years. One aged saint, who had attended the Convention with some misgiving owing to long-standing deafness, testified that in answer to the prayer of God's people his power of hearing had been restored, so that he had greatly enjoyed the addresses as they were delivered. As usual, texts from Holy Writ were given from the platform. The concluding quotation, by the Chairman, emphasised "the Blessed Hope," which was ever in view throughout the Convention—"Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with Me, to give every man according as his work shall be" (Rev. xxii. 12).

Nine Blessings.

Math. v. 1-12.

BIBLE READING by Rev. HUBERT BROOKE.

We have come together to seek a blessing from God, and in the Master's name I offer you nine blessings this morning. Think for a moment what it will be at the end of the Convention if you go home with these blessings in your heart's possession.

Picture for a minute what a life is in which these nine blessings are possessed—of what it is to rise morning by morning and go forth into life consciously possessed of the Kingdom of God in all its rights and privileges and power; to go forth even in the darkest day with a certainty of the light of heaven; to go out poor, perhaps poverty-stricken to the last degree, and yet to look out upon the whole world and know that it is your inheritance that the Father is keeping for you. Think of it, though you go forth every morning with fresh hunger and thirst, you know that satisfaction will infallibly come; that you go forth daily to meet new mercies—mercies every morning, preserving mercies, pardoning and peace-giving mercies, even until the night closes in. Think of it that you go out with God's own stamp of sonship upon your life, "they shall be called the sons of God"; that your right to the covenant is sealed from without as well as from within, and that as you live this life here below you are in heaven. If we go home with these possessions, will there be any dissatisfied soul? England will not have room for us, it will take the world to contain a Church filled with these nine blessings; in fact, it will take heaven, and quickly will heaven come down when these blessings are realised by the Church of Christ, for whom they have been prepared and promised, and are only waiting to be possessed.

Notice that these blessings do not come of their own accord. Do not suppose that because you are a believer in Christ Jesus all these things are your conscious experience. You can hardly read the words without seeing that that cannot be the right way of looking at the matter. Legal rights that never become actual rights are a rather empty kind of satisfaction. These blessings are real things meant to be possessed and known, and to use a much ill-treated word "felt," in everyday life; they are such tangible blessings that you cannot help feeling them if you have them. Our experience tells us that. Another thing tells us so; the blessings are attached to conditions, and if God has joined these we cannot separate them. Has every Christian fulfilled these conditions? If each of us had fulfilled the conditions, we should have the blessings. We read through the list—poor in spirit, mourning, meek, hungering, merciful, pure-hearted, peace-making, persecuted, and reviled; and we say at once, they are not the conditions that fill every Christian life. A third reason tells us why these blessings do not come of their own accord, and how they can come. In the fourth chapter (verse 23) you read that Jesus went about earlier, in the 17th verse, you find the words "From that time Jesus began to preach." Now these things are quite different; you must not consider that one who teaches preaches, or that one who preaches is necessarily a teacher. Preaching is heralding the King's message to a rebel world, that there is pardon to sinners; and wherever that good news comes it divides. In the Acts we read that some believed the words that were spoken, and some believed not. That is what preaching always does, and has done for eighteen centuries. The message of the herald divides those who hear into two classes—those who believe, and those who believe not.

But Jesus also went about teaching, and so did his disciples. Now teaching addresses itself solely to those who have believed the preacher. Sometimes we find people with an eager desire to be taught before they have accepted the message of forgiveness; but that cannot be. You must come through the strait gate as a lost sinner before you can enter the school where Christ teaches his disciples. If any think they can get a well-stocked mind in the things of God while as yet they have not a pardoned heart, then they are labouring under a false idea.

Now all these beatitudes are matters of teaching. We read that "his disciples came unto Him, and He opened his mouth and taught them." Here, then, is the Master's teaching for his scholars. Naturally and normally, God's Word preached divides the believer and the unbeliever, and the same is true of the Word taught. Look at chap. vii. and see the closing verses from 24, and you will see that the teaching divides those who are instructed into those who do and those who do not the sayings of Jesus. Now you understand how it is that souls that say they believe in Jesus, and say it truly, and have peace in Christ Jesus, may yet not have these blessings as theirs in any practical sense of possession, because either they have not come into or they have been dunces, or lazy, or stupid, or rebellious. At any rate, though they have heard the words, they have not done the things commanded. In a word, the way into these blessings is by hearing and doing what the Master commands.

Let us look more closely at these blessings. First of all, notice that they are nine, in fact, three threes, speaking to man and applying themselves to man in his wonderful three-fold condition, as set forth in Titus ii. 12, "that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world"—i.e., soberly in myself, righteously towards my fellow man, godly towards my Father in heaven. And as you look at the nine blessings you will find that each set of three has to do with the inward, myself; the outward, my fellow man; and the upward, my Father in heaven. God's work with us, to be full and perfect, must not stop short in any of these respects:

we must be put right inside and outside, and with God Himself. Another feature about these blessings is this—all the conditions describe transcendent characteristics, something lifted up above the ordinary run of the spiritual limits in which people are in the habit of confining themselves. These are things of which the world never dreams, and is generally amazed when it finds them; yet they are the Lord's conditions by which He leads us into his wonderful blessing.

Look at these things again as a description of the character of Christ. Although rich, for our sakes He became poor; he mourned in weeping over Jerusalem; He was meek and lowly at heart; and when, hungered with a bodily hunger, He came seeking fruit from the barren fig-tree, was it not a picture of his desire for souls out of Israel to be brought into his kingdom? Again, He was merciful—who showed mercy to lost mankind, wholly harmless and undefiled, separate from sinners. He was the great Peace-maker, who made peace through the blood of his cross. He was persecuted and reviled and done to death. When the Lord puts forth these conditions, he says, If you are going to be children of his Father He expects the family features to be reproduced in you. I venture to say that the character in which these nine things were literally and evidently present would be stamped as a child of God as nothing else could stamp it before the world. Where these are you have a soul that is following in the footsteps of Christ.

Here are blessings with which God is willing to fill our hearts; let us look at the conditions that make up a full-grown Christian character, beginning with that which lies at the root of all—true knowledge of God. "Blessed are the poor in spirit." There are two ways of being poor in spirit; one, like those people of whom our Lord spoke in Rev. iii. 17, who thought of themselves that they were rich, and increased in goods, and had need of nothing; and did not know that they were wretched and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked—like people heaping together as coin of the realm that which all the time was counterfeit. Is there not something Laodicean in every one of us? Do we not think ourselves rich when all the time we are poor? The other way of being poor in spirit is like that contemplated by the Lord in his words to the young ruler, "Go sell all that thou hast, and follow Me." That was, he had to get rid of the things he had—like the Lord Himself, who, though He was rich, for our sakes became poor. The Kingdom of Heaven is such that hands that have anything in them cannot grasp it.

"Blessed are they that mourn"—not mourn as the world does, but as the people of God have mourned in every age. Look at Nehemiah, and see how he mourned, and read concerning him that when news came that the people and city of God were in an evil case "I sat down and wept, and mourned"; and he confessed his sins, and those of his father's house. That was a mourning that got a great satisfaction. Look again at Job xlii. 5, 6, "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth thee. Wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes." That is the way to get comfort—go before God, abhor ourselves, our sins, our failures, our shortcomings. When we see the evils and sins of the church to which we belong, we should mourn for it and them, and bring the need to God.

"Blessed are the meek." Now, meekness has to do with our dealings towards others. It is not something in ourselves. The word occurs in substantive and adjective form fifteen times in the New Testament, and the context shows that it is in our dealings with others that we are called to be meek. As we read in Gal. vi. 1, we are to "restore such an one in the spirit of meekness." That is, when you find another has fallen in fault and gone astray, you are not to go to him as from a higher level, but rather to go down to his level—"considering thyself lest thou also be tempted." So we may apply the words, "Bear ye one another's burdens." In Titus iii. 2 also we read that we are to "show all meekness unto all men," so that in dealing with our fellows who are in fault or in sin, and have come far short of God's holy will, we shall not act as from a great distance, but go alongside them and help them. Henry Martyn is said to have been a man of wonderful power in telling other men their faults, and bringing them to a right mind. Have we not tried to do this, and said, "My dear brother, you are wrong in this matter," with the result that

WE HAVE BEEN SHOWN THE DOOR,

—and no wonder! It was different with Henry Martyn; and it is declared that on being asked the secret of his success, he said, "I have never done such a thing without first going on my knees before God, and thanking Him that, by his grace, I was not in the same fault." That is the spirit of meekness. The Good Samaritan went where the sick man was; and if the sick man was on the ground, he got down on his knees, which is the best way down. Then, having ministered to his necessities, he lifted him up, and put him on his own beast.

"Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness" comes next; and that means hunger and thirst after Christ, who of God is made unto us righteousness. You cannot find it unless you seek Him; and you cannot have Him without finding it. You look at Christ, and you will soon long for Him. Turn away your eyes from beholding vanity, lest you long after it; "unto Thee do I lift up" my heart and mine eyes. If you say your soul is lean and empty, it is because you are not looking to Christ.

Then "Blessed are the merciful." He that showed mercy was neighbour to the man who fell among thieves. Your brother man is in distress all the world over—not only in England, but in all other countries; and many of your sisters are hidden away in miserable homes, and suffering torments and needless agonies, because those who know Christ have not in sufficient numbers gone among them to show them mercy. "Blessed are the merciful"—oh, I think that must mean —for "they shall obtain mercy." I heard a man say that he did not need to pray for mercy, for he had found it. But our mercies are new every morning; and do we not want mercy every day? If you are like the Psalmist, you will sing of God's mercies every day—morning mercies, also pardoning and resting mercies; and if you want a life satisfied by mercy, enriched by mercy, pass the same mercy on to others.

"BLESSED ARE THE MISSIONARIES"

To speak of "Blessed are the pure in heart" might well occupy us for the entire week, but we have only a few minutes to devote to it. The Greek word katharos (pure) comes from the verb kathairo (to take away). The pure in heart are those who have had taken away the veils that shut out the vision of God. Observe the words of the Apostle, Eph. iv. 18: "Darkened understanding... because of the blindness of their heart." And again, Eph. i. 18: "The eyes of your understanding being enlightened." The vision of God comes with cleansing. Do not put off seeing God—do not rest on seeing Him in the world to come—but see Him now. Every eye shall see Him one day, so it will be no distinction to see Him then. See Him now, that his hand may help, his arm deliver, and his eye guide you. Have God's purity within, enabling for God's vision without.

Then "the peace-makers." Sometimes this blessing is assigned to those who act the part of reconcilers and put an end to quarrelling. But as represented here, the peace-maker is a child of God, who Himself was through his Son. When one has done you wrong, you do not wait, but you endeavour to lead him to repentance; you show him that your hand is outstretched to forgive! So you shall be called a son of God, and show the title stamped upon you, as upon Christ, who "made peace by the blood of his cross."

The last two beatitudes relate to two kinds of persecution—the first for righteousness sake, doing what is righteous. Oh, that God would give to his living Church a longing after that blessing of the persecuted, that they might set God and right in the first place; that, whatever it might cost, the thing that is wrong should never be permitted or done, even although Christians might suffer for their testimony! "If ye suffer for righteousness' sake, happy are ye," for "the spirit of glory and of Christ resteth upon you." Doing right and confessing Christ are two different things, and the latter is bound to bring the reviling spoken of in the last blessing; but if you suffer for that "blessed are ye, and great is your reward in heaven." This condition you must search out for yourself, and prove for yourself.

These then are the nine conditions that lead up to the nine blessings. If we have come aright to this Convention and I do not know that we can better define it than by saying, with those blessings before us: "These must be mine before the week is out; these conditions must come from God before this week is out." If you go away without this, you will have missed a boundless blessing, without which you cannot carry away very much. Are you ready to give up the hindering things, and take up these satisfying things? What is the Church of Christ crying for to-day — missionaries and pastors and preachers, all through this land and others, are seeming to cry to God with one voice for power. I am not sure that God is not calling upon them for purity. Have you ever thought that to train his disciples into these nine blessings the Lord took three years and a-half, whereas it was after ten days' prayer that He gave them the power. I am well assured that power is waiting, but the vessels are full and not empty, therefore not ready to receive it. If these blessings would make us vessels meet for the Master's use, what are we going to do?

WE HAVE BUSINESS TO DO,

Give me a diamond of the finest water. Though in the rough, it is priceless; but when its facets have been polished all the world will wonder at its beauty. So the human soul is priceless, having cost the Saviour his blood to save it, though in the rough. Does it commend Christ with its angularities and unpolished surfaces? Indeed, no; because of its defects the name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles. Put it in the mill, however, and let God work upon it; though that soul is brought very low in the process, it will be made to reflect the glory of Christ, and to extend blessing among the sons of men.

Thirsting for God.

By Dr. J. ELDER CUMMING.

Read Psalm lxiii., and note especially the third clause of the first verse: "My soul thirsteth for Thee." We are told that this is a psalm of David, and the commentators think they can point to the very time and circumstances of David's life in which it was written. I do not know whether this can be ascertained, but I know that the experience of this psalm is one that is common to all the children of God; and that whosoever was its author, and at whatever time it was wrung from his soul, assuredly these are thoughts and experiences which all the people of God more or less have had and are having. But it is a precious psalm, there is none more precious, it is the quintessence of all the psalms; and we have it on record that in the early days of the Church it was appointed to be read daily in the services of those who met together. Every day in the year they read and offered this psalm to God.

Let us dwell for a little on the words I have chosen. You will notice that this is specially the cry of the believer—the man who can say, "O God, Thou art my God; early will I seek Thee." But that word "early" does not convey the sense of the writer. The idea is rather that of breaking through, even as the sun breaks through the clouds in the morning; and possibly we might translate it more effectively by saying, "Thou art my God; my soul will break through into thy presence." This indicates the intensity of the cry that follows, which is a Christian's cry.

Then note the doctrinal significance of the words. This is very clear, for here is a believer who feels that there is

A GREAT WANT WITHIN HIS SOUL.

He has known about pardon; he has known about deliverance; he has known God interposing for his salvation; and yet what a want it is that is in that soul, that it can take up the words of my text, "'My soul thirsteth for Thee,' I am athirst; I am not satisfied; I need something much more than I have ever had; I need to be brought near to God; I need some power of God within me that I have never known as yet."

Is not that a common condition among Christian people? Is not that the very explanation of our being here? Is not that the very raison d'être of conventions? Christians with a great lack in their souls, with a cry in their hearts and almost on their lips—that is what is gathering people together in this way, and if there be those here to-day who have that longing, I ask them to listen as we go step by step to see what God is teaching us for the souls of those whom Christ has bought with his precious blood. The doctrinal significance then is with Christians who know they have been redeemed, and can say, "My past is all forgiven, my sin has all been blotted out through the blood of Jesus Christ; yet there is much that is wanting—much without which I cannot be at rest. What is it? 'My soul thirsteth for God.'"

The spiritual truth revealed in the text is very precious; and that truth is that only God Himself can satisfy the soul. "He that drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst"; but whosoever drinketh of that water—water of the well, water of the valley, water of the world—shall thirst again, and again, and again, and shall never be satisfied. "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him

SHALL NEVER THIRST."

Have you ever compared two verses in this short Psalm—the first and the fifth? In the former the soul cries, "My soul thirsteth for God"—i.e., the unsatisfied soul, the soul that cannot rest in its present state. The other verse says, "My soul shall be satisfied as with marrow and fatness," aye, with something better, shall be satisfied to its inmost depth and to its furthest thought.

How is this to be done? The soul can only be satisfied with God. It is not a gift that we are seeking, it is the Giver. It is not the goodness of God we ask for; it is not even holiness that we seek—when we understand things aright. It is the God of goodness, it is the God of holiness; and without Him we cannot be satisfied. The soul in which God has placed that thirst can never be satisfied save with Himself. Blessed are they that thirst, for they shall be filled. It is independent of circumstances, this marvellous satisfaction with God Himself. The dry and thirsty and waterless land may be as dry as ever—drier than ever; that only makes us thirst the more for God. Our trouble may be great; that only sends us the more to God. Our difficulties may be overwhelming; they only point us more decidedly to God, as the only one that can deal with them. "My soul is athirst"—for what? For pleasure, for comfort, for long life, for usefulness, for honour, for power? No; my soul is athirst for God. That is the spiritual truth that is revealed here.

Then the practical method of obtaining the blessing. I must go and tell God of this great lack and want in my Christian life. Then the words become a prayer, and a wonderful sort of prayer. Of course, you all know that prayer is not to be confined to asking—that and one of the sweetest and deepest forms of prayer is simply telling God all we are thinking and feeling—all about ourselves, in fact. Someone has even said that some of his deepest experiences in prayer were while simply standing before the Lord, and letting the awfulness of the blessedness of the Lord's presence pass upon his soul. He felt—That is God; and this is I before God! Go and tell God that you are thirsting for Him, and you will realise what a marvellous confession there is in that act. You say, "O God, after all that has been done for me, after the gift of thy Son, and the shedding of his blood for me—here I am. Thou knowest what I am, as nobody else knows, as nobody else could guess, or, indeed, believe. I have been so far away from Thee, and I seem to have put Thee so far away from much of my life! O God, look in mercy upon me, a poor unworthy sinner, as I kneel before Thee. That is the cry of my heart, Lord; my soul thirsteth for Thee." There is deep confession in it.

But there is something more. The cry is one that can only come out of love; it is the very utterance of a trembling and sensitive love within the soul; and we must say it alone, say it in secret, say it in a whisper. God speaks to us in the still small voice in which He spoke to his prophet of old; so we, in a still small voice, may speak to God. O God, Thou art my God; "my soul thirsteth for Thee!"

Why should we thirst after God? Do we need to say it, can we say it, dare we say it? Ah, for the tenderness of his love we thirst after God Himself. There is nothing like the tenderness of that love, nor never has been. A mother's love for her helpless infant is not comparable to the love of God. For God's tender love, which no one can tell, we thirst.

"WE THIRST FOR GOD."

Marvellous grace—grace for the greatest of sinners, even the persecutor and enemy of God's people He does not send empty away; but is waiting to be gracious even to such. Oh, the marvellousness and wondrousness of the grace of God! Therefore "my soul thirsteth for Thee."

For the glory of God's person the soul must thirst for God. Does anyone know how great and glorious God is? Angels and archangels bow before Him: all heaven, all the ransomed fall on their faces before Him—the eternal, the unspeakable and unsearchable, the holy and infinite God—who is Love. Oh, the glory of God; and that we should know Him, that we should possess Him! "My soul thirsteth for God."

I thirst after God, too, because there are things in me that none can remove but God. You ask for holiness—to be made new; you ask that the evil be cast out of your heart. You have tried, during many years of infirmity, to make yourself better, striving hour by hour and day by day. What has been the result? Standing still, going backwards rather; getting harder and more stony of heart than before. Who can deal with your sin, and cleanse from a defilement so deep?

NO ONE BUT GOD HIMSELF, and if you want to be sanctified, God alone can undertake it for you. "My soul thirsteth for Thee."

Is your prayer sure to receive an answer? Listen; I find in one place: "If thine enemy thirst, give him drink." If thy child thirst, wilt Thou give him to drink, O God? Wilt thou not quench his thirst? If the Bride of Christ cries out in her thirst for the living water, are we not sure that her cry will be heeded? God asks for our love in return for his; and in this cry the weary soul confides in the ear of God the secret of its love for Him. Will God receive the love we offer Him? "My soul thirsteth for Thee, and only one thing can make it thirst. When I was a sinner I was afraid of Thee, and my desire was to be out of thy sight; but now I thirst for Thee, and offer Thee my poor love." Will God return thy love? Do you need an answer?

Ah, the blessedness of possessing God! There is faith there, also praise, also constant meditation, also satisfaction of soul, joy, courage. As to the enemy and those who work under him, they shall be "a portion for foxes" (verse 9). They shall fade before the breath of God. Oh, the joy of knowing God—the joy that taketh possession of the soul who can say, "I have little, and I am nothing myself; but I have one possession for eternity, and that is God!" "My soul thirsteth for Thee," and Thou art hearing me. I cannot be satisfied without Thee. Come, holy and eternal God, come into my life, into my heart. "O God, thou art my God; I will break into thy presence. My soul thirsteth for Thee." Go and tell God of that thirst, if you would have Him to be the Master of all your life.

The Keswick Mission.

There was a full gathering of friends at the Keswick Mission meeting in the Tent on Wednesday afternoon. Mr. Wilson was attended by a large company, faces familiar in missionary circles being included among those more commonly found on the platform. The proceedings were opened with the hymn (second part of 432 in "Hymns of Consecration and Faith") beginning—

In this day of full increase
Shall we, can we, hold our peace?
Staying here we do not well—
Now then, let us go and tell.

Dr. Elder Cumming followed with prayer, in which the shortcomings of the Church were deplored, and grace sought to enable believers to cease their criminal neglect of the heathen world. While confessing the faults of ancestors and fathers, Dr. Cumming voiced the feelings of all present in giving expression to the humiliation and shame of those then bowed in the presence of God.

The Chairman read a financial report. Including a small balance in hand at the beginning of the year, the total income was £2051 12s. 8d. Of this sum £1790 19s. 2d. was paid to the treasurer of the Missionary Council (Mr. Head) and £260 13s. 6d. was handed to other missions by request of the donors. So there was no balance in hand. Mr. Head rendered a statement as to details of expenditure in the support of workers and facilitating deputation visits to various countries. Rev. J. Harford Battersby read the

from which we make the following extracts:—

It must be remembered that we are not ourselves a missionary society. We work through existing societies. In the case of certain missionary candidates, approved of by the Council, it is intimated to the societies in connection with which they desire to work that if they are accepted we are prepared to undertake their support. We are thankful to know that this method of operation has worked well. The societies have gladly accepted such help, and we have received many happy evidences of good work done by "our own missionaries" in the foreign field.

We have to record the following changes:—Miss Hodgson has married a fellow missionary, Mr. Ford. Miss Jacob and Miss Barthorp are expecting to be married some time this year. The former has been very ill, but is now convalescent. It was never intended that the Council should undertake the permanent support of individual missionaries, and it has been arranged that its support of these ladies shall cease upon their marriage. In such cases as these we are pleased to retain their names on our list, as formerly supported by us, if asked so to do. Miss White resigned her connection with us last autumn, in order to take up independent work in Egypt.

The list of our missionaries is as follows:—Miss Amy Carmichael, Tinnevelly, India; Miss Ruth Brook, Ho-nan, China; Miss Fugill, Hamada, Japan; Mr. and Mrs. Cyril Green and Miss Eva Carmichael, Nkanga, Pondoland, South Africa; Miss Barry, Dublin, Ireland; Dr. G. Whitfield Guinness, Ho-nan, China; Dr. A. C. Hall, Old Cairo, Egypt; Miss Townsend, Shef-Amr, Palestine (Hon.); Miss Luce, Azamgarh, India (Hon.); Mrs. Ford, Ho-nan, China; Miss Jacob, India; Miss Barthorp, India.

At the annual meeting last year an appeal was made for such support as would enable the Council to respond to the invitations to send missioners which had reached them from various parts of the world. The support given at last year's Convention was most encouraging, and we have not hesitated to enter the open door before us. Last August Rev. F. B. Meyer and Captain and Mrs. Tottenham attended the Convention at Blankenburg in Germany. The work there is steadily growing and increasing. This little seed bids fair to become a great tree. In September and October Revs. C. Inwood, J. Sloan, and F. S. Webster visited Canada, attending nine conventions in six weeks. This visit has, it is hoped, set the work in Canada on a firm footing. The brethren there are quite capable of carrying on the work henceforth alone. Rev. Charles Inwood remained in Canada for some time longer and conducted a series of conventions, which were attended with marked blessing. He visited the United States on his way home, and in conjunction with Dr. Pierson held conventions at Brooklyn and Boston.

After securing some much-needed rest at home, Mr. Inwood this spring visited Scandinavia and Germany and held conventions, at all of which God graciously vouchsafed rich blessing. Rev. F. Paynter, together with Dr. Elder Cumming and Rev. J. J. Luce, made visits to a number of towns on or near the Mediterranean, from Nice to Damascus, for the purpose of holding conventions. The Council was very glad to be able to assist in this effort by providing for pulpit supply for the two latter brethren. Dr. C. F. Harford Battersby, before leaving for West Africa last year, was appointed honorary missioner in connection with the Council. He held conventions at Onitsha and Lokoja and a short mission at Brass, which were means of real blessing to both Europeans and natives. Grants have been made to Rev. J. Gelson Gregson and also to Mrs. Constantine in aid of their work in India, and a grant of books and pamphlets was voted to Rev. E. B. Russell for distribution in India. The Council rejoices to know that the visits of Revs. F. B. Meyer and G. H. C. Macgregor to America, and the visits of Revs. E. B. Russell and S. Selwyn to India, although not officially connected with the Council, were in furtherance of the very same cause of Scriptural holiness which we ourselves have at heart.

The report also intimated that on August 24 Rev. C. Inwood will, D.V., sail for China, to join Rev. C. Hudson Taylor in a series of conventions in that land during next winter. At the request of Mr. Hudson Taylor, Rev. Louis Byrde had made a preliminary visitation of eleven chief centres on or near the sea coast. In regard to Rev. F. B. Meyer's forthcoming visit to India and Ceylon, it was reported that, though not going as the representative of the Council, he had its cordial sympathy and prayers, and it is hoped that work done will prepare the way for a deputation to be sent out by the Council in the near future.

The Chairman having read a letter received from his dear child, Miss Amy Wilson Carmichael, asking for earnest prayer on behalf of work among the villages of India, brief addresses were delivered by MISSIONARIES AND MISSIONERS.

Miss May Grimes, who for the past three years has been working in Pondoland with Mr. and Mrs. Cyril Green, remarked that she heard God's call to the foreign field at the Convention six years ago. She had never had a shadow of doubt as to the reality of that call. Miss Grimes told the deeply interesting story of the first convert of the work at Nkanga, whose confession of Christ was interpreted as madness by her neighbours. This woman at once gave up the various abominations of heathenism, also renounced her beer and pipe. The devotion of Mr. and Mrs. Green, and the earnest purpose and endeavours of Miss Eva Carmichael, were cordially acknowledged by Miss Grimes.

Rev. J. Harford Battersby read an extract from a letter received from a lady whose name was not given, and mentioned remarkable blessing in the form of an awakening in Mrs. Ford's station in Ho-nan, China. Dr. Hall, of Old Cairo, whose letter was read by Mr. Head, reported a distrust of their faith on the part of Mohammedans, and considerable interest among the natives of the district. Mr. Head added that workers in Egypt were, simultaneously with the Convention, holding special meetings for waiting upon God at Aboukir Bay. Dr. Whitfield Guinness wrote encouragingly of China, saying that he greatly appreciated the prayers of the friends at Keswick. Dr. C. F. Harford Battersby, after a visit to the Niger country, wrote that there was no part of the world where a missioner from Keswick would be more welcome.

Rev. F. S. Webster spoke on the mission deputation to Canada. Accompanied by a Presbyterian and a Methodist, he had a good time:

NOBODY COULD SAY

which was the Methodist, which the Presbyterian, and which the Church of England clergyman, except that on board ship it was thought that he himself was the Methodist (a remark that provoked laughter throughout the Tent). Conventions were held in nine places, and in some cases the results were very remarkable. In one town there was at first a doubt as to the precise object of the deputation; but having satisfied the objectors that they did not want to raise a lot of money, the use of a church for one day was accorded them, it being thought that they could not do much harm in that short time! Before the visit, however, the town in which the misunderstanding prevailed was visited by a minister who had received blessing at another convention of the series, with the result that on arrival the deputation was received with great joy by a large body of expectant people. Mr. Webster spoke of the warm interest of Dr. Baldwin, Bishop of Huron, who combines a full appreciation of holiness teaching with the hope of the Lord's return. This latter point was pleasantly illustrated by the saying of a member of his family, who in consequence of an umbrella being forgotten one day said, "Father forgets everything except mother and the coming of the Lord."

Rev. Charles Inwood followed with a narrative of work, first in Canada and then on the continent of Europe. Again and again, though the addresses had been to Christians, God had owned the Word in the conversion of souls. Speaking of Sweden, he praised God for the work done there. The people were hungry for the truth—several days in the week, with Good Friday and Easter Monday thrown in, the meetings had to be held. Again in Germany God owned the message, and in spite of all the difficulties of speaking by interpretation the results were as wonderful as anything he had witnessed even when speaking in his own land and by the use of his own tongue. In Denmark some Lutheran pastors are filled with the Holy Ghost, and doing a work that is full of promise. In a word, the speaker said he was convinced that we are on the eve of a in Northern Europe, such as has not been known since the days when Lord Radstock and Dr. Baedeker were so mightily used of God.

Rev. F. B. Meyer followed with some account of his work in America. He specially mentioned the meetings for pastors and the hunger of the people for teaching regarding the life of faith. Looking forward to his visit to India, Mr. Meyer asked for the prayers of friends of the Gospel. He also spoke of the Blankenburg Conference, and the toils and testimony of Fräulein von Weling, and requested prayer on her behalf.

Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor described his visit to the Northfield Convention with Rev. G. Campbell Morgan. At first there was much opposition to the things said, the objectors suggesting that the visiting ministers were "skinning them alive," which Mr. Moody said was just the thing required! At length the work was greatly blessed, and Mr. Campbell Morgan and himself were so mixed up in the minds of the people that it never mattered who spoke; attention was given to the message without regard to the person who delivered it. In conclusion Mr. Macgregor asked for prayer that God would bless him and Mr. Campbell Morgan at their forthcoming visit to Northfield.

General Hatt-Noble intimated that from many quarters appeals had come for workers, and if the programme before the Council is to be carried out, a considerable sum of money will be required. After the hymn, "All hail the power of Jesu's name," Rev. C. A. Fox engaged in prayer, and thus brought to a close a meeting full of interest.

Missionary Meeting.

Some visitors having been compelled to leave for home, Saturday morning saw a slightly thinner muster for the general missionary meeting. The great exodus takes place after this interesting gathering, to which many stay at considerable personal inconvenience. The time of waiting for the beginning of the meeting was spent in the joyous exercise of song.

At length the Chairman called the assembly to a season of waiting upon God, and after the melody, "All people that on earth do dwell," prayer was offered by Dr. Elder Cumming. In terms which could not but command the hearty "Amen" of God's children, the aged minister lamented the lack of prayer and the selfish lack of liberality in the churches generally, and in those present in particular, in regard to the cause of the evangelisation of the dark places of the earth, and the promotion of Gospel effort among all who are still far from God. Specialising Israel and their need of light, and referring in detail to many lands and climes, Dr. Cumming presented all races and tribes to God in earnest petition; and prayed that, in view of the world's great need, every Christian present might be made conscious of the opportunity lying within his reach, and ready for an act of entire consecration to God's service.

then took the meeting in hand, and read Psalm lxvii. After a verse of "Jesus shall reign where'er the sun," addresses were delivered by several missionaries.

On the principle of "the Jew first," Rev. John Wilkinson led off with some remarks on the Israelitish people—what Scripture says about them, and what is being done to enlighten them regarding Christ. The peculiar privileges of Israel and God's purposes in that nation were the main points in a forcible address. On the circulation of the Scriptures among the Jews, Mr. Wilkinson remarked that a million New Testaments and portions have been circulated among the people during recent years; and he added that he hoped in a short time to put half a million copies of the Scriptures in jargon in the hands of the dispersed nation.

Pandita Ramabai followed on behalf of the women of India, especially the poor widows. She appealed for a thousand Holy Ghost missionaries for her land, in which there are two million Christians, Roman Catholics and Protestants combined, about half of them women. She besought prayer that God would raise up among the women of India a hundred thousand women preachers, and she did not see why that should not be within the next year. Her motto was "the women first," for if the women are brought to Christ the sons and husbands would soon follow. In India there are a hundred and forty million women, who, like animals, are regarded as the live property of their husbands and relatives.

Dr. Monro spoke of medical mission work in the district of Nuddea, Bengal. During the year the Gospel had been preached to 150,000 souls, and a few had been baptized. He was sorry to report that the

that they drop at their post. One man is trying to do the work of twenty, while souls are passing into darkness. He pressed the point that there may be men and women in the heathen and Mohammedan world "appointed" for some of the Christians whom he was addressing; but if the message was not taken to such, how sad was the neglect and responsibility. The speaker observed that his sister was recently told by a Mohammedan woman, "If the religion of Christ were true, we should have heard of it long ago." Rather, the remark should have been, "If the religion of Christians were true, India would have heard of Christ long ago." In conclusion, Dr. Monro pointed out that those who would enjoy the blessing of God must first obey his Word, and take the Gospel to the heathen. Praying for missionaries is easy; but it should be accompanied by a willingness to go.

Rev. W. McLean, of Agra, North-West Provinces, gave illustrations of the power of God following the preaching of the Gospel in India. Some years ago a young man visited him, saying that he had been on the borders of atheism. After instruction, he was received into the Church of Christ, but greatly to the grief of his father. Later on the father invited him home, as he said "just for one evening"; and then had him taken under escort to a village a long distance away. All this was in the hope that the young man would renounce Christianity. At length the convert's liberty was legally secured; and then it appeared that not only had he stood firm in the faith, but that he had been preaching the Gospel to the friends among whom he had been forcibly placed. Afterwards he brought his wife for instruction, and in due course she also was baptized. The Gospel of Christ is shown in India as elsewhere to be the power of God to Hindu and Mohammedan, to Sikh and professing Christians. In some cases the people have shown a as was illustrated in the instance of a woman who, on being urged to learn to read, said to Mrs. McLean, "Oh mem sahib, tell me about Jes Christ, and I will learn to read afterwards!"

Rev. F. B. Meyer placed before the Lord the earnest desire of the meeting for a revival of missionary zeal. To that end he asked God to fulfil his purpose in measure in all his people. For those who must stay at home he solicited grace that the ministry of intercession might be theirs as never before, so that a wave of missionary devotion and enthusiasm might roll round the entire planet.

After singing two verses of "Saviour, thy dying love," a brief address was delivered by Dr. Pierson, based on 1 Thess. ii. 4: "We are allowed of God to be put in trust of the Gospel"; Rom. i. 14: "I am debtor both to the Greeks and the barbarians, both to the wise and to the unwise"; and 1 Cor. iv. 1, 2: "Let a man so account of us as of the ministers of Christ and stewards of the mysteries of God." Here are three words—trustees, debtors, stewards. A trustee is one who holds something in trust; a debtor is one who owes a debt; a steward is one who is acting in behalf of a higher personage. In this matter the debt is one we are utterly unable to pay. The Gospel, therefore, is put in our trust, that we may pay the debt. We are stewards of Him who has given the Gospel in trust to us wherewith to pay the debt we owe to a dying world. If we withhold the Gospel from the world we are committing a double robbery; we are not only bankrupt, but false to our trust, and

UNFAITHFUL IN OUR STEWARDSHIP.

Dr. Pierson also spoke of the great need of the world, of the adequacy of the Divine provision, and the lamentable neglect of Christians in the matter of the consecration of their means to the object of carrying the Gospel forth into the heathen world.

Rev. F. Joseland, of Amoy, spoke of China, an empire representing a quarter of the world's population. It has been waiting for the Gospel for two thousand years. In the first century of our era a rumour reached China that a great teacher had appeared in the East, and the Emperor sent an embassy of wise men to search the matter out. Reaching India, these men were stopped, and came into contact with the followers of Buddha, with the result that Buddhism was introduced into China. If only these men had passed through Persia into Palestine, they might have taken the Gospel into China before it was brought into Britain. However, the land has been dark and closed until quite recently, but now the entire country is practically open, and the light is entering. Mr. Joseland urged his hearers to have a part in entering the open doors, and keeping them open. In conclusion, he told with joy of the work of native pastors and preachers in southern China.

Miss Balmer, of Swatow, related a good story of progress in another part of China. A man and his wife, living in the hill country, came to a knowledge of God, and prayed for missionaries, and when the mission was founded it was in answer to their prayers, although their desire was not known in the mission circle. The lady declared that she had found great joy in service in the heathen world.

Mr. A. Orr-Ewing, of Kiang-ze, asked for prayer for China in the present circumstances of political influence on the part of European Powers. He also asked for prayers for the Emperor, who, since becoming possessed, as was reported about three years ago, of a copy of the Scriptures, is showing an interest in Western knowledge. Mr. Orr-Ewing said that he had in the course of his work examined 800 candidates for baptism, 500 of whom were duly received into church fellowship. He spoke of the liberality of some of the Chinese Christians; and, appealing for more missionaries for the needy land, related that when, some years ago, a Canadian father gave his daughter for the mission field, it was with the words, "Nothing too precious for Jesus."

He commended that spirit of surrender to the parents present.

At this stage, on the call of the CHAIRMAN, a large number of the company, including males and females, and not all of them young, stood up in token of their readiness to go whithersoever the Lord might appoint them. It was estimated that about 230 rose, thirty of them being men. These were commended to the Lord in earnest prayer by Rev. W. E. BURROUGHS, and regarding parents still standing in the way of their children's desires the petition was, "Make them ready in the day of thy power." The Chairman followed with prayer that all who might go forth might first be filled with the Holy Spirit.

Rev. J. LOFTHOUSE, of Churchill, Canadian North-West, who for sixteen years has been labouring among the Esquimaux, told of remarkable progress in Gospel work. Many of the people are Christians; others are thirsting for the truth. He spoke of the hardships of the work, not to gain sympathy or praise, but to intimate that even in such conditions he found joy and satisfaction to the full.

Miss BIRD, from Persia, pleaded for the Mohammedan world. Two hundred and sixty millions in number, they know nothing of joy. Said one, after reading the Gospel by John, "Your religion is all happiness; ours is all weeping." A woman once said to her, "How can you be happy when far away from home and friends?" The answer was, "My best Friend is always with me." Filled with curiosity, the anxious woman searched through the room, behind curtains, and at back of every article of furniture, and replied, "You are a liar!" Then the missionary explained that, though unseen, the Lord was ever by her side. The Mohammedans, taken as a whole, have never been evangelised; they are and in many a zenana it is being shown that they will listen to the Gospel. The statement that work among Mohammedans is hopeless, Miss Bird declared to be untrue.

Dr. HARRY GUINNESS spoke for South America and the Congo. As for the "neglected continent," it is unquestionable that God is opening the wide lands of the continent to the Gospel. The story of the settlement of Mr. Jarrett in Peru, familiar to readers of THE CHRISTIAN, was told in a vivacious manner, greatly to the interest and delight of the audience.

Mr. W. SUMMERS, speaking for North Africa, related experiences in Morocco and Egypt. As to the latter country, it is in the throes of momentous movements, and a spirit of inquiry is arising among the Mohammedans. A man holding a leading position in religious circles in Alexandria not long ago said to Mr. Summers: "We must come to you to learn righteousness."

Mr. T. E. ALVAREZ, of the hinterland of Sierra Leone, representative of the Student Volunteer Movement, spoke of the sorrows that have come upon work in his field. Though he had not been out five years, and was not yet twenty-eight years of age, he was the senior man in that oldest mission of the C.M.S.! There are eight languages employed in the region, and only in two of them is any part of the Holy Scriptures translated; in others there is no book, and to them no messenger has gone forth. The missionaries of Mohammed are pouring into the country, and in some of them it is more than the natives can do to keep Islam out. He made an impassioned appeal to young men to go out with the Gospel message.

After a few closing words, Rev. CHARLES INWOOD led in prayer, assisting the large and solemnised assembly to place before the Father of mercies thoughts and desires that must have been uppermost in the minds of most. Workers, and those wishful to go out, who sought the filling of the Holy Spirit, stood while prayer was offered for them, and the duties which they might be called upon to undertake. Fathers and mothers then joined the company, to show that their children would be willingly given up for God's service; and then again, in a like act of consecration, those rose who were resolved as never before to give of their substance in aid of the holy cause. Rev. C. A. Fox concluded the meeting with prayer and benediction.

A Licensing Decision.—The action of the Sheerness Urban District Council in refusing to grant a licence for the Theatre Royal, Sheerness, except under the condition that no intoxicating liquors should be sold on the premises, has been upheld by the Court of Appeal.

"Breaking of Bread."

DEAR SIR,—A fellow believer lately informed me that:—

(A.) The morning of every Lord's Day was the Scriptural time for observing the Lord's Supper!

(B.) That only those agreeing in every detail of belief could Scripturally partake, as it was "a time of fellowship."

(C.) That were I residing in a town where only a certain sect met for worship the believers' meeting there would be Scripturally justified in refusing to permit me to break bread with them unless I accepted all their doctrines, even though it prevented my proclaiming my Lord's death at all.

(D.) That should I accept their tenets, and, having broken bread with them, subsequently break bread with another body of believers, they would be justified in excluding me in future, as I should have proved that I did not realise my privilege in breaking bread with them, bringing their communion on to a common level with that of other believers.

This led me to "search and see," with the following results:—Acts xx. 7 is the only passage in the New Testament which seems to support the teaching that we should "break bread" every Lord's Day—i.e., the first day of each week. Other passages refer to meeting on "the first day of the week," but not specially for the breaking of bread—see John xx. 19, 26, 1 Cor. xvi. 2, Mark xvi. 9, and Rev. i. 10. Verses 42 and 46 of Acts ii. speak of constant, perhaps daily, breaking of bread at home, but the reference may only be to a united partaking of meals, cp. Acts xx. 11.

The following passages go to show that the Lord's Supper followed, or was the continuation of, a meal:—Matt. xxvi. 26, Mark xiv. 22, Luke xxii. 20, 1 Cor. xi. 25, cp. Jude 12, and 2 Pet. ii. 13. Incidentally, these passages entirely overthrow the doctrine of a fasting preparation, the outcome of Transubstantiation theories. History teaches us that in the early Church the Love Feast was immediately followed by the Breaking of Bread, but the two things were separated because of abuse, the first indications of which are seen in 1 Cor. xi.

The passages given below point to the breaking of bread in the EVENING, not the morning; the term "supper" implies this also (Matt. xxvi. 20, Mark xiv. 17, Luke xxii. 7, cp. with 14, Jno. xiii. 30, Acts xx. 7 and 11, 1 Cor. xi. 23). Undoubtedly the original Passover was eaten in the evening. "The Lord's Supper" is referred to as a Memorial in Luke xxii. 19 and 1 Cor. xi. 24, 25, 26, never directly as a Fellowship meeting. Believers are not to come to the "Lord's Table" "unworthily": (a) With regard to idolatry, meat sacrificed to idols or devils, wine poured forth in libation to devils (1 Cor. x. 15-22). (b) With regard to excessive eating and drinking, gluttony, selfishness, and impatience (1 Cor. xi. 17-34). Although it is clearly stated that a believer partaking unworthily partakes to his own condemnation and punishment (1 Cor. xi. 30), I cannot find any statement to the effect that it would do injury to other believers who were unaware of his unworthiness, nor any passage demanding our searching each others' hearts, though we are exhorted to examine our own (1 Cor. xi. 28). I cannot find a shadow of support for the theory that every one of the individuals partaking at the Lord's Table must believe exactly alike on all points.

I find "Do this in remembrance of Me" to be the root idea of the ordinance, and this conveys to my mind that all souls who love the Lord Jesus in "sincerity and truth," and honestly desire to "show the Lord's death" on their behalf "till He come," are entitled to "break bread." "A time of fellowship" is an unscriptural term, and any body of Christians who, professing to have "the truth," yet exclude other truly converted believers from their Breaking of Bread, only on the ground that they do not see eye to eye on every minor detail, are wiser than the Scriptures. "Redemption Ground" surely is sufficient basis for Christian fellowship in "proclaiming the Lord's death till He come."

I shall be glad if any of your readers can direct me to any other portion of the New Testament practically bearing on this subject; and in helping me they will be helping many whom I have met who are troubled about this subject.—Yours faithfully,

A STUDENT.

The Increase of Vivisection.

THE 1897 vivisection returns admit the total of experiments on animals to have been 8822, an increase of 1322 on the year 1896, and the experiments without anæsthetics to have risen from 5217 in 1886 to 6799 in 1897. Ten years ago the total of experiments was 1069, those without anæsthetics 498. The inspector states that seven licensees "inadvertently" overstepped their powers. This is what the offenders told him, because he says "the facts were reported in good faith by the licensees themselves." In short, the vivisectors were their own inspectors, and the inspector would not have known of their breaches of the law if the delinquents had not confessed them. The inspector appears to have condoned these serious offences, and the Home Secretary took no notice of them. Moreover, the inspector states that he has included the unlicensed experimenters among the licensed—one more proof how untrustworthy the inspection is.

Speaking of London hospitals alone, there are at University College twenty vivisectors at work, while at King's College, St. Bartholomew's, Guy's, St. Mary's, London Hospital Medical College, St. Thomas's, Charing Cross, smaller numbers appear on the returns. (A full list of vivisectors on the staff of all the hospitals can be obtained from the National Anti-Vivisection Society, 20, Victoria-street, Westminster, S.W.)

A powerful writer on this subject says: "The law is made by the House of Commons, and the House of Commons is made by the people. We British citizens are therefore, in our political capacity, the accomplices of the vivisector. We have set up the laboratory by State aid. We have tied the victim down. We have established vivisection by law. We are the doers of this thing, and we must undo it. It must be prohibited, as it was licensed, by Act of Parliament."

I appeal to your readers to help us at once, by hearing the facts and circulating them (both by literature and by means of the Press), and by your votes at parliamentary and other elections.

It is becoming a question among English Christians whether they ought to give, year after year, through Hospital Sunday Fund, to hospitals where vivisection is carried on, and where experiments on human patients consequently are by no means unknown.

P.S.—I will gladly and gratefully receive and acknowledge any contribution to the "National Anti-Vivisection Hospital" Fund, of which Lord Coleridge and Lord Hatherton are among the trustees.

Theatrical Employees.—About 150 theatrical women and girls accepted the invitation of Mr. William Forbes to tea in the Hampstead Presbyterian Lecture Hall. Some pleasant hours were spent on the Heath before and after tea. Brief addresses were given by Rev. J. R. Gillies and Mr. Forbes. This Christian work has been carried on for upwards of twenty years.

Jewish Evangelical Mission.—There are thousands of Jews in our country who are in great spiritual destitution, not to speak of other unhappy conditions of life. The work carried on in Newcastle and in Glasgow by Rev. Aaron Matthews in consultation and co-operation with influential committees in both cities does something to meet this need, and in each place assistance is rendered by a staff of missionaries and workers. From twenty to thirty persons have been found at the meeting-place in Glasgow night after night. Visits are paid to Jewish men and women, and Mr. Matthews knows how to conciliate and attract them, being well acquainted with their spirit, nature, and prejudices. The Newcastle-on-Tyne address is 8, Swinburne-place.

Somers Town Blind Aid Society.—Once a week (Thursdays, 7 p.m.) a concert, lecture, reading, or praise and prayer meeting is held in the hall, Bedford Chapel, Charrington-street, N.W., at which the afflicted members of this society and their guides attend. The beneficent effect of such bright, happy entertainments (where the "one thing needful" is never forgotten) is too evident to need words; and all friends interested in such work are heartily welcomed. Summer excursions, visitation by ladies of the homes of the blind, small pensions or weekly grants, the provision of free medical advice and medicine, the sending of ailing blind persons for short periods to seaside or country—these are some features of a work which aims to strengthen and supplement all efforts at self-help. The hon. sec. is Mrs. Starey, 53, Hilldrop-road, Camden-road, N.

Home Missions.

The British Chautauqua.

A FASCINATING programme has been prepared for the fourth annual Summer School of the British Chautauqua, to be held in Edinburgh, August 13 to 26. The date was originally fixed for one week earlier, but the committee has been compelled to postpone the commencement until August 13. Excursions and rambles have been arranged to some of the most interesting places in the neighbourhood. Dr. Lorimer, of Boston, will lecture on the "Social Mission of Christianity" and on the "Redemption of Childhood"; Dr. J. Agar Beet on "The Sunday School Teacher in Relation to Modern Thought"; Rev. C. Anderson Scott, B.A., on "The Exile and its Prophets"; and Rev. W. D. McLaren, M.A., on "The Bible's Witness to the Christ." Dr. Marcus Dods will lecture, and sermons will be preached by Rev. J. Monro Gibson, D.D., and Rev. Charles H. Kelly. Other well-known friends will take part in the proceedings, among whom we may mention Mrs. Benham, of the Sunday School Union; Rev. Charles Brown, of Ferme-park, Hornsey, N.; Rev. W. J. Avery, of the Baptist Union; Rev. Joseph Jackson, of St. Albans; Mr. James Bailey, of Southlands College; and Professor T. Williams, B.A., of Aberystwyth.

The charge, including the cost of return fare from London and comfortable boarding accommodation at Edinburgh, with all meals, excursions by coach and rail, and free admission to all meetings, lectures, and classes, will be—Four days, £2 16s.; one week, £4; ten days, £4 17s.; two weeks, £6 15s.

Full particulars can be obtained from Mr. A. P. Grubb, assistant secretary (pro tem.), The British Chautauqua, 125, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Hop Pickers in Hampshire.

WE are making arrangements to meet the thousands of wanderers who come into our midst for the hop-picking. Last season five tents were erected. The attention and interest was never greater, and it was remarked by many of the inhabitants that the travellers never went away quieter. Many expressions of gratitude were heard among them; one said, "Had it not been for this 'ere tent we should have been at the public every night." Another, on being asked if he was going to the tent meeting, said, "Yes, I like it too well to stay away." Several gave evidence of having become decided Christians.

If the work is to go on, we trust fresh helpers will be raised up. Many of these poor people may truly say, "No man careth for my soul." Books and tracts will be gratefully received.

Aurelia Chinn.

Lenten House, Alton, Hants.

The Tabernacle, Upper Parkstone.

The ninth anniversary of Pastor R. S. Morrison has just taken place. Two years after his settlement a large brick building with schoolroom and vestries replaced the small iron hall in which the services were held. Aggressive work has been undertaken on every hand, with the result that a flourishing Sunday-school, with Bible classes, a Band of Hope, Tract Society, Open-air Mission Band, conducting three and four meetings a week, Missionary Sewing Society, Slate Club, and Christian Endeavour (junior and senior branches) have all sprung into existence. Before entering the new building a church was formed, consisting of twenty-eight members, and 133 have been added since, making a total of 161, an average of twenty-three each year, which was the exact number in 1897. One hundred and six have been baptized, an annual average of fifteen, which was also the number of last year. The sum raised for all purposes amounted to nearly £3,000. A special offer has been made to October 31, 1898, by Mr. J. J. Norton, J.P. (Bournemouth), who has most generously promised to add one half to all moneys obtained over and above our ordinary income during the twelve months ending October 31, 1898.

Kent Fruit Pickers.

MAY I call attention to efforts which are being made to evangelise the fruit-pickers in the neighbourhood of Sidcup, Kent? These people come chiefly from the poorest classes of the East End and South of London, but a large number are gipsies. The fruit-picking lasts for nearly two months, and during this time attempts are made by a small band of workers, led by the energetic missionary Mr. S. Melling, to put distinctly and plainly before the people the message of salvation. Services are held at each camp on Sundays, with lantern addresses during the week. I shall be glad of the kind loan of lantern slides, chiefly illustrating Gospel narratives. Expenses of carriage will be gladly paid. Tracts for distribution are also much wanted. W. L. Shand.

A Holiday for Poor Boys.

Sir,—I have lately been arranging holidays for the boys in the St. Christopher's Boys' Club, connected with the West London Social Guild. The club is in one of the worst and most poverty-stricken districts of West London, a district which I know very intimately, as I have for some time not only conducted the club, but lived in a small tenement amongst my boys. It did not take me very long to discover that there are a great number of small boys who will never be sent away through the existing agencies, for as the head-master of one of the Board Schools said, "There are many children who never even listen when the holiday people come to explain things to them, because a holiday for which anything has to be paid is as far out of their reach as a diamond sale is out of mine."

The apathy and poverty of the majority of the parents makes a holiday for the little ones impossible. We have no right to deprive these children of any brightness and good because their parents are drunken and dissolute.

We have found that the result of taking such children into the country is that as they grow older the vision they have had acts as a great incentive to save when they are old enough to earn it, so as to go again. I have a great number of such children whom I want to take, not to send; they are not suitable for that. I have secured a suitable house at the seaside, and I need about £15 to give them the happiest time they have ever had in their lives. Will some of your readers help these little ones? I shall be very glad to show anyone interested the inner lives of these children if they will call on me, by appointment, at the address given below.—Yours truly, Warwick Guy Pearse.

The Restless Sea.

"There is sorrow on the sea; it cannot be quiet."
Jer. xlix. 23.

There may be peace on land,
The sea is never still;
What power can it command
Or bind its restless will?
Poor man is impotent to curb
Its waves majestic and superb.

With mighty sweep they heave
The universe around,
And seas and oceans cleave,
Ere on the rocks they bound;
No human power, no creature skill,
Can hush their tumult with "Be still!"

But mighty as they are,
One voice has mightier been,
Their fierce, tumultuous war
To still in peace serene,
Whose voice is this? Lo, Jesus, see,
Stilling the waves of Galilee!

Then roll, ye billows, roll!
The world of waters through;
He can your power control,
Who mightier is than you;
Beyond his will ye cannot go,
Beyond his word ye dare not flow.

The Gospel Among the Jews.

But go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel.—Matt. x. 6.

THE British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel Among the Jews, established in 1842, has literally obeyed the Master's command for the last fifty-six years, as testified by the labour of its twenty-two missionaries—all Christian Israelites—and many voluntary helpers, engaged to carry the message of salvation to Abraham's seed.

It works among about ten million Jewish souls, of whom five millions have settled for centuries in Russia. Our medical and other missionaries spoke to large numbers of suffering Jews who come to the dispensaries and mission-houses, and over twenty thousand heard the Gospel from their lips during the past twelve months, some of them confessing Christ publicly by baptism as their true Saviour.

Our work among the Jews on the continent of Europe is encouraging. The railway carriage is often converted into a mission hall, where Russian and other Jews throng the missionaries, eager to listen, some for the first time, to the story of redeeming love. Celebrated Rabbins have been visited in their homes, and to some the message has been delivered only a few months before they were called hence. Rabbins in Italy give ear to the Gospel message, receiving us in their homes, and freely conversing about Isaiah's prophecies, especially chapter liii.

In Belgium an uproar was created by some messengers of Satan sent to buffet us, and some Jews snatched two Hebrew New Testaments from us, tearing them into shreds before our eyes, and throwing the backs at us. One good Jewish brother, we found to our joy, was not only seeking, but agonising to find the Saviour, and entreating us to help him to believe. He knew the whole plan of salvation, but he could not believe. "I am a diamond merchant," he said, "and I would give all if I could only feel that I am saved through faith in Jesus, but I cannot believe. Oh! do help me to believe." This brother stayed with us till midnight, literally agonising to find the Saviour. "People say that 40,000,000 of francs are spent in Jewish missions. What is all this money compared with my agony? I would offer my all to get peace."

The exhibition in Brussels gave our society a good opportunity for visiting the Jews represented there from many countries, to preach to them the Gospel of the grace of God in their own language.

At Basle, during the great Zionist Congress, precious opportunities presented themselves for interesting conversation with some of the most intelligent Jews, who came as delegates from remote parts of the world.

At Adrianople, in Turkey, our society is doing a great work. Every Saturday, being the Jewish Sabbath, the Gospel is proclaimed in the Armenian Protestant Church (kindly lent for the occasion) to crowds of Jews, including the Hebrew students and professors from the Rabbinical Seminary, who attend the Christian services regularly, and the souls of Jews have been saved there.

Our beloved missionary pointed out to us sixteen earnest inquirers, and two Jews truly converted, who, though engaged in mercantile pursuits, delight to assist our brother in his mission. His wife, an Aberdeen lady, medically qualified, has many poor Jewish patients coming to her, to whom she witnesses for Christ while dispensing. One young Jew, Leo Levi, brought to Christ at Adrianople, is now in England, preparing for future mission work to his brethren.

The London Mission Hall stands in the midst of a large Jewish population, amounting to double the number which inhabit Jerusalem. In addition, this society has stations at Leeds, Manchester, Liverpool, Birmingham and Dublin, in full operation, as well as itinerary work in towns with smaller Jewish populations. Souls have been led to Christ, who in their turn have become themselves winners of souls. Our Jewish Homes for aged Israelites give shelter to believing Jews and Jewesses in their old and declining years.

This hopeful and spiritual Mission is now passing through a heavy trial of faith, and we are earnestly praying to the Lord to send us £2500 now needed to carry on this blessed work. Come to our help. A. Sternberg.

"A Little Maid, and she said."

2 Kings ii. 3.

BY MRS. HARVEY-JELLIE.

WE do not know much about this little maid; she had been taken from her home, and was only a slave, waiting on Naaman's wife long, long ago; but she isn't forgotten yet, nor is she likely to be, for wherever this Bible shall go it will tell how, in those days of old, she became a blessing in her master's home because she told him of one who could cure his leprosy.

Only a little maid, and only remembered by what she has done. I think I hear some young people say, "Just think of having a place in the Bible, to be read about and talked about for doing such an important thing!"

She never thought you would hear of it, she only said kind words in a kind way. She forgot herself in thinking of others, and did not want notice.

And is this all—"A little maid, and she said"?

Ask Naaman's wife, and she would own, "I never knew any one I owed so much to. A slave! a little maid! She was a good angel in my home."

Ask Naaman. "That little maid, God bless her! She spoke so kindly and earnestly, and for my good. I lost my leprosy through her. If there is one name I shall never forget, 'tis hers."

What are you saying or doing? You are not a slave; you have greater privileges and larger opportunities than she had. Are you trying to make others happy? Are you making the home you live in better for your presence?

That little maid knew of the prophet, and spoke of him.

Do you not know of One greater than he, who gave his life to take away the leprosy of sin? Can you not speak of Him?

But do you say, "She only said a few words, and only spoke of one person"?

Still it was the right person she spoke of, and Naaman found it so. There was no exaggeration in what she said; she was a girl to be trusted.

If your life and words tell of that one great Saviour, Jesus; there will be no exaggeration, however much you say in his praise; and those who go to Him will find He can make them clean and pure, and take all the leprosy of sin away.

A boy who had been found listening to the missionary, and learned to love Christ, was ordered by his cruel master to be beaten. What could he do for the One he loved?

As the lashes were laid on the trembling back the master laughed, and said, "What can your Jesus do for you now?"

"He helps me to bear it, massa," said the boy.

"And what can He do now?" he asked, after more severe lashes.

"He helps me pray for you, massa," were the only words the fainting boy could utter; but they fell deep into the hard heart, and led that man to go to the same Saviour. He found it true, and rejoiced with the boy, and spoke of him as his best friend.

"Only a poor slave boy, and he said." Ah, but when 'tis of Jesus we tell, it may lead to a soul's salvation.

Your life and what you say is of vast importance, my young friend. Refresh your memory by reading the story of that little maid again; then ask, "What use am I? What am I saying that is of good to anyone?"

A nursemaid who had heard of Jesus from her Sunday teacher, when sent out for hours with the children, would tell them the wonderful stories about Him, and when the mother was dying little Rosa begged her to let the maid say one verse to her, and she said:

> Come to the Saviour, make no delay;
> Here in his Word He has shown us the way;
> Here in our midst He's standing to-day,
> Tenderly saying, "Come."

And she little knew how God would bless those words; but one day she found out they were the means of healing and blessing to the dying woman's soul; and although she was only a nursemaid she was remembered by what she had done.

> Jesus bids us shine, first of all, for Him;
> Well He sees and knows it if our light is dim;
> He looks down from heaven, to see us shine,
> You in your small corner, and I in mine.

Sandy Bits.

THERE are sandy bits on the rock-girt shore,
Where the little children play,
And the tiny boats with their treasure store
Row out on the summer's day.
I know there are frowning crags that seem Like the granite walls of old:
I love them well, as the sunlight gleam
Peeps into their caverns bold.
But I am glad for the children's sake
There are sandy bits where the old rocks break.

There are sandy bits in the good old Book,
Though its rocks are steep and high,
And sometimes frown as we upward look
To the tops that kiss the sky.
But there are bits where the sands are low,
And the little children find
The gentle waves that in pleasure flow
With a softness calm and kind.
Thank God for rocks that some fain condemn,
But the sandy bits, praise the Lord for them.

Sometimes it seems that the God we serve
Is a God of wrath and power;
I fear to land as my eyes observe
Where his rocks of terror tower.
Ah yes, but there are the sandy bits,
Where my tiny boat may near:
The spot where the "gentle Jesus" sits
As He used to do when here.
Come, timid heart, there are rocks, 'tis true;
But the sandy bits are the place for you.

B. C. ARRES-MATHER.—Unfortunately, there was a mistake in your answers to No. 131. Anyhow, I could hardly have entered your name in the list, as the general "get-up" of the paper was not sufficiently up to the mark. Take more pains next week. I think you would find lined paper better.

MARY NATHAN.—I think Henderson could give you a little help in arranging your paper. A larger piece of paper would look better. Last week you did not give your surname.

LUCIE HOURDAIN.—Please always give your age.

MARJORIE COLLINS.—Am very glad you persuaded your friend to join. Next time I hope she will get her answers right, so that her name will be in the list.

DORA E. WALLACE.—I have never had to pay anything on your paper. I think I should inquire at the office as to rates.

DOROTHY M. BELLERBY.—Sometimes it is better to quote your answers from the Bible, but there are times when it would involve too much writing.

EVELYN M. SHAW.—I was very glad to hear from you again, but sorry you have all been ill.

HENRIETTE BARDOT.—Your names did not appear in the list because your answers to No. 128 were incorrect.

WINNIE PALMER.—You will see acknowledgment in donation list under "Currants."

ALFRED and FRANK GIBBS.—I like the cabinet photograph very much. Please thank your mother for her kind letter to me.

CICELY SHERBROOKE.—It is against the rules to re-examine your paper. You have unfortunately made a mistake again this week.

Obituary.

REV. YUNG KING YEN.

Many friends will remember the visit of this Chinese pastor to England some three years ago, when he spoke earnestly and effectively on the opium question as it affects China. We regret to learn of his death, which took place on June 20; he had been failing for some months. The friend in Shanghai who sends the intelligence of Mr. Yen's death says it seems impossible to fill the gap caused by his removal.

REV. EDWARD WHITE.

The veterans are quitting the earthly scene one by one. After lingering on the brink of the grave for some days past, Rev. Edward White died somewhat suddenly on Tuesday morning. Mr. White was born at Nine Elms, London, in 1819, and educated at Mill Hill and Glasgow. He passed through no theological college, but received private tuition in preparation for ministerial work from Rev. C. Nice Davis, of Norwood, and Dr. Redford, of Worcester. The consecutive study of Scripture, to which he was stimulated in those early years, was a delight all through life, and did much to preserve him from regarding as a hobby certain special views with which his name has for many years been associated. After a brief pastorate at Cardiff, he laboured for ten years at Hereford. In 1852 he came to London, and for thirty-six years ministered in Hawley-road Chapel, Kentish Town. His influence in the St. Pancras division of North London was nobly sustained, thoughtful men of the working classes being reached in large numbers by instructive lectures that were uniformly made vehicles of Gospel teaching and appeal.

During 1886 Mr. White was Chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, and for many years he was one of the Merchant Lecturers in the City of London. Latterly he occupied the post of Professor of Homiletics at New College. In addition to his work on "Life in Christ," he published volumes on "The Mysteries of Growth" and "Some of the Minor Moralities of Life," also lectures on the historicity of Genesis iii., Modern Spiritualism, and Certainty in Religion. Mr. White studied prophecy with care and caution, and was continually expecting the Lord's Return. To the last, also, he was very earnest in advocating a thorough and complete study of the Sacred Scriptures as an indispensable qualification for the ministerial office.

MR. THOMAS PAUL—"PEARL FISHER."

It is with deep sorrow that we announce the death of an esteemed member of our staff, Mr. Thomas Paul, widely known in Christian journalism as "Pearl Fisher." Born in 1845, near Glasgow, our departed friend was "a son of the manse," his father being Rev. Rupert Paul, a minister of the Free Church of Scotland. When young he lost both parents; but the Lord did not forsake him. Becoming a decided Christian in his early years, he readily took up definite service, especially among the young. Qualifying for a literary career, he came to London in 1874, and, following Mr. Moody's great meetings, described them in Word and Work. He also conducted the Ragged School Union organ In His Name, and for several years past laboured on the staff of The Christian. In the description of religious and philanthropic effort Mr. Paul had a ready and sympathetic pen, and as he went about in the discharge of his duties he ever had a word of cheer for those who were working and witnessing in conditions of difficulty and distress. His more general writings included "Harvest of the City," "Britain's Queen," and a series of illustrated books on natural history. He was a valued worker in connection with the Baptist Church, Bloemfontein-road, Shepherd's Bush; was in frequent request for Bible readings and addresses at Y.M.C.A.'s and elsewhere; and for several years went out as a preacher for the Evangelisation Society. About a year ago Mr. Paul had a serious illness, from which he made a partial recovery. Quite recently, however, a relapse laid him low. Ten days ago he went to Herne Bay, hoping to be again set up in health; but on Saturday morning he fell asleep, from anæmia and heart failure. He was a good man, and right well did he serve his generation in the will of God. We sorrow not for him, but for ourselves in being bereft of his hearty fellowship, and for the wife and family, some of them still young, in whose circle a great and sad void has been made.

R. C. M.

"CHRISTOPHER CRAYON" (MR. J. E. RITCHIE).

Our contemporary The Christian World has also lost a well-known member of its literary staff in the death of Mr. J. Ewing Ritchie, who wrote under the nom de plume of "Christopher Crayon." For a long series of years his contributions, which were of the lighter and gracefully descriptive order, appeared regularly in the columns of our contemporary. A chatty sketch from his pen on North Cornwall appeared in last week's issue. Mr. Ritchie died at Clacton-on-Sea on Sunday, from asthma, at the age of seventy-eight. He published several books of travel, also biographies, and his death removes a familiar figure from Fleet-street journalism.

THE HONOURABLE LADY BEAUCHAMP.

We learn with sorrow of the decease of this well-known and highly appreciated and beloved Christian lady. Her daughter, Mrs. Drury-Lowe, writes to us as follows:—

As there are many readers of The Christian in all parts of the world that knew my dear mother, Lady Beauchamp, we think it would interest them and be to the glory of God that they should know something of the closing days of her earthly pilgrimage. She was taken ill soon after returning to Havre towards the end of May, and became suddenly worse with heart failure. Her family were telegraphed for, and all were able to be with her except her sons in India and China. Colonel Drury-Lowe and I reached Havre from Florida just two weeks before she passed away. She was conscious almost to the end, and those closing weeks were only a greater manifestation of what God had been to her, and Christ in her, for years past.

She gently entered into the fuller rest early on Sunday morning, July 3, in the little room on the top floor of the Sailors' Rest. You know the surroundings, and how they would be the last one would choose for one in her circumstances to be taken ill in. Drunken fights going on all around, and the terrible din and noise of the docks; but she seemed oblivious to all that, in her intense realisation of God. Two French doctors (one a specialist from Paris), both devout Roman Catholics, were astounded at her marvellous calmness, the Paris doctor declaring, "cela était un prêche pour moi!" Indeed, we all saw in her "the peace of God that passeth all understanding," also the truth of those words, "Mark the perfect man and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace."

She several times expressed a wish that she might recover, in order that she might have an opportunity to tell of all that God had done for her and been to her in her sickness and distress of body; but when, a few days before she was taken, she realised that she would not recover, but that very soon her "eyes would see the King in his beauty," she longed for that supreme moment, and, judging by the wonderful smiles that flitted across her face, we could not but think that she did see Him, even before being taken from loved ones on earth.

She begged that before her body was removed from Havre, her friends there, amongst rich and poor, French soldiers, English and foreign sailors, and "the dear Bretons," should be invited to a service of praise in the Sailors' Rest, to give thanks to God for his great goodness to her during all her life. He had never failed her, and she wanted all to know this. This wish was carried out exactly twelve hours after she passed away. The following night, when "the earthly house" had been taken on board the Southampton boat, to be carried over to England for interment, from seventy to eighty Bretons came on board, and, standing over the place where the body, covered with a Union Jack, was resting, they sang two hymns of victory! A day or two before she was called home she told us, in speaking of her departure, we were to say that she "had gone to glory, a poor sinner washed in the blood of the Lamb."

The little committee at Havre who worked with her most sympathetically are very anxious to carry on the work for sailors on the same lines as she had always done. Nothing is definitely settled as yet, but in all probability, as the lease of the Sailors' Home expires in September, arrangements will be made to combine the Home with the Rest, concentrating the work under the same roof.

"Elijah's Spirit on Elisha."—2 Kings ii. 6-15.

Golden Text: "How much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him."—Luke xi. 13.

The Obscure Life.

After Horeb's experience Elijah's life was like the "still small voice." It was heard only by the few. But though the record is scant Elijah was working. Teaching young men, showing them by his example how to live for God. Such lives make the world better, though they be not recorded in "drum and trumpet history." The Progress of Britain is more truly portrayed in Green's "History of the English People" than in the records of kings and their battles.

Lesson.—Our duty to do our work faithfully whether recognition of man be given or not.

The Faithful Companion (6).

Though Elijah tried to get Elisha to return, he must have been gratified at the persistent faithfulness of his companion. Good to have a few real friends who will stand by us in all emergencies. We should hold such in very high esteem.

Lesson.—Christ the only one who can go with us through the swelling of Jordan. Make Him your constant companion. "I will never leave thee."

Elisha's Hard Request (9, 10).

"The sons of the prophets"—the young men who attended the college which was founded by Samuel.

"The mantle," the symbol of the prophet's power.

The request was that Elisha should have the elder son's portion (not twice as much power as Elijah had).

It was a hard request—

(1) Because it was a spiritual gift, and therefore difficult to impart to another.

(2) It depended upon the receptive power of the receiver.

(3) It was not in Elijah's power to give his spirit. It was the gift of God.

The Tools to Him who Can Use Them (10).

"If thou see Me." This was the condition of the blessing. This would be a mark of his perseverance and watchfulness. It was proof that he was capable of doing the work of Elijah.

Lesson. God calls men who have the talent to do his work. Then touches their talents with his inspiration. God's call does not always harmonise with that given by his people. God's people should put no barriers in the way of his prophets.

The Triumphant Departure (11).

The departure was in keeping with his former life—bold, fiery, and full of God's presence.

Lesson. The passage from earth robbed of its horrors for those who have done God's will. It becomes a glorious translation. Christmas Evans' last words "Drivé on, coachman."

David, when he had served his generation by the will of God, fell asleep.

Paul said, "I am now ready to be offered, etc."

The Chariot of Israel (12).

Nations then counted their strength by the number of chariots and horses. "Some trust in chariots and horses, but we will trust in the name of the Lord." Elijah took the place of an armed force in protecting Israel.

One good great man who has faith in God is more powerful than all horses and chariots.

Elijah's Legacy (13, 14).

He left Elisha to carry on his work. God always has his representative.

Lesson.—We, too, must place our quota in the bank of time for future generations to draw upon.

God's Man Recognised (15).

The students were waiting on the other side of the river at Jericho. When they saw Elisha approaching, they recognised him as the successor of Elijah. He had his master's spirit. So God's men should be recognised and known by their works and spirit to-day. Like Christ, a good man cannot be hid.

Illustration.—A bunch of roses or lilies would soon make known their presence in a room by their odour. There is a spirit of unselfish joy which carries sunshine everywhere. "A city set on a hill," etc. "Let your light so shine."

The marble bust of Oliver Cromwell, from Lord Ashburton's collection, which has been presented to the nation, was placed temporarily in the outer waiting room of the House of Commons.

An extreme Ritualist innovation is a "Children's Eucharist." It is meant to be a children's mass, and is therefore utterly at variance with the order of the administration of the Lord's Supper.

Junior Christian Endeavour societies continue to increase rapidly. There are now nearly fourteen thousand societies in the world. One thousand of these are found in foreign lands.

In connection with the Church of England Temperance Society, a band of lady missionaries, as well as general workers, are about to visit the Kentish hop districts for work amongst the fruit gatherers and hop pickers.

The total membership of the Baptist churches in Ireland is 2646, an increase of 133 for the year. New congregations have been organised at Killyleagh and Derry, and Rev. R. W. Hay has completed a tour of the churches on behalf of the Baptist Missionary Society.

A bazaar in aid of the London depôt for Greek industries has been held at the house of Mr. Reuben Sassoon, in Belgrave Square.—The profits of the Press Bazaar in aid of the London Hospital amounted to £12,000. A cheque for that amount has been handed to the secretary.

The Board of Guardians at Newton Abbot are exercised over the legality of allowing services to be held by lady visitors in the sick wards of the workhouse. Mrs. Elliott recently held one of these, and the master has objected, on the ground that it is illegal. The matter is to be discussed in three months' time. The experiment was tried at Greenwich Workhouse, after some opposition, a short time ago, with considerable success.

THE Y.W.C.A.

Guernsey.—Special meetings were held in connection with the Young Women's Christian Association here, from July 13th to 18th, by Lady Hope, which God has greatly blessed. The Bible-readings were times of real feasting on the riches of God's Word. The evening evangelistic meetings in the Market Hall were thrilling with touching stories from real life, which Lady Hope told with such deep pathos that very many hearts were moved, and we felt the power and working of the Holy Spirit. Sunday especially was a day of great blessing, the hall being crowded in the evening, many testifying by the uplifted hand their real desire to know Christ. Mr. Denny arrived on Friday, and greatly enriched the succeeding meetings by his genial presence and wise counsel. At the close of the meetings a tea was given to cabmen, followed by earnest addresses from Lady Hope and Mr. Denny. About fifty responded to the invitation. We believe that the outcome of these meetings is that many have been led to offer themselves for the King's service, specially among the young. Our hearts are very full of praise for all God has wrought during these days, and we believe that already our little institute is stretching out its hand to all parts of our island. To God be all the praise!

Foreign.

The plague in India has now spread from Coimbatore, in Madras, to Mysore.

The report of the Indian Famine Commission, under Sir James Lyall, is expected to be concluded in September.

The Chronicle of the London Missionary Society speaks in praise of the "self-supporting, self-propagating and missionary spirit" of the Polynesian churches.

It is stated that Mr. Goschen's supplementary naval programme has evoked malicious comments in Germany. In France it is regarded by the Press as a menace or a challenge.

Russia proposes the repatriation of 30,000 Armenian exiles in the Caucasus, which means they are to be sent back to their villages at present in occupation of the Kurds.

The Porte has refused to entertain the demands of Great Britain and France for compensation for damages sustained by their subjects during the Armenian massacres in 1896.

The China Inland Mission at Changshu Kiangsi has been attacked. Three missionaries, who were the only foreigners for many miles, were compelled to flee to Yamen. The mission premises were completely distroyed by the mob.

Aguinaldo, the leader of the Philippine rebels, has formed a Cabinet, with himself as President. He resents the restraint imposed upon him by the Americans.—The Carlists in Spain are preparing for a rising in the Basque provinces, Navarre and Catalonia. Spanish troops have recently been moved to Vergara and Tolosa, important strategic positions in the north. The Carlists are being closely watched by Government agents all over Spain. The Madrid Carlist Club is about to be closed.

Crete.—Considerable excitement prevailed over the elections for the Cretan Assembly.—The Deputies have already generally expressed a favourable opinion on the proposals made by the Powers, but insist on the Ottoman troops and civil authorities leaving the island.

Russia.—The Tsar has had his attention called to the uselessness of Russian monks and monasteries. There are 742 monasteries and 43,000 monks in his empire. He has resolved that the monks shall devote a portion of their time to the care of the sick and to the education of the poor.

The Far East.—M. Pavloff has tendered an apology for his threat to leave Pekin. He, however, persists in his demands for the exclusion of British and German instructors from the navy. The French Consul maintains an energetic attitude in the negotiations pending between the French and Chinese at Shanghai, and holds the Chinese authorities responsible for all the troubles.

The War.—American transports are reported to be nearing Porto Rico. General Miles has sailed for this destination, and other expeditions are on their way. It is estimated that the strength of the expedition, when the troops yet to leave the United States arrive, will be over 40,000 men. At Cuba there is still some friction between Generals Shafter and Garcia. When the Spanish soldiers have left Santiago the Cubans will have liberty to enter the city. In a petition to President McKinley, Cuban non-combatants say: "We hope that the present state of affairs at Santiago, where the Spaniards are still administrators of our interests, property, and fate, will be brief, that the city will soon be handed over to the Cubans, that our army may enter, and that the flag of Cuba may wave triumphantly beside the American flag, as the Cuban soldiers fought side by side with the Americans against the common enemy."

The Licensing Commission.—The evidence before the Royal Commission on Licensing has closed. The members have adjourned for the holidays, and at the sitting in November Lord Peel will present a draft report. In that case it should be possible for the recommendations of the Commission to be in the hands of the Government in plenty of time to give effect to them in the next Queen's Speech. The Commission is a strong one, and, whatever report may be forthcoming will be entitled to respect. Temperance workers should, however, be on their guard against expecting too much from it. But we may be sure that any alteration in the law suggested by such a body will be an improvement, and should be accepted with thankfulness, even though it may leave much to be desired from the ideal point of view.—Record.

Scottish Navvy Mission Society.—We are sending a missionary to begin work amongst the hundreds of men employed upon the Kirkcaldy Waterworks, to visit the men in the huts, conduct services in the dinner hour and on Sundays, also a Sunday-school and Bible-class. On week-nights the mission-rooms will be open for reading, and the navvies make good use of such opportunites. Night after night such rooms are crowded. The missionary is present, and finds in the crowd many an anxious soul seeking the Lord. From various public works come calls for a missionary, but our hands are tied owing to lack of funds. Will readers remember this important work in prayers, money, and gifts of suitable books and tracts for the reading-rooms? I shall be glad to receive and acknowledge any gifts that may be sent to the head office, 49, Castle-street, Edinburgh, addressed to Francis Taylor, Superintendent.

Letters to the Editor.

OLD TESTAMENT TYPES.

Dear Sir,—Does not "J. S." use 1 Cor. x. 11, in a manner somewhat apt to disappoint, if not mislead Bible readers, although a common one with speakers and writers on types? He builds on it an interesting series of typical meanings, but they are not the lesson referred to by the Apostolic writer. "All these things happened—for types." Christ as Paschal Lamb and Christ as Smitten Rock are not mentioned here by St. Paul. "They are written for our admonition," apparently for a special one, for verse 12 follows at once with "Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth" (shall we say in Egypt, the Wilderness, or Canaan?) "take heed lest he fall." Surely the first and plainest meaning of the passage is that all our Christian privileges are of no avail without, after a personal application, a constant watchfulness, and this watchfulness is supported by the promise in verse 13 of our God's faithfulness to keep. This appears to be the true aspect under which the "Children of God," here called "My dearly beloved," are referred to.—Yours,

S. Andrews.

"SAINT."

Dear Sir,—Now that there is so much stir abroad concerning Ritualism in the Church of England, may I call attention to, and enter a protest against, a practice so largely adopted by even Evangelical Christians of prefixing "Saint," "St." or "S.," to the names of the Apostles and of many "early fathers"?

The Scripture doctrine is that all believers are saints (1 Cor. i. 2; Eph. i. 1, etc.), but, alas! Rome long ago perverted this truth by her "Calendar of Saints," and even amongst Protestants to-day so many do not know the glorious privilege of the lowliest disciple of the Lord Jesus that he is a "saint that is in Christ Jesus."

The American Committee of Revisers of the New Testament wished to strike out S. (i.e. Saint) from the titles of the Gospels and from the headings of the pages (see list of their readings paragraph 1 at the end of the Revised New Testament). Why the English committee did not agree to this I cannot understand, as the word Saint is not in the approved Greek texts in those places.—Yours sincerely, July 15, 1898. Cecil Smith.

A Mission Farewell.—In connection with the North London Gospel Samaritan Mission, a meeting was held last week in the lecture room of the Upper Holloway Baptist Chapel. The hon. pastor of the mission, Mr. Henry Bird, presided, when some farewell addresses were given in connection with the departure of Mr. and Mrs. Andrews for South Africa. Mr. and Mrs. Andrews have been engaged in mission work for years in this neighbourhood.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

A general mission is to be held in Ashton-under-Lyne and adjacent parishes in October next.

Rt. Rev. William Walsh, D.D., Archdeacon of Canterbury, has been appointed Bishop Suffragan of Dover.

A new mission church for the parish of St. George's, Douglas, has been opened by the Bishop of Sodor and Man.

Rev. Arthur Robins, rector of Holy Trinity, Windsor, has kept his silver jubilee in the royal borough. During these twenty-five years he has preached just 5500 sermons.

In his charge to the Sussex clergy, at Pulborough, the Bishop of Chichester urged that special Sabbath services should be conducted for cyclists, and provision made for the safe storage of their machines.

The Church Pastoral Aid Society is appealing for funds to extend its work. It has now on its books 100 approved parishes, with an aggregate population of 1,000,000, waiting for the help which it is unable to give.

Hon. and Rev. J. G. Adderley is actively pursuing his crusade against the Secularist movement on Sunday afternoons at the Marble Arch, where he draws very large crowds, and animated discussions follow his addresses.

The Bishop of Stepney has instituted "Father" Dolling to the vicarage of St. Saviour's, Poplar. Mr. Kensit protested against the institution without an undertaking from Father Dolling as to his practices and doctrines.

Two English parishes and one Welsh parish have each a clergyman who is called "the children's curate." The title comes from the fact that the stipends are provided through the Home Mission Society by the children of England and Wales.

The social work of the Church Army has developed so rapidly that of late there is hardly a large town in England which is not covered by it. The Labour Homes have earned not only the gratitude of the men rescued, but also the warm commendation of the Poor Law authorities.

Lady Herschell laid the foundation-stone of a new mission-hall in Essex-road, Islington, for the St. John's district. The freehold of the site is a free gift, and the cost of erection and equipment of the hall, about £3700, has been subscribed with the exception of about £500.

The latest news from Uganda is that the country is quieting down, and all the Europeans are well. It may be hoped, therefore, that the missionary operations will soon be resumed on the former scale. Bishop Tucker has reached Mengo after "a wonderful journey—the quickest ever made with a laden caravan."

Referring to the Police-court Mission, and particularly appealing for increased support to the South London branch, the Bishop of Rochester testifies that the magistrates and police not only recognise it, but daily avail themselves in dealing with perplexing cases of the help which a missionary, and often he alone, is in a position to give.

The Record is giving a series of articles exposing the extreme ritual in certain churches. It says that at a recent "service" in St. Matthias's, Earl's Court, the "Choral Eucharist" was marked by the absence of communicants, the celebrant and those with him in the sanctuary bowed down before the elements, and the host and chalice were elevated for adoration by the people.

A Sunday meeting of about 700 people was held outside St. Thomas's Church, Warwick-street, Liverpool, and a resolution was adopted calling upon the Bishop of Liverpool to exercise his episcopal authority to put a stop to the Popery and treachery going on in that church. Anti-ritualists talk of visitations of protest to a number of Liverpool churches where the ritual is considered advanced.

During the time the Rev. John Parry has been vicar of St. Leonard's, Bow, great progress has been made in the work of the parish. Five years ago they had one lady worker, three mission women, and four clergymen; now there are eight lady workers or nurses, three mission women, and six clergymen devoting their whole time to trying to influence the tremendous population comprised in this the largest parish in the whole of London. There are over 2000 names on the books of the Sunday-schools and Bible-classes.

Congregational.

The City Temple Thursday noon-day service has been discontinued until after Dr. Parker's vacation.

This year is the 150th anniversary of Carr's-lane Chapel, Birmingham, and arrangements are in progress for its celebration on Nov. 15 to 17.

Old students of Lancashire Independent College will meet at Halifax during the session of the Congregational Union. Rev. J. Ferguson, Moss Side, Manchester, is the hon. secretary.

Rev. James Hadfield, for thirteen years missionary at Lifu, Loyalty Islands, is in England on leave of absence for three years, during which the Old Testament will be printed in the Lifu language from his translation.

Dr. Guinness Rogers has written to the members of Grafton-square Church, Clapham, inviting them to select with as little delay as possible an efficient co-pastor who, when the necessity arises, may succeed to the sole pastorate.

Rev. Arnold Thomas, of Highbury Chapel, Bristol, has written to Dr. Fairbairn declining the appointment to the Chair of Pastoral Theology at Mansfield College, Oxford, which would necessitate his retirement from his present pastorate.

Rev. J. Belsher has resigned the pastorate of Kingswood-hill Church, Bristol, to take charge of Georgetown Church, British Guiana, where there are 410 members and five or six mission stations, with occasional visits to the stations of the American Indians.

A site for the erection of a new church has been secured at Higher Green, near Lewisham, and building operations have commenced. Some hundreds of houses are to be erected in the district, in addition to those already built, and the need of a Congregational church is keenly felt.

The united congregations of St. George's Presbyterian Church and Grange Congregational Church, Sunderland, will amalgamate for worship during the months of July and August, Rev. J. Smyth Wood preaching during the first month, and Rev. Wm. Spensley the second month.

Rev. Charles Culledge Keen, of Feltham and Sunbury churches, has celebrated his seventeenth anniversary as minister of the two pastorates. He has recently had the joy of receiving into church fellowship twenty-one new members at Feltham, principally from the Sunday-school and Bible-classes.

At the ninety-ninth anniversary services of Southwark Sunday-school Society, held in Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, an address was delivered by Rev. F. B. Meyer, president. The church was completely filled with scholars from the society's thirteen schools, which give unsectarian religious instruction to 5,000 young people each Sunday. The society's centenary will be celebrated next year.

Rev. W. J. Woods has circulated among the churches an appeal prepared by Dr. Brown, of Bedford, in connection with the Church Extension Fund of the Congregational Union. A contribution of £5 each from one thousand of the larger churches, independently of contributions for local purposes, would increase the sum already subscribed to £10,000, and by judicious expenditure would be likely to produce equally satisfactory results.

Baptist.

Dr. Culross, now in his seventy-fourth year, is very much of an invalid, and is not able to do any active work.

At Old Baptist Chapel, Gamlingay, the Sunday-school anniversary extended over three days and attracted visitors from many adjacent villages.

Rev. R. Wright Hay has been appointed secretary of the Young People's Missionary Association in the place of Rev. W. J. Price, who is resuming mission work in India next October.

Rev. J. P. Clark, of Gunnersbury Church, London, W., has decided to resign the pastorate of this church, after six years' work. His children's health necessitates a more bracing air.

Rev. Dr. Rouse is now on his way to this country, his labours upon the revision of the Bengali Bible having told upon his health. He first went out to India thirty-seven years ago, and hopes that after his home visit he may again be able to return.

The series of sermons preached at Abbey-road Chapel, N.W., by Pastor H. E. Stone, on the Book of Common Prayer have aroused much interest. The last of the series (until September) will be next Sunday, when Article VIII., "The Three Creeds," will be the subject.

The Baptist Total Abstinence Association reports the formation of 270 Bands of Hope during the past year, making the present number 1556. There are 1627 abstaining Baptist ministers, an increase of 128; out of 211 students in the British theological colleges 209 are abstainers, while 47 missionaries in the foreign field are thus returned.

Queen-street Church, Port Elizabeth, South Africa, has held its annual meetings. Since the arrival of Rev. A. Hall from England in March the congregations have increased, especially at the week-night service, when a Bible exposition is given, and nearly thirty persons have joined the church. There are branches at Walmer and Zwaltkops.

Methodist.

The Great Queen-street Centenary scheme has resulted in the raising of £3500.

A new Primitive Methodist chapel has been commenced at Wilmington, Cheshire, to seat 250 persons, and cost £500.

In 1903 the Wesleyans, Bible Christians, Primitive Methodists, and Methodist Free Churches will probably become one body.

In connection with a scheme of extension for Walthamstow, memorial-stones of a new church and school have been laid in Blac horse-road.

It is proposed to erect a new chapel at Barwick, as a memorial to the noted local preacher, Mr. William Dawson, to supersede one built in 1804.

Leeds Primitive Methodist Council has arranged for a united mission throughout the city in November; a series of noon-day sermons will be preached each day in the Philosophical Hall by Rev. A. T. Guttery, one of the missioners.

Dr. Rigg, who has edited the London Quarterly Review for twenty years, has retired. Dr. Watkinson, the late President of the Conference, becomes editor, and will bring out the Review in a new form at the beginning of the new year.

The Bible Christian Conference, which assembles in Diamond-street Church, Cardiff, this week, is composed of eight-six ministers, seventy-three laymen, seven probationers, nine committee-men, twelve candidates, and eight visitors.

There are a large number of applications for admission into the Wesley Deaconess Order. Seven new probationers are to enter into residence at Mewburn House or Calvert House early in September. A second deaconess sails for Ceylon early in the new Connexional year.

Amongst visitors to the United Methodist Annual Assembly was Mr. W. Crowther, of Harby, a local preacher of eighty-nine years of age, who still takes appointments each quarter, and has walked over 70,000 miles to fulfil preaching engagements, and although not so vigorous in body as at one time, yet his interest in pulpit work is undiminished.

Manchester and Salford Mission has now in full membership 2631, as against 2187 last year, an increase of 454. There are five Sunday-schools, with 2500 scholars. In the congregations under the charge of the Mission there are no fewer than 14,000 persons, and careful observation shows that for the most part these come from the non-churchgoing population.

At the United Methodist Free Church Assembly last week the chapel report showed that during the year nine chapels and five schools had been built, and ten buildings enlarged or improved at a cost of £41,962, towards which £23,890 had been raised. Chapel debts had been reduced by £31,340. The income of the relief fund was £474, an increase of £25 on the year.

Methodists at York have acquired the use of the large Festival Concert Hall in that city for a series of evangelistic services extending from July 10 to Aug. 28, and have obtained the services of many well-known ministers to conduct them. The services, which are held three times every Sunday, are made as bright and attractive as possible by means of an augmented choir from the Wesley Centenary Chapel and an effective orchestral band.

At the Liverpool Methodist Council Mr. Perks's "million scheme" was discussed. It was expected that £30,000 of this would be devoted to Liverpool. Should this be so, it was proposed to set apart £15,000 of it as an extension fund; £7,500 would be devoted to the Liverpool Mission premises in various parts of the city, and the other £7,500 would form the nucleus of a fund to erect a great central hall. Next year Rev. Charles Garrett attains his jubilee as a Methodist preacher and his twenty-fifth year of superintendency of the Liverpool Mission, and if the proposals of the Council are carried, the new hall is to be called the Garrett Memorial Hall.

Presbyterian.

Since Rev. George Hanson's settlement at Marylebone five months ago over seventy new members have been added to the roll.

London Presbytery North has now fifty-two congregations within its bounds. This is an increase of five within the past seven months.

Professor Moody Stuart, of Glasgow University, is lying seriously ill at Crieff, and the gravest apprehensions are entertained with regard to his condition.

Rev. Dr. Watson (Ian Maclaren) hopes to fulfil in the spring lecturing engagements on the Pacific coast, which he was not able to take on his visit last year to the United States.

Principal Dykes has returned to England in greatly improved health. His colleague, Professor Gibb, is invalided in Germany as the result of a carriage accident at Heidelberg.

Presbyterian churches are now to be found at about forty of the leading watering-places (mostly seaside) in England. This is a great advance in the state of things thirty years ago.

At a conference presided over by Sir George Bruce, a resolution was passed urging the Presbyteries to raise as quickly as possible their fair share of the £20,000 required to complete the new Church Building Scheme.

Lord Stratheona laid on Saturday the foundation-stone of the new Presbyterian Church of St. Peter, Beechcroft-road, Upper Tooting, in the presence of a large gathering. Lord Stratheona spoke in high terms of the energy displayed by Rev. P. E. M'Leod in Tooting and the district, and wished the movement every success.

Fallen Asleep.

SLIPPER, who was baptized in 1848, and until lately took an active part in all works of usefulness in connection with the Stalham Baptist Church.—Mr. JAMES CROW, at Shepherd's-bush, in his ninety-first year, for long well known as a Methodist local preacher.—Rev. A. B. ATTENBOROUGH, formerly of Lendal Chapel, York, and of St. John's Congregational Church, Sevenoaks.—Rev. T. H. SPARHAM, late of Great Ellingham, Norfolk, in his seventy-fifth year.—Mr. TOM SUTCLIFFE, secretary of the Todmorden Baptist Church.—Mrs. F. M. The Army Manœuvres.—Arrangements have been made by the War Office to provide at each camping ground in the new manœuvre district in Wiltshire a marquee, with bar of not less than sixty feet run, to be used as a temperance tent for each division. The Army Temperance Association, which has been so long working to obtain fair play for the water drinker, hope that these tents will be the means of helping all their members to keep faithful, and also inducing many others to contend with hard work and broiling sun under the most favourable conditions.

Seamen's Rest, Port Said. — Having returned (after a few months' very necessary change, which has resulted in a complete restoration to health), I am much encouraged in the hope of being able to continue more fully the distribution of good reading amongst passing soldiers and sailors at this port. No other place affords such an opportunity as this, and we earnestly desire the co-operation of your readers in this work. We have placed thousands of bundles of nicely assorted readings in the transports, men-o'-war, and merchant vessels with certain good results. Any sound, bright reading is very much appreciated. Boxes or parcels sent care of Soldiers' and Sailors' Institute, Southampton, or care of Geo. H. Story, Estate Agent, 15, Pilgrim-street, Newcastle-on-Tyne, will be forwarded. Friends will do well to respond promptly, as our stock is low at present, and the transport season will soon be here. ALEX. LOCKE.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

AN esteemed friend and occasional correspondent from an important provincial town recently called at our office, and asked for direction as to the headquarters of missionary and other organisations in London. He declared his object to be to pass a short holiday in visiting these and interviewing their officials; and having given him such information as he required, we wished him much pleasure and profit in his round of inspection and inquiry. Our friend's case is typical rather than exceptional, and we call attention to his visit because it may indicate to others a method of studying Christian work, alike in polity and practice—whether as a holiday occupation or otherwise makes no matter. He writes :—

Altogether I had a most enjoyable time, and am sure my visit will leave a lasting impression upon me. I shall be giving accounts of my experiences both to my own church and to a local Regions Beyond Helpers' Union; and I trust these may be stimulated by what I may be able to say. For a good many years I have made a study of both home and foreign missions, and this has naturally led me to think a good deal of their plans of working. I have been impressed with what I venture to call defects, so I made sundry suggestions to the officials. It gave me genuine pleasure to have these suggestions received with thankfulness, and a promise of their consideration and probable adoption.

I am sure if more Christians would spend a few days as I did it would tend to much good and the glory of God. I desire also to thank you for the kind directions you gave me. I think you should make a point of this being intimated in THE CHRISTIAN that any information on missions would be given at the office of the paper. You might also advise persons going to London to visit the headquarters of the missions. This would, I am sure, be of benefit both to the visited and to the visitor. I shall take increased interest—if this were possible—in reading about these missions because I know the men and the places.

One other suggestion may be allowed. There are weary pastors in country towns and villages who would greatly enjoy a visit to London as a holiday, and be set up for future work by making a round of its institutions and seeing something of its religious life. Christian residents in London suburbs should find great pleasure in facilitating a trip to the metropolis on the part of hard-worked provincial ministers, and then in so directing their movements that during a brief stay they might gather not only physical refreshment but also mental and moral ideas to help them in their service for Christ.

Nonconformists travelling in Switzerland will regard with satisfaction the arrangements made by the Free Churches for English services during the holiday season. At Chamonix, Zermatt, Grindelwald, and St. Beatenberg services are being conducted by ministers from London and the provinces, and are thoroughly appreciated. The number of places where such services can be enjoyed will no doubt be largely increased another year.

A great figure in the struggles and movements of 19th century has passed away in the death of Prince Bismarck. The man "of blood and iron" was the author of United Germany, the humiliator of France, and the foremost diplomatist of his time. From a Christian point of view it is difficult to square his career with the tenets of the New Testament, but he was used by the only Ruler of princes for a mighty work. His religion, such as it was, seems to have been sincere; its fatal fault was that it was hedge-bound within the limits of an intense but narrow patriotism. He openly professed that everything was right which furthered the interests of his Fatherland, and he acted boldly on this assumption. He reaped what he had sown, and lived to see his life-purpose achieved, but himself set aside with the same ruthlessness which he ever showed towards instruments he had used and no longer wanted.

There is one result of the diplomatic methods of Bismarck which has left a deep mark on that of European nations. His conception of patriotism was essentially selfish, and he followed it out to its logical consequences with a cynical directness that left no trace of magnanimity towards the weak or the conquered. This feature has since become almost a first principle in international affairs on the Continent, and has made the leading nations hopelessly suspicious of one another's aims. This evil seed has borne fruit in the immense armaments of modern times. It was at the root of the callous indifference of the European concert towards the sufferings of the Armenians. It is to be feared that it will be long before the councils of the nations will be purged of this evil leaven.

The Russophobe temper which seems to be the predominant factor in our foreign policy just now has issued in another proposal to extend our Navy, for which the nation will have to pay to the tune of eight millions. The project has been meekly assented to by Parliament, and seems to suit the present sentiment of the public. It is lamentable that this tendency to international jealousy and suspicion is increasing at such an alarming rate. Owing to it the whole world is being taxed at a rate higher than ever before, and huge armies and navies are being kept up at an incalculable cost, with no present prospect of being moderated. It is assumed that preparedness for war is the best guarantee of peace. Is it not more likely that the "sight of means to do ill deeds" tends to make "ill deeds done"? The greatest peril of war arises from the bloated and ever-increasing armaments of the world.

The latest news from Uganda shows that the flames of insurrection and strife are burning more fiercely than ever. Mission work is almost at a standstill, and missionaries go about in daily peril of their lives. Twelve out of twenty-eight British officers have been killed, over a thousand lives have been lost, and according to correspondents on the spot the trouble is not ended. There are allegations of mismanagement at the coast and of bad leadership up country. No good can come from hiding the facts from the country; and if "private advices" can reach home, Government despatches ought to come at the same time and be published. We trust that there may soon be better news, and that in any case there may be no hindrance to the work of the Gospel. Meantime the greatest sympathy is called for towards the brave men and women who are still left in this troubled country, and are trying to keep the torch of the Gospel alight in a benighted region. The Christians there need all the prayers of the Christians at home, that they may be upheld in their hour of trial.

It was recently remarked by Mr. John Thomson, author of "Through China with a Camera," that it is painful to observe how the Chinese people are ignored in the political changes now affecting their country. The rulers of the West speak of markets, of territory, of "the open door," of forts and ports, of districts of influence; but the living men and women, some four hundred millions of them, are treated as a negligible quantity. This selfish, materialistic way of dealing with countries is too common among statesmen in all ages; but a change will come in the case of China, for its people are too numerous, too powerful, too intelligent, to be dealt with as slaves. The West will have to reckon with them as men sooner or later. The presence and diffusion of the Gospel in the land is in itself a guarantee that the human element will in time be considered more precious than commerce; and commerce will not be thereby injured, but improved.

According to a Parliamentary paper just published, the abolition of slavery in Zanzibar is proceeding but slowly. Out of the scores of thousands of slaves in that region only 4278 had been emancipated by April of the present year. On the mainland the legal status of slavery, for reasons satisfactory to the Government, has not even yet been abolished. This half-hearted and piecemeal policy is altogether out of keeping with the times, and will need unceasing vigilance if it is to issue in real emancipation. The reason of the slow progress of the movement is the fact that the initiative is laid on the slave; and when we realise the low condition and dense ignorance of these poor creatures it is no wonder that they are so slow to recognise and exercise their rights. Unless more is done to educate them and champion their rights, it will be a long time before their freedom will be gained.

A French writer says that in a country where the idea of reverence has lost much of its strength, where the name of God is expunged from every official document, Frenchmen come to regard their army as the only means of penetrating the whole national life with ideals of obedience and faith. For law from Heaven substitute the law of court-martial; for the Church the barracks; for the Gospels the soldiers' guide-book. These be thy gods, O France! Renan grieved over the loss of the old ideals, and said that society was living on the fragrance of an empty vase; but now, it would seem, the vase is broken and the fragrance evaporated. Hence the greater need for evangelisation.

The reports of the British Medical Association meetings contain statements of views on the moral aspect of medical questions that are very wise and sound. Dr. Blandford (London) holds that it would be to the benefit of many lunatics if they were held responsible to a certain extent, and instead of hanging a man he would send him, not to Broadmoor to smoke pipes the rest of his life, but to penal servitude, where he would do some useful work. Professor Sir W. Gairdner agreed with the doctrines of Dr. Mercier, and instead of the present verdicts of "guilty," or "not guilty because of insanity," he would prefer that they should have a third verdict, "guilty, but insane."

The legitimate influence of the moral sense in certain cases where it is too often ignored is distinctly recognised. Professor Annandale (Edinburgh), with commendable courage, expressed his sincere regret that in some quarters the true, honest, and high feeling which should be the standard principle of the members of the profession was in the present day partially or wholly ignored. A section of the public —or, rather, a section of what was termed "Society" —had done much to interfere with the proper feeling which should exist in the profession. There were some doctors, he feared, who took advantage of extravagant popularity, and traded on it in a manner not consistent with the high feelings which should influence all professional relationships. If any member of their profession encouraged or took part in "Society's" ignoble life or actions, he was not worthy to belong to the profession, and he certainly did not add to its reputation.

An able writer in the Quarterly Review for August deals trenchantly with the question of Church reform. He deprecates any attempts at so-called reform "which would accentuate more than ever the division between the Established Church and the chief Nonconformist bodies," and says:

We are disposed to believe the day will come when an earnest effort at greater union between the religious forces of the nation, not including, of course, the irreconcilable Romish communion, will be made.

The chief difficulties in the way of such union, he thinks, are created by the clergy themselves by the Romanising tendencies which have so deeply undermined lay confidence by assumptions and arbitrary actions which the wisest of them deplore.

These words are of weighty import, coming, as they evidently do, from one who knows the Church of England from the inside.

Papists have made such strenuous and persistent efforts to "capture" the secular Press for their own purposes, that the work of the Protestant Press Agency deserves the support of all true Protestants. Its purpose, as we have more than once explained, is to watch the newspapers, and where an opportunity occurs to present their readers with information concerning the foul history of the Papacy, to correct misrepresentations, and answer Romish attacks. The experience of the society, which was only started last October, has shown that in many secular papers no anti-Romish matter will be inserted, and that the only way to counteract the work of Rome in the columns of the Press of Protestant England is to keep "pegging away." An appeal is made by the secretary, Mr. A. Le Lievre, of 55, Westbourne-road, Barnsbury, N., for help by posting to him copies of newspapers, etc., containing sermons, lectures, etc., on Romanism and Sacerdotalism.

One of the tests of a Biblical theology is the conception of God which it contains. Nothing can be richer and fuller than the many-sided presentation of the Divine nature unfolded in the Scriptures. Those who have built up systems of doctrine from these materials have for the most part failed to remember that no single aspect of the Divine attributes affords a complete and sufficient basis for religious thought. It will not do to restrict our attention to the Sovereignty, or the Holiness, or the Fatherhood of God. The Bible presents all these aspects fused into a transcendently beautiful and vital unity. Since men's conception of God rules their whole outlook on life, it is important to find a place in our thoughts for all the varied presentations of the Divine. Only as we realise truly what God is can we understand his dealings with us in nature, providence, and grace.

To the Apostles the Resurrection was the vital element of the Gospel of God. "With great power gave the Apostles witness of the Resurrection of the Lord Jesus." "If Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins." Satan has the power of death; God has the power of resurrection. Satan exhausted his power in the death of Christ; "but God raised Him from the dead." God said, "Let there be light," and light was; but "by the exceeding greatness of his power He raised the Christ from the dead." Scripture presents the Resurrection as the greatest manifestation of the almightiness of God.

The Psalmist praises God for the "brooks by the way" out of which his chosen shall drink and be refreshed for the conflict and sorrow of life (Psalm cx. 7). There are some sources of strength that come in the line of direct seeking, and can be gained in no other manner. There are others which come "by the way"; they are gifts "thrown in," ready for appropriation by those who have the eye to see and the heart to understand. It is well to be watchful for these spiritual springs, which flow past every door. Natural beauty, noble thinking, human friendship, sympathy, home affections, the privileges of worship and Christian fellowship—how much refreshment is to be drawn from these earthly blessings for the soul on its pilgrimage to the City of God! The higher gifts of grace come easiest to those who recognise and use these lower gifts well.

"I fust explains de tex'. Den I persents de argyments; and den I puts on de rousements." This was a certain negro preacher's method of preaching. Some preachers do the first admirably, give a small quantity of the second, and leave the third alone. If there is any grave general fault in the preachers of to-day it is that they do not "put on the rousements." Is this because they are not thoroughly under the influence of the things they say? Or is it because they have a feeling that it is not for them to press the truth they have lucidly set forth? Probably the latter is the dominating reason. But it is mistaken. The "rousements," by manifesting the preacher's earnestness, become contagious, and awaken the earnestness of his hearers. Knowledge is the necessary groundwork of religion, but feeling is the life.

The Echo is publishing a series of articles on "Overwrought Women," and has obtained a large body of statistics, drawn in all cases from personal narratives, concerning the condition of waitresses' work in the public-houses and refreshment rooms of London. Had a religious or temperance journal published the following pathetic sentences received from one poor girl, they might have been viewed with doubt, but coming from a secular journal they will probably have weight:—

How do I know but what you may get me out of my situation? So many so-called helpers do us a lot of harm. I often feel ill; still there are hundreds only too ready to step into my place. We have to put up with all sorts of insults at times from so-called gentlemen. I don't think people would wonder why girls go on the streets if they had our life a little time. I shall be married next month, thank God!

In many cases no wages at all are paid; tips are the remuneration, surely an immoral and degrading system. Hours are long, sometimes from 8 a.m. to 10.30 or 10.45 p.m. Meals are often irregular, and taken at odd moments. The conclusion our contemporary draws is:—

We want legislation fixing rigorously the maximum working-day, modifying the system of fines, securing a fixed hour and a fair interval for meals—and, above all, establishing an inspection which shall cover the whole area of the trade.

The Joy of Christ.

John xv. 11.

By Dr. J. CULROSS.

A NOT uncommon interpretation of this passage, at least from the time of Augustine, is this: "I have spoken these things to you in order that my joy in you—the joy which I have hitherto had in you" may remain. Just as the Apostle John writes, "I have no greater joy than that my children walk in truth," so according to this interpretation Jesus says to his disciples, Ye have hitherto given me joy; and I have spoken these things to you now in order that my joy in you may continue. But this interpretation is negatived by the true reading, which is not "that my joy may remain," but simply "may be."

There is a deeply rooted idea in many minds that the Christian life, being one of self-denial, must needs be cheerless and unhappy. Just the contrary, as a matter of fact, is the law of the kingdom of heaven. Both by the redemption we experience and the blessings conferred upon us reason is given why we should rejoice—not merely waiting for joy in the blissful hereafter, but actually possessing it now and here. It is not a fitful blaze of longer or shorter duration, like the illumination of a metropolis on a Coronation day, but a divinely sustained principle, with a perpetually abiding reason for it. It has, indeed, its times of ecstasy—as summer has its golden days, so cool, so calm, so bright, the bridal of the earth and sky; but it is meant to be the very condition of the soul.

The joy which Christian disciples are meant to possess is Christ's joy, the joy of his own blessed soul, "my joy." This differentiates it not only from all that is false, but from all that is lower. Taking even true Christian men, to what an extent they often fall short of it. Such joy as they possess has often very little resemblance to that of Christ. Perhaps the world goes well with them: they live in a pleasant home; they have good health and worldly prosperity; they have agreeable neighbours, attached friends, and public respect; and so life passes pleasantly and agreeably. But as to the joy of Christ, sacred, sweet, satisfying, strengthening, they scarcely know it; and know it only as a memory.

There are three elements or aspects of Christ's joy to which I would refer, in which He wishes us to be sharers with Him. In Him it was found side by side with sorrow, side by side with a deep entering into the sorrows and woes of others.

First, there is what may be called his filial joy—the joy that belongs to Him as Son. To a large extent this must remain a mystery to us, lying outside the region of our knowledge. But we are brought into the presence of it by such an expression as this: "The only begotten Son who is in the bosom of the Father." We know not what is implied in such an utterance; only we feel sure it means at once joy and love. This joy is unspeakable, absolute, infinite. Now it is Christ's will that we should share his joy in virtue of our being made sons of God, heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ. To realise this blissful standing, to have full assurance of the fatherhood of God, to say with undoubting heart, I am God's child, fills the soul with sacred bliss, whatever his worldly circumstances. The man who has been hurt by the archers, hit by the slings and arrows of adversity, the man who stands out in the world's cold, the man who was yesterday reduced from comfort to poverty, the man who is going down into the valley of death-shadow with no prospect of return, being able to look up and say, But God is my Father, has a deep well-spring of joy in his heart that nothing on earth can dry up.

A second element of Christ's joy is the joy of service. He came, as He so often said, to do the will of God. "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent Me." He had joy in doing that will, just because it was infinitely holy and good, and comprehensive of all good. "I delight"—that is the word of joy—"I delight to do thy will, O my God; yea, thy law is within my heart." And when it comes to the last, and nothing remains but Gethsemane and the cross, you hear the breathing of this joy in his words, "I have glorified Thee on the earth; I have finished the work which Thou gavest Me to do."

A third element of Christ's joy is what I may call his Saviour joy. There are various occasions when this comes into view. For example, when He saw the poor and lowly gathering to Him, and receiving the tidings He brought respecting the Father, He rejoiced in spirit, and said, "I thank Thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them to babes." Again, when the publicans and sinners drew near to Him to hear Him, and the Pharisees and Scribes murmured at the sight, He likened Himself to a good shepherd who misses the one lost sheep, and goes after it, and seeks it till he finds it, and then he layeth it on his shoulders rejoicing, and when he cometh home he calleth together his friends and his neighbours, saying, "Rejoice with me, for I have found my sheep which was lost." That joy I call his Saviour joy. It belongs to the joy that was set before Him, for which He endured the cross, despising the shame, and is a foretaste of the joy of that hour when the number of the saved is full, and He shall present them faultless in the presence of his glory with exceeding joy.

The Jewish Black Fast.—Last week the Jews observed a twenty-four hours' fast in commemoration of the destruction of the Temple, and the beginning of the exile of the children of Israel. It is known as the "Black Fast," on account of its mournful character. Only the most devout members of the Jewish faith really fast, although the various synagogues in London were crowded. The service is made up of passages taken solely from the Book of Lamentations and mournful poems. At the great synagogue in Houndsditch the curtains before the ark are removed, but the ark is kept closed during the fast.

National Protestant Congress.—The official programme for the holding of the ninth annual congress at Folkestone, October 17 to 20, is now complete. The following subjects will be under consideration: "The Absolute Veracity of Holy Scripture," "The Encroachments of Priestcraft," "The Jesuits, their Tactics and Influence," "Ritualism and Romanism Compared," "The Conventual System," "Education," and "What, as a Nation, do we Owe to Protestantism?" The Women's Protestant Union (president, Mrs. Arbuthnot) will occupy two sessions of the congress. Communications may be addressed to the London secretary for the congress, the Rev. J. B. Barraclough, M.A., St. Thomas's Vicarage, Westminster-road, Lambeth.

Bored to the Doorpost.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

UNDER the old Hebrew legislation a household slave who had come into his master's house under stress of circumstances might remain there for all his after-life if he professed his desire before the constituted authorities, and was willing for his ear to be bored to the doorpost of the house. It must have been an affecting ceremony when the servant, knowing well what he was doing, professed that he loved his master and did not wish to go out free; and when the stain of blood on the wood-work betokened the steadfastness of his purpose.

It is to this that the Holy Spirit in the inspired writers compares the resolute devotion of our Lord to do the Father's will, his consecration even to death, his setting his face to obey the call of the cross, that with outspread arms awaited Him.

Psa. xl. 6, "Sacrifice and offering Thou hast no delight in. Mine ears hast Thou pierced."

Isa. iv. 5, "The Lord God hath opened (or, pierced) mine ear, and I was not rebellious, neither turned away backward."

It was as though He said to his Father, "I love Thee too well to wish to be free from Thy will; see, it is my delight!" and then yielded Himself to be pierced and nailed to the cross, that in his act He might not only redeem us, but consecrate us to a similar devotion. "I consecrate myself that they themselves also may be consecrated in truth."

(1) There is the potency of example. "He hath left us an example that ye should follow his steps." "He that saith he abideth in Him ought himself also to walk even as He walked." Once when He was praying in a certain place his disciples said, "Lord, teach us to pray." They had come within the powerful attraction of his spirit. Like a swift current it had caught them, and they were eager to emulate Him. It is impossible for the saint to gaze long on the stigmata without becoming branded with the marks of Jesus; impossible to see Him hasting to the cross without being stirred to follow Him; impossible to behold the intensity of his purpose for a world's redemption without becoming imbued with it; impossible to see Him in love with the cross without feeling a similar infatuation; impossible to behold Him plunging into the dark floods of death, that He might emerge in the sunlit ocean, without a desire to be like Him; to drink of his cup, and be baptized with his baptism; to fall into the ground and die, that we may not abide alone; to know the fellowship of his sufferings, and conformity to his death, that He may appoint us a share in the kingdom, as the Father appointed to Him.

(2) There is the appeal of his love. "He that loves me, follow," cried a beloved general, as when his troops were wavering before a terrific onslaught he put himself at their head, and rushed into the thick of the battle. Of course they followed him to a man, and the day was won. Nor was it otherwise when Jesus set his face steadfastly to go to Jerusalem; though they were amazed and afraid because of the strange expression in his face, his disciples followed Him. And can we do otherwise, who have been redeemed with his precious blood, and are bound to Him by a thousand tender ties? Nay, lead on, glorious and beloved Lord, we will follow in thy devotion to the will of the Father, though hell itself roll between bank and brae.

(3) There is our implication in his mediatorial work. "I have been crucified with Christ," the Apostle said. And, again, "Ye died with Christ from the rudiments of the world." Of course, Christ died for us, presenting to the claims of a broken law a perfect satisfaction and oblation. It is also true that we died with Him, were in Him as our Representative, wrought through Him as our Forerunner; the first Fruit-sheaf contained the promise of all its companions.

Consider for a moment a remarkable expression that casts light on this whole subject. In that memorable discussion with the Jews in Solomon's Porch, which practically closed our Lord's public ministry, He said that the Father had sanctified and consecrated Him, and sent Him into the world (John x. 36). In these sublime words He undoubtedly refers to a moment which preceded the Incarnation, when the Godhead designated the Second Person to redeem men. Was it the same moment, think you, as that in which Jesus said, "Sacrifice and offering Thou wouldest not, but a body hast Thou prepared for Me (or, mine ears hast Thou pierced). I delight to do thy will, O my God"? If so, it was, when, in the presence of the assembled hierarchies of heaven, the Father solemnly set apart the Son for his redemption work, consecrating Him to bring in everlasting salvation, to destroy the works of the devil, and to bring together in one the children of God that are scattered abroad!

WHAT AN AUGUST SCENE

In that solemn consecration of the Head all the members were included. The King stood for his kingdom, the Shepherd for his flock. Any who refuse to be consecrated contravene and contradict that momentous decision.

When Christ approached his death, in his acts and words he renewed his vow of consecration, and again implicated those who belong to Him. Bearing us with Him, He went to the cross; involving us by his actions, He yielded Himself up to death. In his holy purpose we were quickened together with Him, and raised up together, and made to sit together in the heavenly places; and by the same emphasis that we declare ourselves to be his we confess that we are amongst those who are bound to a life of consecration.

WE ARE PLEDGED TO IT

by union with our Lord. We cannot draw back from the doorpost to which He was nailed without proving that we are deficient in appreciating the purpose which brought Him to our world, the surrender that withheld not his face from spitting, his soul from the shadow of death.

What, then, is our duty? "Yield yourselves unto God." When Abraham Lincoln dedicated, for the purposes of a graveyard, the field of Gettysburg, where so many brave soldiers had lost their lives, he said:—"We cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow, this ground. The brave men who struggled here have consecrated it far beyond our power to add or detract. It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us, that from these honoured dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; and that we here highly resolve that

THESE DEAD SHALL NOT HAVE DIED IN VAIN."

These noble words, when we have made the needful alterations and adaptations, are most applicable to our present point. Let us dedicate ourselves to the great task before us, and to which Jesus has pledged us. Let us devote ourselves to this great cause for which Jesus died. Let us highly resolve that He shall not have died in vain. Let us offer and present ourselves, our souls and bodies, to be a reasonable, holy, and living sacrifice unto God, that His will might be done through us, as it is done in heaven.

"My Master, lead me to Thy door;
Pierce this now willing ear once more;
Thy bonds are freedom, let me stay
With Thee, to toil, endure, obey.

"Yes; ear and hand, and thought, and will,
Use all in thy dear slavery still!
Self's weary liberties I cast
Beneath Thy feet; there keep them fast."

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, August 7.

"To wait for his Son from Heaven."—1 Thess. i. 10.

OH blessed hope! It is not wonderful that each of the chapters of this Epistle brims over with the glad anticipation of the Master's quick return!

Why is his chariot so long in coming?
Why tarry the wheels of his chariot?

We should never lose this spirit of eager longing and waiting. It hath the promise of the life that now is, as of that which is to come. It lifts above the darkness of the present age, links the present with the great future, comforts us amid bereavement with the hope of speedy reunion, quickens us to watchfulness and consecration by the thought of the shortening of our opportunities, leads us to purify ourselves as He is pure, to gird our loins and trim our lamps.

Notice how closely the Apostle combines the service of the living and true God, herein distinguishing Him from the dumb, dead stones of heathen idolatries, with this waiting for his Son from heaven. It has been alleged that the hope of the Second Advent is a dreamy, mystical sentiment, which disqualifies from the active fulfilment of the duties of life. Nothing could be further from the truth. Those who cherish that anticipation, who awake in the morning saying, "Perhaps it will be to-day"; who go to their sleep whispering to their hearts, "Perchance I shall be changed into his likeness in a moment as I sleep, and wake in my resurrection body"—these are among the most devoted, strenuous, and successful workers of the Church. They are not recognised in the daily or religious Press, but God knows and honours them.

MONDAY, August 8.

"What is our hope, or joy, or crown of glorying? Are not even ye?"—1 Thess. ii. 19 (R.V.).

The tender heart of the Apostle suffered keenly in his enforced absence from these beloved converts. He had cherished them as a nurse her children; he would have gladly imparted to them his own soul; he encouraged them as a father his own children. Not once or twice he had sought to see them again, but had been hindered by malign spiritual forces that were very real to him. Now, however, his heart expanded beneath the thought that at the Lord's coming they and he would be reunited, and that they would be his joy, as now they were his hope. Now they lit his hope to an intenser passion, then they would intensify his joy to a more exquisite fulness.

But there is a further thought. The souls whom he had won for Jesus were to constitute his crown. It was as though they would be woven into a wreath like that given to the ancient athlete, and placed on his brow as he emerged from the terrific conflict of his life—not to be worn there, but cast forthwith at the feet of his Lord. What an incentive was this! Each soul plucked from the enemy was not won for the Master, but for himself only.

I remember Mr. Spurgeon telling of an old Christian woman in his almshouses, who persisted in saying loving thoughts about her beloved pastor to his face, at which he greatly demurred. He feared that she was making more of him than of Christ. But she said sweetly, "It is written in the Song, 'Thou, O Solomon, shalt have a thousand, and those that keep the fruit two hundred,' so, dear pastor, you must have your two hundred." Yes, it will be so; we shall partake with Jesus of the fish that we have caught.

TUESDAY, August 9.

"No man should be moved for these afflictions, for yourselves know that we are appointed thereunto."—1 Thess. iii. 3.

We all love the sunshine, but the Arabs have a proverb that "all sunshine makes the desert"; and it is a matter for common observation that the graces of Christian living are more often apparent in the case of those who have passed through great tribulation. Therefore we are appointed thereto. God desires to get as rich crops as possible from the soil of our natures. There are certain plants of the Christian life, such as meekness, gentleness, kindness, humility, which cannot come to perfection if the sun of prosperity always shines.

We often shrank from the lessons set us at school, and looked out of the windows, longing for the hour of release. But now how glad we are for the tutors and governors, appointed by our parents, who kept us steadily to our tasks. We feel almost kindly to the schoolmaster or mistress that we dreaded. And, similarly, one day we shall be glad for those hard lessons acquired from the hornbook of pain. "We have had fathers of our flesh to chasten us, and we gave them reverence—shall we not much rather be in subjection to the Father of spirits, who chastens for our profit, and live?"

The tears of those who suffer according to the will of God are spiritual lenses and windows of agate. As the weights of the clock or the ballast in the vessel are necessary for their right ordering, so is trouble in the soul-life. The sweetest scents are only obtained by tremendous pressure; the fairest flowers grow amid Alpine snow-solitudes; the rarest gems have suffered longest from the lapidary's wheel.

WEDNESDAY, August 10.

"Sorrow not, even as the rest, which have no hope."—1 Thess. iv. 13 (R.V.).

Nature will have her due. Tears will fall, and hearts seem near to breaking. Nowhere does God chide the tears of natural affection; how could He, since it is written that Jesus wept? But He sets Himself to extract their bitterness. Sorrow you may and must, but not as without hope.

Those who die in Christ are with Him. They are said to sleep, not because they are unconscious, but because their decease was as devoid of terror as an infant's slumbers. Believers have all died once in Christ, and it was necessary to find a word which, whilst significant of death, was not death, in order to describe the moment of our farewell to this world and birth into the next. This word was furnished by Death's twin-sister Sleep. The catacombs are covered with the brief significant sentence, Obdormivit in Christo (He slept in Christ). But just as in sleep the spirit is conscious, of which dreams bear witness, so in the last sleep. Absent from the body, we shall be present with the Lord.

Those who die in Christ will come with Him. They are now waiting around Him till He give the final order for the whole heavenly cortège, which has been collecting for ages, to move. The holy angels will come too, but the beloved saints shall ride in the chariots of God as the bride beside the bridegroom.

Those who die in Christ shall be for ever reunited. They shall come with Him. We, perchance, shall be changed and caught up to meet Him and them; and then, all one in Christ, we shall be for ever with Him.

For evermore before Him shine;
For evermore to call Him mine.

THURSDAY, August 11.

"The God of Peace Himself sanctify you wholly...Faithful is He that calleth you, who also will do it."—1 Thess. v. 23, 24 (R.V.).

Our God has set Himself the work of our sanctification. As the Greek indicates, He looks upon us as his inheritance, and He will not rest until He has brought every acre of territory under cultivation. It is not enough that briars and thistles should be exterminated; they must be replaced by the rare growth of Christian virtue, which is Christ.

The work of sanctification is quiet and silent. It is wrought by the God of Peace. The mightiest forces of nature are stilled, and when God comes with power into the human spirit there is often no hurricane, tempest, fire, or earthquake, but the thrilling whisper of the still small voice.

The work is also gradual. We are not made faultless, but preserved blameless, i.e., we are kept from known sin, preserved from incurring perpetual self-reproach. "There is no condemnation." I saw the other day the love-letter of a little boy to his father. It was anything but faultless, but the father at least did not count it worthy of blame, since he carried it next his heart. So we are not to be faultless, as judged by God's perfect standard, till we are presented before the presence of his glory; but we may be blameless up to our acquaintance with the Divine will.

The work is from within outwards. Notice the order-spirit, soul, body. The Shekinah of his presence shines in the holy of holies, and thence pours over into the holy place, and so into the outer court, until the very curtains of the body are irradiated with its light. Christ is revealed and found in the heart, then through the life. And God will do this, because He is faithful to the yearnings which he has created and fostered. He will do it.

FRIDAY, August 12.

"That our God may...fulfil every desire of goodness...that the name of our Lord Jesus may be glorified in you."—2 Thess. i. 11-12 (R.V.).

Will you, dear Christian soul, enter into a solemn compact with the Holy Spirit that you will live for this as your supreme purpose, namely, to glorify the name (i.e., the character) of the Lord Jesus? This is his supreme purpose and aim throughout the present age. He seeks the glory of Jesus with the same persistent patience as Jesus sought the glory of his Father, and longs for our fellowship and co-operation. Nothing gratifies the Holy Spirit more than to welcome into partnership those who love the Lord Jesus with a consuming passion.

It has made a great difference to my life since I responded to the call of the Spirit, as though He said directly, as once through his servant, "O magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt his Name together." One has always an object in view, in speaking or keeping silence, in acting or suffering, in life or death—that the Lord Jesus may be magnified.

Does this seem too high an aim? Then ponder the gracious assurance that the Lord will fulfil every desire of goodness. He first instils the desire, and then realises it; first suggests the outline plan, and then fills in the colours. Take your desires for goodness to Him, and trust Him, in all faithfulness, to realise and fulfil them.

SATURDAY, August 13.

"God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation."—2 Thess. ii. 13.

God's aim and purpose. Salvation.—Not simply our deliverance from the penalty, but from the power, of all besetting sin; so that we may be delivered from the fear of our enemies, and serve Him in holiness and righteousness all our days. This He is prepared, as Zacharias sang, to give to us, but we must claim it by faith.

God's choice.—Whom He did foreknow He also did predestinate. From all eternity He saw those who would be attracted to Jesus by a Divine affinity, and these were included in his Divine donation to the Son. "Thine they were, and Thou gavest them Me, and they have kept thy word." We must not presume on it, but we may be very grateful that the tendencies emanating from the Fall are met by those of the grace and choice of the Almighty.

God's method.—Throughs anctification of the Spirit. He sets us apart from sin, and consecrates us to God. He indwells the heart, photographing on its texture the likeness of Jesus, and securing his real and literal presence. Our sanctification is not it, but He; not the property of our soul, but its possession of the Holy One. And belief of the truth. Let the Word of God dwell in you richly. Hide it in your heart that you may be kept from sin. We are sanctified by the truth in so far as we expose our hearts to its entrance and rule. We are cleansed by the washing of water by the Word. F. The Wesleyan Conference.

THE public services on Sunday, and the solemn communion service on Monday, last week, were a fitting preparation for the opening of the representative session of the Conference. The official sermons of the President and ex-President were preached in the Great Thornton Street Chapel to overflowing congregations. In the morning the Mayor and Corporation of Hull formed part of the congregation. Rev. H. Price Hughes delivered an intensely practical and powerful sermon on CHRISTIAN PERFECTION.

He took as his text Matt. xix. 21: "If thou wouldst be perfect sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come follow Me." He said these words led Francis of Assisi to found the Franciscan order that saved the Latin Church, and they could still turn men into saints and raise entire churches into newness of life. After emphasising the need of trust, obedience, and imitation of Christ, Mr. Hughes spoke some brave words concerning the application of Christlike principles to business life, and uttered an impressive warning as to the love of money. He declared his conviction that the chief curse of the Church in England to-day was the LOVE OF MONEY.

"How many Methodists have I seen," said he, "spiritually declining as soon as they have grown rich!" Wesley's three rules for a man making money were: Make all you can honestly; save all you can, that is, avoid extravagance; and give all you can. That was where they broke down. Nothing could save them from the soul-destroying love of money except the Pentecostal gift of the Holy Ghost. When a man was full of the Holy Ghost he did not love money; he had no room for it. Francis of Assisi made the mistake of supposing that on a large scale they should literally become paupers. It was the duty of a Christian man to regard what he had as a trusteeship, for which he would have to give, at the judgment seat of Christ, quite as rigid and exhaustive account as the stern law of trusteeship required in England to-day. The excessive desire for gold was the great curse of this commercial country, leading to all sorts of immoral speculations, of which they had lately had disastrous illustrations. The foundation of it all was lack of faith in God. Solemnly the preacher invited his hearers to place themselves unreservedly and unconditionally in the hands of Christ.

The ex-President's sermon in the evening was a tender and pathetic deliverance, with many personal touches, founded on the passage, "And thou shalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee these forty years in the wilderness." Strong men were moved to tears as Mr. Watkinson applied these words to his own experience. Forty years ago he left Hull for the wider world and an untried life. Now, after forty years, he came back again to lay down the honourable burden that great Conference imposed upon him, and to feel that not much now remained for him except

THE SUNSET AND THE CURFEW.

He illustrated and enforced the Divine government and guidance of life.

Hitherto the Conference communion service has been held on a Sunday, when many representatives could not be present, but a change was made this year, and it preceded the business on Monday morning. A gracious influence pervaded the service, which was conducted by the President. The venerable Dr. Jenkins gave the address, dwelling upon the personality and presence of Christ.

There was a large attendance of ministers and laymen at the opening of the representative session. Letters of sympathy were sent to the families of the late Mr. Thomas Owen, whose tragic death took place so recently; Mr. W. O. Quibell, of Newark, and Sir H. Mitchell, of Bradford—members of the Conference who had died during the year.

In the President's opening address he contended that lay co-operation and lay representation were the only antidote to clericalism. The gradual exclusion of the laity from the councils of the Church was the direct cause of sacerdotalism. Mr. Hughes indicated which were ominous signs of the times. First, there was the idolatry of amusement, which had ceased to be recreation and had become an insane passion. Secondly, the constant attacks on the sacredness of the Lord's Day. He pronounced the opening of museums and art galleries in London on the Lord's Day as a huge sham, and commended a pamphlet published by Rev. W. Arthur on the question as invaluable. The third great evil was the appalling power of the drink traffic. He quoted a saying of Mr. Garrett's that if only Christian men were in earnest about Sunday closing they should get it in six months. Lastly, there was the daring aggression of Romanism. He promised his Irish brethren that they might count upon the hearty co-operation of the Conference in preventing the monstrous injustice of the establishment at the public expense of a Romanist university in Ireland. God had committed to the Anglo-Celtic race the defence of human freedom, the vindication of the race's conscience, the protection of the weak, and the propaganda of Scriptural Christianity. More than all beside, they needed the

MULTIPLICATION OF CHRIST-LIKE CHRISTIANS.

He closed a powerful address by referring to the last days of Mr. Gladstone, and to the fact that nothing pleased the dying statesman so much as the information that a near and dear young relative had resolved to consecrate her life to the work of God in India. With the light of eternity streaming in upon him, that great Englishman realised that nothing in this world was so glorious as direct self-sacrifice in spiritual work for Christ. Their most daring dreams would become possible and easy if they gave themselves fully to God, and opened their hearts to receive from the throne of salvation and from the Crucified Hand the Pentecostal blessing.

Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., had an early opportunity of introducing his scheme of raising a million guineas as a Methodist for the maintenance and extension of the work of God at home and abroad. His proposal was that a million guineas should be raised by a million Methodists for religious and charitable objects, and that there should be instituted a roll of members and adherents, who should inscribe their names thereon by the first day of the next century. In reviewing the earlier special funds raised by the Connexion, Mr. Perks showed that not more than 70,000 persons subscribed to the Thanksgiving Fund in 1878, when £300,000 were raised. In 1839, in a time of comparative Church poverty, £220,000 were raised for the Centenary Fund. Since then, their 4500 chapels had increased to 8391, their sittings from 850,000 to 2,181,000, their Sunday school teachers and scholars from 401,000 to 1,100,000. There were to-day, probably, not less than three million adherents of Methodism. He gave statistics to prove the enormous increase of wealth in the last sixty years, and urged that Methodists had enjoyed a due share of it. Remembering that their present schemes involved an expenditure of £400,000, though they scarcely felt it, was it extraordinary that they should attempt in a special effort to deal with the sum of one million sterling? With the courage of a true optimist, Mr. Perks concluded that the task was well within their power, and then proceeded to suggest the disposition of the amount when raised. Endowments and the payment of old debts he did not favour. The building of chapels and mission halls might take £300,000, educational objects £200,000, and Dr. Stephenson's plan for saving all the children of Methodist parents from the sterile influence of the workhouse, £50,000. Home Missions and Foreign Missions might claim £100,000 each, and the remaining £250,000 might well be spent in the provision of large central buildings in London, such as other religious communities already possess, and in which the Evangelistic work of the London Mission might be carried on. While the central idea was a guinea a person, the rich men who would give hundreds of guineas would have the privilege of giving large sums, so that the names of children and servants and employees and poor people might be inscribed on the roll.

The ex-President seconded the proposal that a committee should be appointed to consider these bold suggestions, and said that he did not doubt that all the great and glowing speculations stated by Mr. Perks would be verified by history. The other night Parliament voted eight millions of money for their protection. They were surely able to find one million for the regeneration of the nation.

The Conference unanimously agreed to the appointment of the committee, which sat on Tuesday evening and for three hours carefully considered the detailed proposals. The committee decided to recommend to the Conference the adoption of the scheme outlined by Mr. Perks, and on Wednesday morning, after some discussion of details, the Conference unanimously approved. The Presidnet remarked that one of the most important historic moments in the history of Methodism had arrived. The Doxology was sung and prayer offered by the ex-President. Thus has been launched upon the Methodist Church one of the greatest undertakings of modern times. The last clause in the long series of resolutions adopted urged the Methodist people to seek, contemporaneously with this financial effort, a renewed and richer outpouring of the Spirit of God, that the Church of their fathers might be equipped for the great spiritual task which the new century might bring to it in this country and throughout the world.

ONE CONTROVERSY

which has occupied a large share of attention in the Connexion during recent years has been brought within reach of settlement. The representative session has resolved by a large majority that it is desirable that the present order of Conference sessions should be changed, so that the pastoral session should follow the representative. The laymen have withdrawn any desire to share in the election of president and secretary, so that, under the proposal adopted, brethren will be nominated for these offices by the pastoral session a year in advance. The adjourned pastoral session of this Conference must consider the question, however, before any final decision is arrived at. The open session for the reception of

REPRESENTATIVES FROM THE CONFERENCES OF OTHER LANDS

was a deeply interesting one. The Methodist Episcopal Church of America, which in point of numbers has far outstripped the mother church at home, sent as delegates Bishop Fowler and Dr. Hamilton. Australasia was represented by a veteran Fijian missionary, Rev. F. Langham. France sent Dr. Lelièvre, the author of one of the best modern lives of John Wesley; while Ireland was represented by Rev. Dr. Crawford Johnson and Mr. Shillington. Rev. Dr. Davison, the representative last year to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, also gave an account of his visit to the Baltimore Conference.

Bishop Fowler graphically described the progress of Christian work both in America and on their mission stations. They were never so embarrassed as now by successes in all fields. At the last meeting of their board of bishops from all quarters of the earth came shouts of victory and calls for help. It seemed as if all the great lands of the earth were gathering about them, lifting their lofty fronts and waving their snowy plumes to catch their attention. Bishop Fitzgerald was calling from the Cordilleras; Hartzell from the Mountains of the Moon; Joyce from the snowy mountains of Sechuen in far-off West China; Fox from the towering summits of the Himalayas; Walden from the peaks of the Alps; and Warren from the misty passes of the Andes, pleading for the vast continents, with their teeming millions. The bishop paid a warm tribute to the integrity and honour of President McKinley. He hoped for the time when the Stars and Stripes and the Union Jack side by side would make every yard of water, and every acre of land, safe for prayer or for trade. Dr. Hamilton, who represents the Freedmen's Aid Society, recalled the fact that Hull was the birthplace of William Wilberforce—

Friend of the poor, the wronged, the fetter-galled.

Dr. Lelievre gave a deeply interesting speech on the work in France. There were ENCOURAGING SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

One was the uninterrupted success of Protestant popular meetings. Another was the number of priests—as many as eighty—who had recently broken with Rome. Remembering that in the eighteenth century converted priests were the chief agents of the Reformation, they might hope that such a movement was the prelude to another Reformation.

The Hull Conference has received the warmest welcome on all hands. The Nonconformist deputation brought hearty greetings on Tuesday afternoon. Rev. R. Harrison, Primitive Methodist, and Mr. T. Stratton, J.P., the son of a Congregational minister long resident in Hull, spoke on behalf of the Evangelical Free Church Council. Rev. John Bond said, in response, that Romanism carried a blight wherever it went. They and their Nonconformist friends were brethren in word, in sympathy, in fellowship.

Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., also spoke. He bore eloquent testimony to the paramount duty of presenting to their churches and people the transfigured form of the Saviour Himself. It was true that their country owed much to the researches and labours of men in the field of literature, science, philosophy, and politics. But they owed their real progress to those earnest men who had sought and found in the Holy Scriptures those cardinal doctrines and precepts which, from the beginning of the world, had formed the strength of individual and national progress.

MISSIONS AT HOME AND ABROAD.

Rev. G. W. Olver, the senior secretary of the Foreign Missionary Society, had an encouraging report to present. There was an increase for the year in the ordinary home income of more than £4,000. They had received several thousand pounds in addition for the sending out of additional men, and a special gift of £5,000 in memory of Mr. Waites, of Thirsk, from his surviving brother. Two additional missionaries had already been sent out, and twelve or fourteen more were designated for early appointment. The terrible distress in the West Indies, owing to the failure of the sugar industry, demanded their consideration, and a minister and laymen were to proceed at once as a commission to the islands to investigate and report. In the meantime the committee would be empowered to meet special cases among their brethren by a financial grant. The first Monday in October was appointed as a day of intercession for foreign missions.

Home missionary affairs were introduced by Dr. H. J. Pope, who reported that by means of some retrenchment in expenses and grants, and an increase in the ordinary income, they had equalised income and expenditure during the year. They were calling out thirty-eight additional ministers this year. Methodist work in the Army and Navy was reviewed by Rev. R. W. Allen. They now provided twenty-nine Homes for soldiers and sailors. The Secretary of State, in granting them a site at Hong Kong, expressed his high approval of the work they were doing for the services.

Reports dealing with Sunday-school work, temperance, education, chapel building, etc., were presented. Resolutions were passed protesting against the attempts to secularise the Sabbath; and Dr. Wenyon, an old Chinese missionary, moved a resolution condemning the export of Indian opium to China.

The opening addresses before the commencement of business each morning have been very helpful. Rev. Charles Garrett spoke of the internal unity of believers, who might differ in regard to externals. A solemn silence prevailed while he described the death of Mr. Walker, the contractor for the Manchester Ship Canal. As he held Mr. Garrett's hand, he said, "I am not afraid to die. My one comfort in dying is this, that the Christ I know on this side will be the Christ that will receive me on the other side." A noble representative of the local preachers of Methodism in the person of Mr. T. G. Osborn, M.A., of Colwyn Bay, pleaded with his brethren for a greater simplicity of motive and purpose, for more self-forgetfulness, for a deeper devotion to their great cause. He greatly rejoiced in the increase of reverent tone and simplicity he had noticed in the Conference. On the following morning Rev. C. H. Kelly, one of the most vigorous of the ex-presidents, referring to his first appointment at the Hull Conference of 1858, dwelt upon the lessons of experience.

The shadow of death has already twice fallen upon the Conference during its sessions. A highly esteemed superintendent in the home work, Rev. J. R. Berry of Burnley, has passed away; and Rev. F. W. Macdonald announced to the Conference the intelligence of the death of Signor Capellini, the well-known soldiers' minister in Rome. This is a great loss to Italian missions.

FROM OTHER LANDS.

The Northfield Conferences.

THE first of the three Northfield Conferences, namely, the World's Students' Conference, began on Friday evening, July 1. All day long the place was a scene of activity, as delegations from colleges in all parts of the United States arrived. As many as 150 different societies were represented. On the same day the Y.M.C.A. encampment opened. The camp is in a grove of pines and birches on the lower slope of one of the mountains which surround Northfield; it is near to the village and auditorium, and yet secluded. Here for two months young men can live for four dollars a week, thus bringing a splendid opportunity of physical and spiritual benefit within reach of all. The delegates and visitors to the other two conferences are housed as usual in the seminary buildings during the summer vacation of the girls.

The Conference opened with a few earnest words of prayer from Mr. Moody, who gave this and every other meeting to be held in Northfield this season right over to the great Master of Assemblies; asking that his rich blessing might rest upon all. He afterwards said it was customary to offer an address of welcome to the students, but this he should omit, for their invitation to Northfield was a welcome in itself.

The opening address was delivered by Dr. C. I. Scofield, and if the commencement can be taken as prophetic of the ending this will be one of the best conferences ever held here. The subject was "Waiting upon God," from Isa. xl. 31. After remarking that the experience of most Christians nowadays seems to contradict the statement, he went on to show that this is one of the conditional verses of the Bible. There is one simple condition, and as a result four blessed promises; and unless the condition is fulfilled the promises must necessarily remain unrealised. He pointed out that neither prayer nor worship is waiting upon God; the former is asking for something we want, and the latter praising and adoring Him. To wait upon God is to be silent that He may speak, expecting that He will do so, and girded and ready for the slightest indication of his will. Dr. Scofield then took one by one the four promises: the renewing of strength, the mounting up with wings as eagles, the running and not wearying, the walking and not fainting.

On Saturday morning Dr. A. T. Pierson addressed the students, and in the evening Dr. R. A. Torrey, of the Chicago Bible Institute, spoke upon Bible study.

Every afternoon is given up to recreation. Base-ball matches, tennis tournaments, etc., are played upon the seminary Campus. Each evening, at 7, the sunset meeting is held on "Roundtop," that sacred spot so dear to many all over the world who are familiar with Northfield.

On Sunday morning Mr. Robert E. Speer, of New York, gave a most inspiring address from Luke xii. 49: "I am come to send fire on the earth." He pointed out that in the Bible "fire" is used as the fivefold symbol of separation, cleansing, service, the glory of God, and testing. In the evening Mr. Moody spoke in the auditorium on the "seven promises" found in the last three verses of Ps. xci. Although Sunday was the hottest day of the year thus far, the interest was even more intense than the heat.

As all acquainted with Mr. Moody's meetings cannot fail to know, singing forms a prominent feature; for this first conference it was in charge of Professor Towner, of Chicago. The Mount Hermon quartette frequently rendered selections.

"THE GLORIOUS FOURTH"

falling on Monday the meetings were a little out of their regular order. In the morning Dr. Torrey, who had just returned from the military camps in the South, where he had been for the last month, gave an interesting account of the work going on there. He said he considered that the condition of the army camps constituted the loudest call that the Church of Christ in America has ever had. Many were the touching stories he told of individual cases which had come under his notice. The Sunday before last no less than 500 men rose in the different meetings held—fourteen in all—to accept Christ as their Saviour.

The afternoon was spent by the students in decorating the auditorium for the evening gathering. Seldom, if ever, has the building presented a gayer or more patriotic appearance. After the visitors were assembled in the area and gallery, the students from the different colleges marched in singing and shouting at the top of their voices, and loudly cheered by the audience. After parading round the aisles each company reached the place assigned to it under the gallery. Earlier in the day the places had been drawn by lot, and every college had decorated its particular portion with flags and college colours. The last of all to enter was the Mount Hermon division. When it appeared, headed by Mr. Moody, the applause was tremendous, and continued until the Hermonites were finally located in the orchestra, behind a contingent of the Northfield Seminary girls. Over their heads swung the Union Jack and Stars and Stripes.

As a rule, this gathering is given over entirely to the students; but for the first time since it was organised, thirteen years ago, Mr. Moody asked that, as a special favour, twenty minutes should be given to him. He thought the state of the country was such that both it and the soldiers—1000 of whom were now lying dead or wounded—should be remembered. Mr. Robert E. Speer prayed specially for these; after which Mr. Moody in a few simple words said that though he feared no foreign foe for America, yet she was threatened by two internal ones far more likely to ruin her, viz.,

SABBATH-BREAKING AND INTEMPERANCE.

The meeting was then given up to the students, and to English ears unaccustomed to these American college gatherings, it was indeed a rowdy one. College songs, choruses, "yells"—the last being a shout of perhaps fifty voices in unison—were the order, or disorder, of the evening. Each college has its own special yell, Central Pennsylvania's being "Hip-rah-ree-ray, hip-rah-ree-ray, Central Pennsyl-van-ia," and Cornell's "Cornell, I yell, yell yell, Cornell." The final shout was a prolonged one from every student in the place, showing of what they were still capable after an hour and a-half's incessant "yelling." At the end of this gathering everyone adjourned to the campus, where a tremendous bonfire was blazing. Round this the students, hand-in-hand, danced and sang, most of them being in white or very light clothes. The scene was weird in the extreme, reminding one of a native Australian "corrobboree."

On Tuesday morning Mr. Zwemer, of London, addressed the students, and in the evening Mr. Edward Judson, son of Adoniram Judson, of missionary fame, led the "Roundtop" meeting. Once more Mr. Speer spoke in the auditorium, taking for his text, "Remember Jesus Christ" (2 Tim ii. 8, R.V.), and was followed by Dr. Pierson, who was leaving next day for the Keswick Convention, and gave as his parting message, "Follow his steps" (1 Pet. ii. 21).

Perhaps the best meeting of all, and the one which will have the most abiding results, was that held on the last Sunday afternoon, when Mr. Moody met those of the students who, as he put it, were tired of a low-level Christian life, and determined to be out and out for Christ. The Holy Spirit was there in evident power, and numbers yielded themselves fully to the Lord.

After an interval of three days, the Young Women's Conference began, and lasted a little more than a week. It was the largest yet held; there were almost 400 delegates, representing 52 institutions of learning and 17 city societies. Among the speakers were Mr. Speer, Rev. J. Bell Johnston, of Worcester, England, and Mrs. Margaret P. Sangster, whose name is so well known on both sides of the Atlantic. Day by day the interest and power deepened and increased, and many who went to Northfield first to see what the Conference was like, and with little or no belief in Christianity, accepted the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour.

The Conference for Christian Workers begins July 29, and hundreds are looking forward with great expectation to the visit of Revs. G. Campbell Morgan and G. H. C. Macgregor.

Missions by the Friends.

MR. ERNEST MUNNINGS gives in the July number of Our Missions (54, Hatton-garden, E.C., 1d.) interesting details of a tour through certain Christian villages of the Central Provinces of India. Among other places visited was Sali, where, says the missionary—we found quite a large gathering of Christians. Here too we found, enclosed in a strong thorn hedge, what is sometimes spoken of as Sali Cathedral, a long building made of wood, bamboos, and mud, with three rooms, one for meeting-house and school, and two to form a rest-house for European visitors.

The Friends' Mission in India has now 850 orphans under its care, of whom the greater proportion are famine waifs. £4 per annum will support one of these little ones until they can earn their own living, and funds are urgently needed for this object. At Seoni Malwa thirty-seven of the older boys recently made their public confession of faith in Christ.

From one of the country districts in Madagascar a missionary writes that the work is doing well. Over 1000 children and 300 adults were gathered at a few hours' notice at his request for a Gospel address in the church, which was filled to overflowing, and many could not obtain entrance. The Roman Catholics here are dwindling rapidly, and in one place where they used to have a large school there are no adherents left to them, as the whole of the people have come over to the Protestant cause. In other districts the Jesuit bribes and threats have been more successful.

Good news comes from Japan. Mr. Kida, an earnest native evangelist, reported to Miss E. R. Gillett that there are now over a hundred Christian policemen in Tokyo out of about five thousand.

Brumana, in Syria, is a centre from which Gospel influence radiates to several hamlets, Syrian and English taking part in the various meetings. In connection with the Medical Mission work on Mount Lebanon, a visit was made to an out-patient in Bhannis.

She was a middle-aged woman, living in one of the most inaccessible houses perched on a rock at the far end of the little village, and on first entering the dimly lighted room it was difficult to recall her name or features. A married sister sitting by soon joined in the conversation, and, though both were unable to read, the sister, Takla by name, readily repeated texts of Scripture, a hymn, and the whole of Psalm cxxiii. in Arabic. On asking her where she had learned them, she replied, "Ah, I see you have forgotten me, but it is six or seven years since I was a patient in your hospital, and Leila (the nurse) taught me these verses."

The work of the Boys' School at Chung-King, China, goes on steadily day by day, with increasing attendance.

There are openings for a good many more schools in Chung-King and out of it. It is strongly felt that natives ought to be used to do a good deal of the secular teaching, so that special attention is being given to the pupil-teachers. In order that more boys may be taught, and these teachers properly employed, a new school next year is most desirable. It need not be a large one, and a rented shop or two would serve as school premises.

A good deal of fresh work has been begun lately by Mr. Pieris in Ceylon, in regular preaching for the Coolies, and in Tamil services in the school at Aluwihare. The secretary of the Friends' Foreign Mission Association is Mr. Watson Grace, 15, Devonshire-street, Bishopsgate Without, E.C.

Tidings from Peru.

THE occupation of a part of Inquisition Plaza in Lima by a Protestant missionary is not without interest to those who have been watching the hand of Providence in the opening of Peru to the Gospel. In November, 1573, the first Auto-da-Fé was celebrated in old Inquisition-square. The first victim of the Inquisition was an old French Lutheran, a so-called "heretic." During the years of Spanish domination many others were burned, flogged, tortured, or sent to the galleys as slaves for life. On more than one occasion we have stood in this old plaza offering the Bible as the Book forbidden by the Inquisition, and now this year of grace finds the veteran missionary Dr. Wood taking his stand on the ashes of its victims under the banner of the Cross.

The Inquisition may be gone, and Popery is tolerant because its strength is broken; but the same spirit still burns in the bosom of the Romish Church, and permeates the descendants and followers of the Inquisitors. In Peru the Bible is still burned; men are still persecuted for distributing it; and were it in the power of corrupt priestcraft they would still be led forth to suffer the indescribable tortures of Auto-da-Fé.

A SCANDALOUS CUSTOM.

In a recent issue of El Callao, the leading local paper, attention is called to a friar who is going about the suburbs of Linares advertising himself as a "redentor de almas"—redeemer of souls—at fifty pesos a head. "He has redeemed so many poor souls," says El Callao, "that fifteen to twenty million dollars have been collected." How truly St. Peter forewarns us of these false teachers who, "through covetousness," shall "make merchandise of" souls.

FUTURE FRIARS.

Twenty-eight boys, the oldest not more than thirteen years of age, from Spain, accompanied by four friars, arrived in Arequipa a short time ago. They were reported to be from good Spanish families, and have left their Castilian homes for monastic life, with its slavery and corruption. Monstrous iniquity! They go to augment the ranks of the Church in that city which is the second in Peru, and the most fanatical and intolerant in South America. The reason for bringing boys from Spain is not far to seek. The only professions that bright young men of the better class here care to follow, excluding politics, are law and medicine. The sacerdotal career, which, with few exceptions, is dishonourable, ignorant, and immoral, is disdained by those of good standing.

BANEFUL FRUITS OF THE CONFESSIONAL.

So much has been asserted and proved about the baneful influence of the confessional that it is not necessary to add to that testimony, unless it be to evoke more prayer on behalf of the poor people palsied by its galling yoke. In Callao, on March 20, a young woman from a respectable family who went to confession was inveigled away into the convent of Santa Clara, Lima, by the notorious Vidal and his co-padre. Both padres were supported in their criminal act by ecclesiastical authorities. The poor mother made repeated attempts to have her daughter liberated, but in vain. Meanwhile, through the daily papers, people got stirred over the matter. A group of Lima students besieged the convent, and would have thrown down its sealed gates had they not been definitely assured of her liberation. The following day, April 1, mother and daughter embraced each other, and she is now liberated from a life of bondage, misery, and abuse, thanks to the generous, hearty students of Lima, who had the courage to face the emissaries of Rome and their sealed walls and prison gates in the defence of justice and the rights of conscience. With such an example we anticipate religious liberty at an early date.

A READING CIRCLE IN THE PERENE.

The little Spanish meeting held among the "cholos" in the rough carpenter's shop in the Perene was not in vain. Several of them were moved by simple testimony to the power of the Gospel, and bought Bibles and hymn-books to make further inquiry. Since then I have occasionally sent "Las Buenas Nuevas" and other Gospel tracts. By reason of these more Bibles and hymn-books have been sent for, and now comes the news of the formation of a "reading circle" in the Perene with its branches spreading to La Mercio. When one realises the demand there is for infidel and impure literature, which is eating the life-blood of many a young man of Peru—as you may remember, we had an example in the train on the way to the Perene—we rejoice to hear that Evangelical literature and the lamp of truth are laying hold of young Peruvians at this outpost of civilisation. There is great need of Christian literature, and I could make use of a great deal more than comes to me. Gospel literature will have no small share in influencing and evangelising Peru.

FARTHER AFIELD.

In Trujillo, 300 miles north of Callao, our native evangelist has been circulating the Word of God and testifying in the Lord's name. Preaching friars have been on his track. They have denounced him from the pulpit, openly destroyed a few of his books, and have been calling on the people to send the heretical exhorter and his prohibited Book from the coasts.

Easter Sunday found an Evangelical Sunday-school formally opened in that city, when the Gospel was sung, read, and explained, and twelve young people heard it reverently. Since then numbers have grown. In house-to-house work with the Bible in hand, and in "kitchen" meetings in the evenings, there is encouragement from different standpoints.

May God help Christians to pray for us as we need them to pray, and that a deep soul thirst may be created in many a heart after God.

A. R. Stark.

The work carried on in Peru by Mr. Stark and Messrs. Jarrett and Peters is now managed from Harley House, Bow, and all communications in respect thereof should be addressed to Dr. H. Grattan Guinness, the hon. secretary.

The existing staff of workers has recently been reinforced by three, Mr. and Mrs. Newell and Mr. Patrick. Full tidings of the progress of the Peruvian Mission will appear regularly in Regions Beyond.

Novel Missionary Cruise.—We have been asked to notice a special missionary cruise for public school boys, schoolmasters, clergy, university men, and friends of missions, to Tangier, Algiers, Tunis (for Carthage), Tripoli, and Susa (stations of the North African Mission), also calling at Gibraltar and Malta en route. The tour has been planned out by Sir Matthew Dodsworth and Rev. Norman Bennet, with a view to encourage a deeper interest among public school boys in foreign missions, and arrangements have been made with Dr. Lunn for a limited number of berths, at the special rate of £16 16s. each, on the steam yacht Argonaut, which will leave London on Dec. 20, and is due to arrive at Marseilles on Jan. 10. The promoters also offer six free cruises of £16 16s. to the six public school boys who write the best essays on "Missions in the 1st and 19th Centuries—A Comparison," such essays to be sent in by Sept. 29. We understand that already about forty boys from our leading public schools have sent in their names to compete, and the scheme has been well received by many head-masters. Applications for berths for the cruise must be sent to Rev. Norman Bennet, 29, Maitland-park-villas, Hampstead, N.W. The offer of these special rates only holds good until Oct. 15.

American Missions in Spain.

UNDER this heading in The Christian of June 30, Mr. Budgett Meakin wrote in appreciative terms of the work that has been done for Spain in "The International Institute for Girls," that for the last fifteen years has had its centre in San Sebastian. This, under the blessing of God, is but one of the fruits of the twenty-six years of labour of the missionaries of the American Board in Spain.

It has stations for evangelistic work at Santander, Bilbao, San Sebastian, Pamplona, Logroño, Pradejón, Tauste and Zaragoza. All these are in the north of Spain, and make a chain of mission stations each one easily accessible to its neighbour, and the intermediate spaces being systematically traversed in the interests of the Gospel, by the pastors, evangelists and colporteurs from the central stations.

At five of these are organised churches which are the centres of Christian preaching, prayer meetings, missionary meetings, Christian Endeavour Societies, day schools, and evangelistic work of all kinds, carried forward on lines that have been suggested by the foreign missionaries, but that have been modified and adjusted to Spanish needs by the intelligent and consecrated Spanish pastors, evangelists, and teachers.

Many souls have been brought to the light of the Gospel, and, coming to know something of the scope and success of this mission work, a distinguished Roman Catholic writer over his own name, in the public press, has confessed that "Protestantism is penetrating the provinces of Spain."

The declaration of war between Spain and the United States made it prudent that the group of American missionaries at San Sebastian should temporarily withdraw from the country, though we had not been in any way harmed nor even molested. On April 23 the "International Institute," with its 38 pupils and the teachers and missionaries and servants, making a family of some 50 souls, quietly moved over the frontier into France, and installed themselves in the commodious villa, most providentially secured, at No. 16, Route du Bois de Boulogne, Biarritz, at which place we will now be glad to hear from our friends and to welcome those who may visit us.

It is significant of the relations that we sustain with our Spanish friends that the Government did not interpose any objection to the leaving of Spain in the company of the American missionaries of this considerable number of Spanish girls, and that during the three months that have passed since then not one of the parents has asked to have his daughter returned to him. Indeed, it is an interesting fact that just now the only place in the world where Spaniards and Americans appear to be voluntarily living together in perfect harmony is in this evangelical International Institute. It would be the same, we know, so far as our congregations and friends are concerned, had we remained in Spain. Not a friendship has been broken, not an unpleasant word has been spoken nor been written to us by the many Spaniards that we count among our friends. My correspondence continues with them all more frequent and more intimate than ever, and they and we, while deeply lamenting the horrors of the war, pray and hope that God may bring out of it some great blessing.

Wm. H. Gulick.

Ireland.—In its current issue The Christian Irishman says: Over the entire country a feeling prevails that we are on the eve of a far-reaching social revolution. The reforms to be inaugurated under the new measure of local government are of such a sweeping character that the changes in some quarters are awaited, perhaps naturally, with considerable anxiety. The Bishop of Ossory, in his annual address to the Diocesan Synod at Kilkenny, referred to the situation in words of pre-eminent wisdom: "Let us give a loyal and sympathetic acceptance to a measure fraught with so much danger to the land, should it be used for party or social ends. Let there be no churlish holding back as far as we are concerned—no yielding to fear or fright on the part of those who have worked so long on grand juries, asylum boards, and elsewhere." If these counsels be accepted, our country will enter on the new career which opens before her with the brightest prospects.

The late Signor Capellini.

MANY will hear with sorrow of the death of Rev. Cav. Luigi Capellini, Minister of the Evangelical Military Church at Rome. During a long period of years Signor Capellini exerted a deep and widespread influence for good in the Italian Army, and as the outcome of his work, the Gospel has found its way into the remotest parts of the kingdom.

A native of Spezzia, our deceased friend served under the banner of Victor Emmanuel in early life. That was thirty-seven years ago. Both at home and at college he had been habituated to the religious observances of Roman Catholicism. Even in the freer life of the camp he still wore his amulets and told his beads, but these practices had no influence on his heart or life. They were mere superstitions, and were felt as a burden he dared not throw off, a price he must pay for the safety of his soul in the perils of the siege and the battlefield.

But one day, while on garrison duty in the town of Perugia, a few torn leaves of a New Testament fell into his hands. The words he there read were as the dawn of a new day to his soul. He soon found out that several of his comrades were in possession of the entire volume, having received it from a colporteur whom a Christian lady, the late Miss Burton, had sent to the town to labour among the garrison.

From a photograph by G. Borelli, Rome.

Luigi was not long in making the colporteur's acquaintance, became a diligent attendant at the meetings held in his lodgings, and an eager student of that sacred book, from a mere fragment of which such blessed light had already broken upon him. Taught and led by the Word and Spirit of God, the young soldier now passed through that spiritual change which is the starting-point of all true and successful work for Christ. He knew himself a dark and undone sinner, and believed on the name of the only-begotten Son of God. Love, joy, and peace filled his soul, and, with wondering gratitude, he blessed the Providence that had led him by a way he knew not to the discovery of so priceless a treasure.

From the very first a strong conviction seized him that God had a work for him to do among his fellow soldiers. He obtained a supply of tracts and Testaments, and the influence given him by his rank of sergeant was turned to good account. Very soon he had gathered round him a group of inquirers, several of them, like himself, non-commissioned officers. In the hours of freedom from military service they read together the Word of God, Capellini expounding, as he found utterance, in the light of his own experience.

Signor Capellini's period of military service, covering as it did some of the most eventful years of the Italian Revolution, was passed in the midst of perils. Marvellous deliverances confirmed him in the conviction that God was reserving him for a special mission, and deepened his own purposes of self-consecration. Urged onward by this impression, as soon as he was once more master of his own movements, he joined himself to a small class of theological students conducted in Padua by Rev. Henry J. Piggott, with the laudable desire of being found the better equipped for work whenever the Master should call him. And when, in 1870, Rome became the capital of the kingdom, and consequently the head quarters of all branches of the public service, both military and civil, it seemed to him that the call had come. The death of his mother placed him in possession of a small income; and with this he hired lodgings for himself and his meetings, purchased tracts and Testaments, and met the other expenses of his work.

On the Thursday of Passion week, in 1873, twenty-five young men, first-fruits of the work, gathered for the first time round the table of the Lord at Rome; and from that day onward the work has progressed until it has become a great power for good. King Humbert has more than once shown his interest in the movement. Of course the Papal Church has done its best to upset the work, but therein it has failed utterly; and the growth has been steady in spite of every hindrance and determined persecution. We cannot but believe that, although God has removed the worker, He will graciously carry on his work in the midst of Papal darkness and superstition.

French in Madagascar.

THE Madagascar correspondent of Le Temps makes the following candid remarks in relation to the education of the Malagasy:—

"In Madagascar we are pushing education. Could anything be less suited for promoting the ends we have in view? In the present day power is becoming more and more the privilege of intellect, and if in France education is, as it were, a vast democratic banquet to which everyone is invited, it is because, amongst ourselves, the humblest may aspire to political power. But we have come to Madagascar to establish the exact opposite of a democracy. Hence I do not exactly see what our colonial oligarchy has to gain by the diffusion of all this education among a people to whom we are determined never to grant the rights we enjoy ourselves.

"Having come among the Malagasy to make the most of their land, a little for their benefit, but very much for own, with the assistance of their sinews, what we chiefly want of them is manual labour. What need, then, to educate them? Have they not already enough, nay, too much learning, for our purpose? Why try to develop the Hova's passionate fondness for study? In the inferior condition in which we mean to keep him, is it needful, is it even humane to raise him intellectually to a height whence he can but better appreciate the depth of his servitude? Good governors are not made out of pedants, and under our rule, especially under the daily advancing régime of direct administration, so much theoretical knowledge is quite useless to our very humble auxiliaries."

To those who recognise its fidelity to the facts of the case the above reads like keen irony, but a second reading, particularly of the last sentence, leads one to the conclusion that it is far from being so intended. It is sad indeed to think that there are many Frenchmen who feel it no disgrace openly to proclaim such sentiments, alike treasonable to the principles of their Republic and to their vaunted motto, "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity." On what possible pretext of justice, humanity, or even of French civilisation can they defend the enslavement and refusal of all rights to a peaceable, docile, Christian, and civilised people like the Hova? It is instructive to compare what Le Temps publishes, with the sanction of its approval, in 1898, with the terms of the declaration in 1789 of the "Rights of Man":—

"All men are born, and remain free and equal as to their rights." "The end and object of society is to maintain the natural rights of man, which are liberty, property, security, and resistance to oppression."

These rights, granted more than a century ago to the emancipated negroes of Martinique, are every one of them refused categorically to the educated Christian Hova.

THE LATE

Miss M. Culbertson,

SAN FRANCISCO.

THIS lady was born and brought up in E. Groveland, in the State of New York. In 1875 she was sent for to take charge of a young ladies' home in Oakland, California. In connection with the church where she was a member there was a Chinese class, which she taught for some time. Becoming deeply interested in these people, she joyfully responded to the request to take charge of the Presbyterian Home for Chinese Girls which had then been established in San Francisco. Here for nineteen years she was the loved and honoured "Home Mother."

In order to understand the work accomplished by this gentle and heroic woman an explanatory word as to the cause of the slavery of Chinese women may be needed. In China, when several daughters are born in a family, parents are permitted by law to sell as many as they please, or if they do not like to sell them they may pawn them. The usual manner in which such girls are sold is for the father to enter into an agreement with the purchaser, who, after a careful examination of the girl, signs an agreement to provide good warm clothing and healthful food for the child, treat her kindly, promise that she shall lead a moral life, and at the age of seventeen or eighteen provide her with a good husband, who pays her redemption-money, and she is then a free woman.

Opium-smoking fathers, in their greed for money, that their appetite may be satisfied, take less care in the wording of the purchase contract, and these tender little daughters are frequently sold to unprincipled persons who abuse them in early infancy, and later sell them or force them into the second and most degraded class of slaves. Since the Restriction Act, owing to fewer importations, a girl of sixteen or seventeen years of age has a market value of 1500 dols. to 3000 dols. These girls are often brought from China on false promises of rich husbands, and on finding the life they have been decoyed into they have only one place of refuge—the Mission Home.

Not only has the Home proved a refuge for such poor deceived girls, but for another class quite as much to be pitied—the child slave girls. Bought, sometimes when mere infants, by the rich merchants to be servants to their wives, they are sometimes well treated, but much oftener cruelly abused. They are to be seen to-day on the streets of San Francisco, their thin careworn faces and mean clothing contrasting strongly with the silk-clad, bright-faced little ones they are caring for like tiny old mothers. These slave girls are told that the white "Jesus people" will take out their eyes, or that they will be killed and parts of them ground into medicine, etc., so the poor little things are very much afraid of the Mission. Now some tender-hearted Christian Chinese tells the Mission people, who then, often under great difficulties from hatred, bribery, or other cause, endeavour to reach out a hand to the helpless little creature.

Miss Culbertson's work during all these years has called not only for constant Christian faith and devotion, but often for physical effort and endurance, for tact, skill, and diplomacy, and for dauntless courage such as might do credit to the bravest soldier. She has often gone a dozen times to court on account of one Chinese girl; and in the end the poor timid child, clinging to the one whose tender heart was aching for her, has been turned over to the brutal slave-owner; the battle for a human being's liberty was ended, and the kind woman was defeated. But the joy that was hers when the battle was won made days and nights of weariness seem nought as she took the child for her own. More than 500 girls and children claim Miss Culbertson as "Mama." All of these have stories more thrilling than romance. Many of them have married from the Home, and the tenderness with which they now talk of "Mama," and how good she was, is touching to hear.

The Mission Home has been threatened more than once by men whose valuable slaves had been rescued, and Miss Culbertson received letters threatening that she would be shot down; yet she went on in her usual way. So great was the peril considered about five years ago that the police watched both inside and out, day and night, for three weeks; yet at that very time she went into one of the lowest dens and brought a girl to the Home. The Chinese themselves acknowledge they could not bribe her—"she spoke true"—and in trouble it was to her they came for help.

She was respected and esteemed by all good Chinamen. A laundryman once asked in great anxiety, while she was away at New Orleans, whether she would return. When told that she was only absent for a vacation, he said: "Oh, that is good; I so glad. If Miss Culbertson go away, nobody help our girls. All good Chinamen say Miss Culbertson she one good lady, no lady like her before, no lady after now like her. China people love her; she no afraid, no care, sick, tired; when some man say, 'Come, help,' she come; she all same mother for Chinese. If she go, girls no stay in Home. I tell you, you no forget, if Miss Culbertson sick, give plenty help, no let her go away. Her mouth no lie; what she say all right, no can find two Miss Culbertsons."

To see this "Home Mother" with a Chinese baby on each knee, a group of older ones kneeling round her, and others with arms twined round her neck, made a beautiful picture, to be recalled when the dear friend had gone from her loved children. As, one by one, girls were married she still was the mother to whom they came for comfort or sympathy, and they never sought in vain. Any hour of the day or night she was ready to help, and her joy when the grandchildren came was great. Only two or three days before she left the mission a little babe was born a few doors away. Being very weak, and unable to go to see the last-born, she said, "Oh, I would like to see Ah Ching's baby," so it was carried to her. Ah Ching had said, "Tell mama to namé her," and Margaret was the last little grandchild who received the blessing of this good woman. She is a lovely babe: may she grow up worthy of the name she bears, and love Jesus as the "Mama" prayed.

Miss Culbertson's health began to fail about four years ago, and several visits East were paid without much benefit. On her return to San Francisco the old work was taken up regardless of her own weakness, and until it was impossible for her to walk. She longed to go back to her old home in the East once more, and sad was the Monday morning, July 26, 1897, when the weeping girls gathered round "Mama" for the last time while she told them of Jesus' love: "Jesus knows best; love Jesus, and I'll meet you in heaven, if never here again." She was carried out to the ambulance which was to take her to the train, the girls pleading with her not to go. "Oh, mama, you not go; no more mama; what we do?" But her heart longed for her childhood's home, which she was never to reach. When eight miles from the end of the journey it was evident she was dying. She was carried to a sanatorium at Avon Springs, New York, and a very short time after leaving the train, on Saturday, July 31, she peacefully passed away.

In many respects she was a singularly gifted woman, yet one more humble it would be hard to find; and her life bore a testimony to these poor heathen girls which spoke more than words. They reverence her memory; "her children rise up and call her blessed."

Flowers May Fade.

Flowers may fade;
But true words truly spoken
Die not, but live,
Binding, as lovers' token,
Heart unto heart
In bonds by time unbroken.

Flowers may fade;
But loving deeds will linger,
Fragrant through tears,
Rosy beneath Death's finger;
God's wreath at last
To crown earth's tired singer.

Wild Olive Graft Mission.—The Shelter for Homeless Jews at 4, Vine-street, Minories, has been open during the winter months for the past eleven years. Thousands of poor Jewish sleepers have been sheltered. Dinner has been provided every week-day, and food found for them in the mission house on the Lord's day. Christian instruction is given, and discussion is always going on in the kitchen. The friend who has long stood by this Mission, and for the last few years paid the rent, is not now in a position to do so. If six friends will subscribe £10 per annum the place can be kept open; if not it must be closed. Address, Mr. Colin Young, as above.

KESWICK ADDRESSES.

"Stand Still."

1 Sam. ix. 25-27.

By Rev. S. A. SELWYN.

A GREAT crisis had come in the history of God's people. They had demanded a king, and, at the outset, it was not according to God's purpose that they should have an earthly king. As they went on with their demands, our loving Father gave them their desire; but when their prayer was answered it was soon found that they had made a great mistake. Saul was chosen to be the first king, and it was Samuel's duty to go and tell him so, and to anoint him as king.

Now, Samuel had a large and loving heart; so he took the keenest interest, not only in the people to whom God had sent him, but also in the young king to whom God had given him a special message. More than once he embraced opportunities for an earnest talk with Saul, feeling that so much depended upon him and his actions when called to the throne. Doubtless he felt that what Saul did depended upon what he was, and so he was determined to deliver to him all the message that God had given him.

We read that Samuel "communed with Saul upon the top of the house"—Samuel's house at Ramah. But first of all he told him to bid the servant go away, in order that he might have a quiet word with him, no one in between. So the servant "passed on," after which Samuel took a vial of oil, and poured it on the head of Saul, and kissed him, saying: "Is it not because the Lord hath anointed thee to be captain over his inheritance?" I think that many of us must feel somewhat in the position of the prophet. We, too, are desirous of standing still, and in our Master's name entreating the godly young men and women around us to listen while we deliver ourselves regarding the kingdom for which God is preparing us, and which, in a sense, He is giving us; and also while we declare the Lord's message regarding the anointing of the Holy Spirit.

We, too, thanking God for having called us away from home and business, would say to anxieties and cares,

"PASS ON."

Let ministers try to forget that they have anyone at home, or anything depending upon them, and let mothers and mistresses put their administrative difficulties on one side for a while, and stand still to hear the word of God. But "stand still" means much. The word "stand" is used in the sense of standing fast; moreover, there is a standing still which amounts to going back. We want to realise what the Lord will say to us. Look at the worldliness of the Church—the unconverted choirs and Sunday-school teachers, the unconverted ministers also, what about them? Is there not reason why we should stand still and wonder what is coming upon us? Look at the lack of zeal and enthusiasm in our churches—is not that enough to make us stand still? One sympathises with the infidel who, after eliciting from a professing Christian the assurance that he believed in heaven and hell, exclaimed, "Then, why don't you take off your coat and get to work, and save some of the souls that are in danger of being lost?" There is much too little of this taking off our coats and winning souls to Christ; a great deal more of sitting down and taking in all that the minister has to give us. Again, how little assurance of salvation there is in our people; and think of the number of churches in which no soul-winning is going on, or, anyhow, the very least. What is to happen to a church whose light has almost gone out? What can we do in face of such a condition of things? Let us look at Samuel's discourse to Saul.

First of all, note that Samuel requested attention. Let all the cares and anxieties of life be turned away for a while, that we may consider the Word of God. The discourse was about the kingdom, and the prophet wanted to tell Saul that God had chosen him to be the first king in Israel. Has God anything to tell us about the kingdom? We have been made kings and priests unto God, but there is not much of the intercession of the priest or the aggression of the king in us. To each one of us God has given a realm of a certain size, and He tells us to work for Him and win souls for Him. Do you not think that the reason why there is so little of this Christian kingship about us, and so little of its influence and power, is that we have in our hearts as we ought; or, having made him King, we are in the habit of attending to those commands that please us, but pooh-poohing those that we do not like? How can God give power to disobedient servants? That is how it is there are so many powerless pulpits and so many powerless men in them; and that is the reason why so many Sunday-school teachers go working on and on without visible results; and that is how it comes about that visitors continue knocking at doors and making hardly any real impression for Christ on the hearts of the people. Can God give power to men and women who are not qualified to receive it?

Then, while they communed on the top of the house Samuel told the king about the anointing. There is a very decided blessing which God gives to us when we are gathered together with one great desire in our hearts, whether at Keswick or anywhere else. There is a definite blessing to be received when God anoints for the first time with the Holy Spirit those men and women whom He is going to send forth to do his will. "Stand still" and think of this. Is your life what it ought to be, what God wants it to be, what God will make it to be, if you do not hinder Him? You have stood in your old place in the open air, or you have occupied your place in the pulpit, but for a long time. Is it not because there has been no anointing of the Holy Ghost? God has led me to many places; and alike in America, in West Africa, in India, and in my own land, the great need to-day is a fresh Pentecost; and whether they be young or old, rich or poor, learned or not knowing anything, if workers are anointed of God there will be great results of their ministry. We have come to seek this anointing; but there are conditions. What are they?

I believe God has to teach us much about what dying is—dying to sin and to the principle of self. This does not mean sometimes fighting and sometimes yielding; but it means what the Apostle said, when he wrote that he had been "crucified with Christ," and that his life was "hid with Christ in God." When a man is dead, whatever the devil may do—whether by trying to allure him into temptation, or by trying to terrorise him into sin—the result will be the same, no response. The Lord has not taught any of us all that we could know; but He has begun to teach us, and if we are ready to learn He will teach us more about "dying to sin." Is this not one of the things that we thought we knew theoretically; and yet we have never experienced it in our lives? But that is not all; there is also a living unto God. There must be a closing of the ear so that it does not hear Satan's voice; and a closing of the eye to things that are inimical to the spiritual sight.

The anointing Spirit seeks entrance; and says "Behold I stand at the door and knock." There are conditions of his coming in: "If any man"—that is like the "whosoever" of the Gospel—"open the door."

ARE WE WILLING TO OPEN?

What about the consequences? Can we afford to let Him in, to change our lives? By no means let us think it will make us popular with our congregations. When you are preaching with that anointing on your tongue and heart, up to a point people will swarm in to see the wonderful sight; but after a time they will swarm out. Then the people who were most regular will stop coming in the evening; they will say they "cannot stand it... only the morning now!" After a little while they will cease coming altogether, and for this reason—they know they will have to yield to the Holy Spirit if they stay; rather than do that they keep away! I do not say your church will be emptied; others will take the place of those who stay away. This is one of the results of our earnest ministry. "It is too stimulating," they will say, and they attend once a day, and at length keep away altogether. No; it will not make you popular to lie in the grave with the Lord Jesus Christ.

Let this be uppermost in your heart—what will please Him most, and bring greatest glory to Him, and there will be a great change in comparison with the old days. Once it was "What will fill my church, and bring the people?" Now it is, "What will bring most glory to Christ?" And did not the Lord mean us to be his witnesses at any cost? To this end, let us "stand still," and put on one side the cares of life; let us listen to the Lord's words about the kingdom — about whether we have taken Him to be our King; about the anointing which He will give us if we yield ourselves to Him; and about the mighty change which must be wrought in our lives and ministry if we receive his Spirit in fulness.

Influence of Christian Conduct.

By Rev. Dr. MOULE.

In 1 Peter ii. 12 these words are written: "Having your conversation honest among the Gentiles: that whereas they speak against you as evil-doers, they may by your good works, which they shall behold, glorify God in the day of visitation." One or two words may be said first of all on the phrase and wording of the passage. The word "conversation," I need hardly remind you, means conduct, the action of character in the up and down of life. It does not mean only talk, although, of course, it includes it. The word "honest," again, does not precisely point here to what we commonly mean by it, although, undoubtedly, that is in view. In the somewhat antiquated sense in which we here find it, the word means honourable and seemly, so that that which is good shall seem good, so that that which is right shall have cast around it the light and beauty of rightfulness. And then the word "behold" calls for notice. In the original it is a particular and remarkable word; it is one that would be used of a sight, a beholding, specially granted at close quarters, a sort of private view of something presented for minute inspection; and had there been microscopes in those days St. Peter might have illustrated his meaning by mentioning that instrument. The idea of the passage is an a sight of good works, conducted at close quarters, with not merely general impressions and large outlines, but details brought fully into view.

St. Peter is speaking of holy consistency for the Lord's sake in a very pointed way. He is addressing those who lived in the midst of the pagan world, who were sure to be observed as they went along. In the view of those about them the Christians had taken up with a new fanaticism, and the observers said: "We will see what it means, and watch what becomes of them. The new religion will surely do nothing for them but make them useless, visionary, unpractical, wild, and dreamy." Therefore the Apostle warns those to whom he writes that the very opposite will be the case because they have found the Lord, because the mysteries of the Gospel have been opened to them; they are to walk out of the secret place as people who will bear inspection in common life, and go along so that those who look upon them microscopically, from the point of view of the world, shall have no ground for blame or condemnation, but that the sight of them shall, on the contrary, bring glory to God. To those who, in a sense, know not God, their conduct shall that God is; and to those who have a conviction that God is, it shall bring home the thought that God is glorious, and that it must be delightful to know Him.

The Apostle indicates a profound connection between personal purity and public example; "abstain from fleshly lusts that war against the soul," that the Gentiles may by your good works glorify God. We must ever begin within, where the microscopic inspection is not of man but of God, where the Father "seeth in secret," where the Judge standeth before the door.

As I have said, the Apostle is speaking of holy consistency in common life, not to the personal credit of the Christian, but for the glory of his Lord. The propagation of Christianity by conduct runs through the atmosphere of these epistles; it is remarkable how little they say of the propagation of the Gospel by universal evangelisation; although they take this for granted. I think there should be no Christian who is not an articulate witness for Christ, but more and more do I see the importance of Christianity being propagated by conduct—that the Lord Jesus Christ should be commended above all things by Himself being manifest in his people, so that the world may see and give praise to God. Let me remind you of one beautiful evidence that the pleading of the Apostle for was not in vain in the earliest age of the Church. There is much to deplore and perplex in the early chapters of Church history, but there are also some splendid passages, and one was unearthed from a long entombment in the discovery of the "Apology" of Aristides, a man who seems to have been a powerful observer from the outside, and was by the grace of God drawn to be himself inside. This Apology, that is, Vindication of Christianity, was addressed to the Roman Emperor Antoninus about the year 130 after Christ, and it contains a description of the Christian life as a man of the world would have a chance of observing it. It is indeed a splendid testimony of the Gospel's power in the life of Christian people.

Aristides tells us of the truthfulness, and the purity, and the brotherly kindness which he found to characterise the rank and file of the Christian community. He does not speak of rare and scarce phenomena, but of things that were observable wherever he found an entry into Christian homes. The holy purity of Christian women in human life—there was as yet no idea of the monastery or a retreat from life's duties: holiness was seen in its beauty and glory in the home—and the love of masters and mistresses for the souls of their then pagan bondservants, and the efforts they made to bring them to Christ, are particularly mentioned. He speaks of the unimpeachable honesty of Christians in dealings of trust and other transactions, and the general fidelity shown in their lives; of their enjoyment of the present beauty of the world, which God makes, as he says wonderfully, to flow forth because of their obedience to his will; and he ends with saying, what to a pagan of the second century must, indeed, have been a wonder of wonders, that their deaths were full of light, and their funerals like processions of triumph. Aristides applied the microscope, and saw and glorified God. He was quite certain the Christians had found the Supreme, and stood where all the philosophers had sought to climb and could only find an abstraction. Where they stood he found an Eternal Person, an eternal heart, and an eternal hope.

Many a touching incident of the power of the propagation of Christianity by conduct arises in the mind. When the first missionaries of the C.M.S. landed in China, about 1848, they laboured and learned the language, but it was a good while before they so much as got an inquirer. At length, after they had been working about two years, one waited upon them. He said he had not heard anything of what the missionaries had come to teach, but he had been watching them. Unobserved, the man had been getting private views of what the missionaries were, and ascertaining what they were in the home before their native servants, what they were in common intercourse on week-days. He had found them out. He was satisfied that the Lord they taught about was in them of a truth, and that it was worth going to them.

The late Mr. Leupolt told me that somewhere in the Punjab, when he was preaching in a bazaar, he was angrily interrupted when speaking of the total depravity of man. The interrupter was a Mohammedan, who maintained that there was at least one exception to the denunciation, at least one person without sin, and that was someone whom he knew—in fact, the wife of his English master. With all the heat of an Oriental, the man declared that and he went on to detail the features of her life, relating how she would steal away from observation to pray with her native servants, and especially mentioning the love that lay behind the prayers, and gave to them all their power. Mr. Leupolt asked the man whether he had had opportunity of discovering the lady's opinion regarding herself; and the man said that therein he was greatly puzzled, for she continually spoke of herself as a poor, unworthy sinner, who owed everything to the mercy of God, in whom, she said, they would have to find what she herself had found. The man had been observing the lady, and, though not led himself to Christ, he had been impressed by her reality and that the fulness of God was in the life of his mistress.

What is the message of this word to us? For one thing, assuredly, it has a glorious cheer and stimulus. I would speak of the magnificent encouragement of the passage, and ask you to think of the idea of life it presents to us, the real life, the common life, the life in modern surroundings, lived not in the dream of the past or the future, but in the prose of the present; and it may be that in such a life, to the close observer, we shall "adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour." That expression was used by the Apostle Paul of his beloved brother, a Christian slave in a Cretan household. Notwithstanding the unfavourable surroundings, the Apostle sets it before the Christians to be holy, not so much with reference to any eternal law, as in view of the result in their adorning the doctrine of Christ—making the teaching of Him who had saved them beautiful and attractive, perhaps to a cruel or inconsiderate master, or to some man who believed in or out of his sight; to show those around that not only is there something, but it is beautiful. What was true of the Christian slave in the Cretan household is true of us to-day. Shall we not get up in the morning with this as something to live for, and lie down at night humbly trusting and thanking God for having used us to send one glint of the light of his glory into another's heart? If we that are here assembled, on being dispersed to our varied homes and walks and spheres, could for this year 1898 be such Christians as Aristides moved among in the year 130, we shall not have met here in vain—if by the grace of God, by the God of grace, we shall henceforth so live that as from radiating centres blessing shall flow from us, all over the land, and for all the days of the year.

When we have done with a time like this, and gone home—to the parish and the business, the sphere of influence and the home, with many undertakings pressing upon busy lives, and temptations besetting leisure lives—shall we then so live that God shall be glorified in the day of visitation because of good works beheld in us? In

THE GOOD WORKS OF OUR TONGUES

—are we careful about the tongue? I believe there is nothing about which Christians are more tempted to be careless, or about which God may be more glorified. Not that we are always to be, as the world says, "talking religion." We have a great many things that must be talked about that are not definitely and directly religious; but there is no one of these things that can be talked about without an opportunity being afforded, sooner or later, for the fact to appear that the tongue is in the Master's power. Do our words about others glorify God now, or will they in the day of visitation? Parents, do your children hear you talk down your neighbours? Young Christians, in the full fire of earnestness, are you careful that nothing ever comes from your lips which is rough, and harsh, and cruel of the name of others?

Are we careful about the wholesomeness of our words? Do we avoid the topic that can do no good? Do we do the negative good of a blessed silence when something might so easily be passed on that would stain another's soul, or blight another's name? And our habits in common things—will they glorify God? Are they brought continually to our King to be made what He would have them be, that they may adorn his doctrine, and that his name may be glorified?

In the dealings of man with man on the common platform of life, will the Christian bear to be found out? There is a dreadful finding out, and a grand and beautiful one. A terrible finding out if, profession being brought to the test of week-day practices, it is found that we are not true to our Master; a blessing finding out when the man who thought you a mere talker discovers, with surprise and delight, that you mean what you say of yourself, and are living it out in Another's power. Dear old Simeon of Cambridge was found out like that. When my father was an undergraduate, in about 1820, he was told never to go to Simeon's church, as he talked loud and lived a bad life. But at length and honoured as an indefatigable doer of good; and when it came to burying him there never was such a funeral before or since. The town was there, and the University was there; they found him out, and honoured him as one who toiled in secret to know his Master better, and to have the power of doing his will straight from Him.

By the grace of God, let us be found out. The words are horrible when we stand aside for five minutes from Christ. Have you never felt yourself to be such that it would have been fearful to be found out? Let Christ dwell in our hearts; let us have the faith that trusts Jesus only, and is not afraid of his coming in and finding us out. May this be our intense humiliation, and our blessed stimulus and hope, until it becomes our life's pure ambition that Christ's doctrine may be magnified in us and adorned by us. It cannot be made greater, yet it is to be magnified; it cannot be made more beautiful, yet it must be adorned! Those who see no beauty in Him may yet be led to desire Him, as He looks out of the sinner's life and is thus shown to be beautiful. So be it, until, in our infinitely lower measure, we may, if it please Him, yield up our breath with the thankful thought that through his mercy we have trod a little in his steps, "I have glorified Thee on the earth, and finished the work which Thou gavest me to do."

The Self Life.

By Rev. CHARLES INWOOD.

In Gen. xxxii. 27, we read, "What is thy name? And he said, Jacob." From no point of view was Jacob an ordinary man. He was clever, ambitious, resourceful, masterful, successful, and religious too. From a moral standpoint there was much that was mean, and sad, and humbling in his character. He was a supplanter, a deceiver, one on whom people could not depend. There was, throughout his life, a disposition to subordinate all the interests of other people to his own selfish and personal ends, so much so that we find him playing false with the dearest ties of friendship and affection, trading upon the confidence and trust of others to serve his own ends. From many points of view he stands before us as a man despicable in the extreme.

Yet our kinship with Jacob is more close than most of us imagine. As surely as there was this awful warp in him, so, alas! there is this awful warp in us. We may not like to own this, but we are far on towards realising fulness of blessing when with broken hearts we do own it. Has your heart never played false to conscience or duty or God in moments of supreme spiritual importance? Mine has! And even when conscience has pleaded as with the voice of God and for God Himself, this has gone over to the foe and left conscience alone with God. Let this fact sink deep into our souls until we are humbled before God. I cannot throw stones at Jacob, for Jacob is in me.

Jacob was in a tight corner at this time, a condition which he had brought upon himself by wrongdoing. There he was left alone with a burden pressing upon his heart, alone with difficulties which he could not himself remove or overcome. In his hour of extremity, in an unknown guise, a man, the Man, the Angel of the Covenant, met him. Very often the tight corners in our Christian lives are God's opportunities for dealing with the self-will that marks our lives. God does not leave a man in the lurch when he brings himself there by unfaithfulness. In the solitudes of life, God meets him. When we are, as was Jacob, full of plans and schemes, and ready to work them out, God grips us and an awful struggle begins. When the Man, the Angel of the Covenant, met Jacob, and laid his hand upon him, that was an arrest which with all his power Jacob could not shake off. There was an awful battle, and in the agonies of the strife on that fateful night heaven and earth met, and Jacob felt that they did. Some of us do not realise even yet what an awful power self is in us. It will fight to the death for its reputation, its freedom, its authority; it will defy and resist to the uttermost whatsoever or whosoever seeks to limit its authority or its power. In Jacob's case, and alas! in ours, the intensity and persistence of the struggle discovers and measures the awful malignity and strength of the self-will which is within us.

Notice for a moment the touch. The Man, the Angel of the Covenant, laid his hand upon Jacob and wrestled with him. Jacob had not been conquered before, and he would not submit now; he persisted in wrestling, and so the stranger and shrivelled it up. That meant loss of power—executive power. It is not the same sinew that God touches in every one of us—for the simple reason that the self life may draw its power or force in you in one direction, in me in another direction. The wisdom of our loving God comes in just here, that He knows the sinew that must be touched; and He touches the particular one that will make it impossible for us to obey the commands of the self life within us.

If you say, I am strong in such a point, that is where God must lay his finger—it may be your business prosperity or capacity, your literary gift or intellectual power, your reputation or your success in so-called Christian work. God will touch that very point, that sinew, from which you are drawing the power to fight with Him, wrestle with Him, or dispute his gracious and loving will. The touch was the work of a moment, but the result was lifelong. One touch of the finger of the angel of the covenant, and Jacob was powerless to continue wrestling. And, so far as I can see, that always means pain and shame.

There seems to be no such thing as painless sanctification. Where God brings his hand down upon that touch brings pain, and shame, and grief, and agony, such as you have never known before. If God is laying his hand on you, and you feel the pain of it going through your souls, do not shrink from it, do not be discouraged by it. There was as much grace and wisdom in the touch that shrivelled the sinew in Jacob as was afterwards displayed when the Angel said, "Thou shalt no more be called Jacob; thou shalt be called Israel."

YOUR STUBBORN SELF-WILL,

After the touch, what? It is sad to think that many people seem to receive the touch, and nothing more. The most critical moment in the discipline of deliverance is when the touch of God has done its work with the sinew, and we lie helpless and hopeless, and forced to acknowledge to ourselves that at last we are utterly beaten. I will tell you why. We have lost the power to wrestle, but not the desire to wrestle; so we lie down with the shrunken sinew, and say, "I cannot, but I would if I could." We become sullen, angry, rebellious, sceptical, cherishing towards God a hate that is too deep to express, as if saying, "I am beaten, but I will die game." How many young people have been tempted in this way, having heard from the devil the whisper, "Curse God and die!" It is a critical moment, and there comes the inquiry, "Shall I give in at last, shall I acknowledge that I am beaten—that I am wrong and God is right? Shall I yield to Him, whom I could not conquer? Shall I cling to the Man who has touched the sinew on my thigh, making it impossible for me to wrestle any longer?" If in that moment a man says, "No; I will not cling," he cannot be delivered; but if he says, "I will cling—" the power to wrestle is gone, but the power to cling is left—then victory is assured.

It is here that the weeping took place; not the weeping of rebellious, passionate tears, but of tears of shame and of a heart wounded and broken before God. Have you ever thought how large a place tears sometimes fill in this matter of sanctification? Sometimes they are the first indication of victory, that God has won in the conflict, and man in his self-will has acknowledged God as conqueror. While Jacob was clinging in this way there came the question by the Angel of the Covenant, "What is thy name?" A day or two before he would have answered, proudly and scornfully, "Why, Jacob!" Up to that hour that name was a synonym for strength; but now, in the light of the revelation of God's face, he had and his heart, and it was now a synonym for meanness, a confession of inward falseness, that he was a rogue, a cheat, and a deceiver. One can imagine how the tears started afresh when the Angel put the question to Jacob; and yet Jacob said, "Yes, my name is Jacob, a name burdened with so much that it is sinful and self-willed."

I believe God is putting the same question to some of us now, and He is waiting for the answer. Tell the truth when you reply, and although the tears scale your face, and although shame burns your lips, and though you endure the agony of a breaking heart, say, "My name is Jacob. I thought I was a good Christian and an earnest worker, but I am nothing but Jacob, false and full of sin." That confession was a final proof that Jacob had ceased to be Jacob, and had become Israel instead. He had a changed heart, and might now have a changed name to express the fact. Think of it—no longer Jacob but Israel, "a prince with God," one having power with God and with man. He had formerly had power of a certain kind with man, but now it was power with man because it was power with God. And those in whom God may do a like work will also have power with man, and will render service which God will acknowledge. "Thou shalt be called Israel, for thou hast power with God and with man."

Do you wonder that Jacob called the place Peniel, saying, "I have seen the face of God"? That confession was not only a humbling one, but it was transfiguring. What God did for Jacob in one moment He can do for any of us if we fling ourselves in all our helplessness upon Jesus Christ. If we are to have deliverance from self, it can only be by clinging to Jesus. And as you cling to Him say from the heart:—

> Thou can'st o'ercome this heart of mine,
> Thou wilt victorious prove,
> For everlasting strength is thine,
> And everlasting love.

And you will go home, and, forgetting the crowd at Keswick and the messengers, you will say, "I call it Peniel. I have seen the face of God."

Trust Also.

"Commit thy way unto the Lord: Trust Him; and He shall bring it to pass."—Psalm xxxvii. 5.

"Commit thy way unto the Lord and trust!"
Ah! it is here we fail. We give the wheel
Of our small bark to Him: but then we thrust
Our hand upon His hand,
And dare to stand
Beside our Master, lest He wreck our keel.

"Commit thy way unto the Lord and trust!"
Leave all to Him: believe He knows thy course,
Thy dangers, and thy safety—all—then just Abandon all to Him:
So shalt thou skim
Borne briskly on before the Spirit's force.

"Commit thy way unto the Lord and trust!"
There is an "also" we too oft forget,
And so are plagued and worried. Oh! we must "Trust also," then our soul
Shall cease to roll
In restlessness and reason and regret.

Commit! and when committed trust his word!
Has He not said that He will bring thee through?
Trust his strong arm; and when wild storms are heard
Believe He holds them still
By his strong will.
Trust Him, the Wise, the Faithful, and the True.

Trust Him to manage all that thou dost now
Commit to Him the ship, the sails, the sea,
The sailors, thy strange crew. And ask not how
He will do all for thee,
But trustful be.
Lie down and rest from anxious worry free.

INTERNATIONAL S.S. LESSONS.

August 14.

"THE SHUNAMMITE'S SON."—2 Kings iv. 25-37.
GOLDEN TEXT: "Cast thy burden upon the Lord and He shall sustain thee."—Ps. lv. 22.

SERIES of stories about Elisha. Important, because of the lessons they teach.

THE SHUNAMMITE'S KINDNESS.

She was well-to-do, and as there were no hotels in Palestine she would receive visitors. Bu the prophet often passed that way on his teaching expeditions. Built him a room on the flat top of the house, which he could reach by outer stairs. This was his home when he came to Shunem.

Hospitality was one of the chief virtues in the East, but this consideration and sacrifice were remarkable.

She sought no reward, and when it was offered by the prophet it was refused. There came into her life from God a son—the greatest of all blessings in the estimation of the Jews.

She received "a prophet in the name of a prophet," i.e., because of his holy work, and she received "a prophet's reward."

THE DARKENED HOME.

The child grew to boyhood. He is in the harvest field, and is stricken by the sun. Taken home, but he dies in his mother's arms. She took him up to the prophet's room and laid him on the bed.

The benefits of sorrow like this—

(1) The mother brings her dead child to God's representative. She may not have thought of bringing it while it was alive.

(2) It would help her to sympathise with all mothers who suffer so.

(3) She herself would be brought nearer to God. Trouble has this effect on most of us. God welcomes us. "Call upon Me in the day of trouble."

WHERE TO CARRY CARE.

The Shunammite knows where to carry her care. Elisha was representative of God to her.

Lessons.—No Delay.—She goes off to seek the prophet at once. We so often try to bear our burdens ourselves, and last of all think of God.

Her Faith (30).—She believed the prophet could help her. God always rewards faith in Himself. See story, 2 Kings iv. 1-7: "According to thy faith so be it unto thee."

Teacher should multiply Bible examples of rewarded faith. The same condition and blessing are for us to-day.

A Mother's Pleading (27, 28).—Seems extravagant. Love is always so. Blessed lad who has a good mother to plead for him before the throne of grace may well be proud of a godly mother.

THE FAILURE OF GEHAZI (31).

Salute.—Oriental salutations very elaborate—would sometimes occupy an hour. Serious delay.

Gehazi failed because he was not in such communication with God.

Illustration.—Non-conductors of electricity—like glass. So it needs a good man to conduct God's power of healing, sympathy, inspiration.

The staff was useless in the hands of Gehazi. It depends on the man, not on his class. Not all priests are conductors. Many laymen are. True to-day of Christ working through good men.

> The healing of his seamless dress
> Is by our beds of pain,
> We touch Him in life's throng and press,
> And we are whole again.

ELISHA'S SUCCESS (33-35).

Elisha prayed.—"The effective, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." If Gehazi had succeeded it would have taken the glory from God, and given it to the staff. Power came in answer to prayer. He stretched himself upon him. God always uses means. This method produced a warmth in the body of the child, that made the blood flow and the heart do its work. The sneezing were the first signs of restored respiration.

So good men carry life to-day, and impart it to those who are spiritually and morally dead.

Joy comes not through material gifts, but through healing sympathy. God still works through men for men. We should strive to purify our hearts and keep them pure that we may become channels of God's mercy and power.

Child Life in Heathen Lands.—VI.

SCHOOL-LIFE! I am not quite sure that all my readers think school-life a very happy time. There are so many difficult things to learn—arithmetic, euclid, algebra, Latin, chemistry, botany, history, geography, German and French, and very much besides. Sometimes I know you long for the holidays, and plan excursions and picnics, rambles and visits, anything almost to get away for a little while from school-books and masters and mistresses, and enjoy freedom, liberty.

Well! the holidays are here now, and may they be the brightest and happiest you have ever had!

But while you are enjoying yourselves—delighting in the music of the sea breaking upon the shingle, or a scramble across the slippery rocks, or a sail over the splashing and dancing waves, will you think sometimes of the school-days of Indian children?

In Madras there is a training home and high school for native Christian girls, who are either orphans, or converts from heathenism, or are the daughters of native Christians. There are about one hundred boarders in it, and thirty day scholars. Look at their faces! The skin is a pretty brown colour, the features are regular. Their hair is always jet black, parted down the middle and fixed in a knot at the back like a "grown-up" English girl. They have a habit of thrusting their pens and pencils through this knot of hair, and in this fashion they carry them to school. Their eyes are beautifully dark, with long silken eyelashes, giving them more the appearance of dreamy-eyed Italians.

Now about their hands. The palms are generally of a lighter shade of brown than the rest of their bodies, and the fingers are long and tapering. A thimble—for they learn needlework—that would fit an English lady's little finger is about the largest that is needed for the middle finger of a native girl, or even a woman.

And their dress? These school-girls hardly ever wear more than three garments—a cotton jacket to cover the upper part of the body, a print skirt, generally of the brightest colour, pink or green, reaching down to the ankles, and pleated all round into a tape band. Besides the jacket and skirt all the bigger girls wear a loose upper cloth, thrown over the left shoulder and twisted round the waist. A child never wears a short frock, so that a number of girls with their hair knotted up and long skirts look like so many

OLD-FASHIONED LITTLE WOMEN.

Just peep into this dormitory. It is half-past five in the morning, and the bell has just rung for them to get up! But there are no beds, soft and white with dainty coverlets. What a curious place it is! No wash-stands or basins, such as you have, only a long line of boxes up each side of the room and a row of mats upon the floor. Each girl sleeps on a grass mat, and when she gets up in the morning she rolls it up and carries it to the back verandah, where the mats are kept during the day-time.

The children start work at ten in the morning, go on till one o'clock, have an interval for dinner, and then take lessons again till five.

But dinner! No knives and forks are used. They eat only with the fingers of the right hand, and the process is very simple, if not quite clean. They mix up the rice and gravy with their fingers, squeeze it into a ball, and then throw it into their mouths without allowing it to touch their lips. When the meal is finished each girl rises, and washes her own plate, and lays it aside for the next meal.

You will be glad to know that not a few of these High School girls love God and regard Jesus Christ as their own Friend. Many of them are known to retire to quiet places in the garden at recreation time, and there hold silent prayer with God. At Scripture reading they are very quick. At morning and evening prayer each child repeats a text; one of the elder girls reads the chapter, and then two or three of them engage in prayer.

You can understand, therefore, that although school life at Madras is not altogether like school life in our dear home-land, at least these girls are learning how to be true, and brave, and good, how to live real Christian lives. And are you not thankful that they, as well as yourselves, through the great sacrifice of God's Son, will find a home in the great Father's house in due time, and dwell with Him there world without end?

How "Kwesi Quainoo" came to England,

DEAR children, I am a native of the Gold Coast colony on the west coast of Africa. My parents are Christians, so when I was a very little boy I went to a mission school, and was taught that "Jesus loves me."

I wanted to study so as to be able to tell my people about the love of God, but as my father could not afford to keep me longer at school I had to leave. I went to one of my brothers who was a telegraph clerk at Accra, and he got work for me in the Customs office; I forgot to tell you that the Gold Coast is a British colony. My work was to sweep the floor every morning, clean the basins, the inkpots, and the tables, put good blotting-paper on the tables, and run errands. But I did not forget I wanted to study, and every day prayed to God to show me some way that I might get a good education, so that I might be useful to my people and tell them the "old, old story." I made up my mind to write to someone in England, for I had heard there were good people who like to do something for boys who want to do good to their own people.

I told my brother about it, but he laughed at me, because if I wanted to go to England I would have to pay £25 or £30 for my passage, besides getting good thick suits and boots, as England was a cold place; and all these cost money, and we had none. But, I said to myself, "God has got all the money in the world, and everything in the world belongs to Him; I am his child, and I will pray to Him for money." So I went on praying. One day I saw an old almanack on the wall in the office, with names of statesmen and noblemen in England, and I made up my mind to write to one of them. I picked out two names, one was the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, and the other Lord Coleridge, Chief Justice of England. I wrote to each of them, but there was another difficulty; I had no money, and each letter would cost 2½d.; so I prayed to God for money. The next morning one of the Supervisors of Customs called me and gave me 2½d. in coppers, saying it was change I had brought from the Post Office, and that I might keep it. I thanked him and went away full of joy at the answer to my prayer. Now, you see I did not ask the man for money, yet he gave me

JUST WHAT I WANTED.

I bought a stamp, and fixed it on the letter to Lord Coleridge, and put it in the letter-hole. A steamer came, bringing me the reply, and its contents were from Lord Coleridge's secretary, and said "his lordship had received my letter, and thanked me for it, but he could not do what I asked as he had many claims upon him." I was very sorry, but I said to myself, We were taught at school "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again." So I made another special prayer, and wrote again to his lordship. I received an answer in about two months' time, saying that inquiries were being made to see if they could get me into a place. That was nice, wasn't it? I had some questions to answer, so I wrote another letter, and then I had another answer saying that my letter had been forwarded to the principal of the Congo Training Institute at Colwyn Bay, North Wales, and that the committee had agreed to admit me as a student, and I would be able to come without paying.

The day before the steamer sailed one of my brother's friends said to him, "I have heard that the Chaplain has been searching for some boy who has written a letter to one of the chief men in England, but he did not find him, and now he has gone back to England." I was walking with them, and my brother said, "This is the boy." Nearly everybody in the office knew about it, but none of them had ever thought I could write such a letter to such a man. The Comptroller was very glad, and said, "I hope God will bless you, and make you useful to your people."

We reached Liverpool on a Sunday, but I did not land till the Monday, when the cook came and said he was to take me to the office of the company. The gentleman in charge there telegraphed to his lordship in London that I had arrived, and he telegraphed to send me on to Colwyn Bay. Then Lord Coleridge wrote to me with his own hand, starting "My dear Boy." Now look! one of the best gentlemen in your country calling me his dear boy—and a black boy, too! It was because I am a child of God, and God is no respecter of persons, and his lordship was a Christian with the love of God in his heart. He sent me some money for my pocket, and I went and spent Christmas with him at Ottery St. Mary, in Devonshire, in the same year. I wish I had time to tell you how kind they were to me, just as if I were their own boy. One day Lady Coleridge asked me if I had a watch, and when I said "No," she gave me a very nice one. I remember the morning when I was leaving them, his lordship came to my room, and putting his hands on my shoulders, said, "I am sorry you are going away, my dear boy." I hope you will come and see us again; but if I do not see you again, may God bless you and make you useful to your people in Africa."

His lordship is dead now, but I am sure I shall meet him in heaven, for he was a real Christian man, and when I go back to my own people to help them I shall always thank my heavenly Father that He put it into Lord Coleridge's heart to be the first means of helping me to do so.

I hope my story will show you how God our Father cares for us if we trust in Him, and how He will give us what is good for us if we ask Him.

Will you please all pray for me that while I am being trained in this country to be a doctor, I may do everything to God's glory only, so that He may use me to do his work? God bless you all!

Kwesi Afran Oboami Quainoo.

[Would any of you like to help Kwesi to complete his education? If so, send me what you can spare, and I will forward it.]

The second list of No. 132 is an unusually short one. This is owing to so many of my "nephews" and "nieces" not reading the whole of 1 Cor. i. 2.

Nellie Sery.—Thank you for your letter. I think it better to devote the whole time to questions set for you, and this quarter I am not counting a paper correct if there is a single mistake, even if extra answers are given.

Corbet Browne.—Yes, you can send all your papers in one envelope.

McLeod N. Straight.—I could not count you correct, as for two answers you only gave references.

Zoe.—Am so glad you are joining. Next time your name will be in the "correct" list I hope.

Myra Webb.—References are insufficient, please write out the answers as well.

Lilian McMurtry.—The new quarter commenced at No. 130, so that if you get nine papers correct you will be eligible for the next competition.

Vera Dickinson.—Look in this week's list of "Seaside Services,' and you will find what you want to know.

Stanley V. Boxer.—Please number each answer to correspond with that of each question.

Annie E. Moule.—Will you let me know why you enclosed a stamp this week?

Agnes M. Sterry.—I quite understand why your paper was delayed.

The Blackpool Corporation has twice been refused a licence for a hotel it proposed to build, with a view to clear £5,000 or so by the transaction; but as the town is to be allowed to set up a Bench of its own strenuous efforts are being made to get those who favour the speculation appointed as magistrates. The churches and temperance people are utterly opposed to such municipal trafficking in licences.

Manchester Sunday-School Union has opened a new seaside home at Pollux Gate, Fairhaven, Lytham. The intention is to send thither Sunday scholars from Manchester who require change of air, but not medical treatment, for a fortnight's holiday. There is accommodation in the building for twenty scholars at one time, which represents a fortnight's residence for 260 scholars during the summer. The cost of board is to be met by the schools which send children, and the working expenses, amounting to about £150, will, it is hoped, be privately subscribed.

Beyrout Schools.—The work of Miss Taylor's Schools for Moslems, Druses, and Jews at Beyrout has grown on her hands during the six months ending June 30, while unfortunately the funds placed at her disposal have rather decreased. There are in the school some sixty pupils, who are lodged, fed, and clothed. There are also Miss Taylor and her three (now reduced to two) European lady assistants, several native teachers, and servants. Outside there are the schools at Ras-Beyrout, at Ghareefy, and at Remalliah, with considerable numbers of scholars. There are now two native Bible women visiting along with the ladies in native homes. There are mothers' meetings and other evangelistic gatherings. There are many poor who had to be helped with food and clothing. This has cost over £340 for the six months, and there was on June 30 a deficiency of £43. The general work goes on with much encouragement. The blessing of the Master is evidently on all the work, and it only needs to be better known to draw forth sufficient support.

Oxford Letter.

[By Our Own Correspondent.]

A course of lectures to clergymen arranged by the new Principal of St. David's College, Lampeter (Rev. L. C. J. M. Bebb), was brought to a close this week. The lectures have been most helpful. Among the subjects were "The Early Chapters of Genesis," "Studies in the Reformation," "Teaching of the Old and New Testaments on the Righteousness of God," and a paper on St. Andrew's Brotherhood. The last was most practical. The Society has taken deep root in America, and is doing much to stimulate active service in the churches. An earnest appeal was made, urging the duty of each Christian to be an aggressive missionary.

An interesting gathering was held on Monday week in connection with the Magdalen-road Mission Hall Sunday School. Mr. Clifford, well known in Oxford as a devoted worker, was able to report a growing work among the young. We are pleased to record the evident blessing which is following the quiet work in this corner of the city.

The claims of the S.P.G. were advocated at a meeting held on Thursday at Wadham College, Rev. H. E. Clayton presiding. Rev. J. W. Wright, of the Cambridge Mission to Delhi, was the deputation, and his address will not easily be forgotten. Speaking of the English residents in India, he urged that while they lived such a selfish, worldly life the work of evangelising the natives was greatly retarded. Quoting Rudyard Kipling's words that people going out to India left the ten commandments this side the Suez Canal, he said residence in India for any length of time would confirm the statement. Pressing home the spiritual needs of our countrymen in India, the speaker contended that our life at home was a selfish one, notwithstanding the increased missionary interest. If a hundred left the home Church for India to-morrow, England would be a thousand times the richer in grace for the gift. The difficulties of English chaplains in India and the importance of their work were emphasised by Mr. Wright.

At a meeting on Monday week, at the Pembroke-street Chapel, a welcome was given to the new pastor, Rev. J. T. Stead, who commenced work on Sunday. Rev. J. Dann, speaking on behalf of the Nonconformists of the city, gave a helpful word to pastor and people. He appealed for sympathy and support from the latter, and wished Mr. Stead much blessing in his new work. The latter, in his reply, pleaded for love in their mutual relations.

The committee of the Oxford and District Sunday-school Union invited fifty of the foreign delegates attending the World's Sunday-school Convention to spend a day in Oxford. The invitation was accepted, and on Monday a very happy day was spent in visiting the interesting parts of the city and in brotherly communion. There was a short conference held in the hall of the Y.M.C.A., after tea, and the speeches showed that the visit had been deeply appreciated by the friends interested in Sunday-school work.

Evangelisation Society.—Mr. John H. Cooke, of this Society, has visited Lydd with tent No. 19, and for a month has held nightly services. The Christian workers rallied round him, and the interest has been well sustained. The Gospel has been faithfully and lovingly preached, and souls have been quickened. At the praise meeting one after another spoke of blessing received or of decision for Christ. The military friends participated in the good things set forth.

Soldiers' Institute, Sandgate.—Since this institute has occupied premises in the Broadway expectation has been exceeded in the visits paid by soldiers to their "Home"; and many a passer-by is attracted by the hearty singing at its services. There has been a constant change in the provisional battalion, from which most of the regular attendants come, and no sooner have a few come together than they have been scattered, some to other home stations, some abroad. But so the "good news" is spread; and the true Christian soldier proves to be the best missionary to his comrades, while consistent life in barracks has untold power for good. Secretary, Mr. F. P. Moore, 52, Guildford-street, Folkestone.

The Student Movement.

THE annual conference of the British College Christian Union, in which the Student Volunteer Missionary Union co-operates, is now being held at Ripon, in Yorkshire. This is a more representative and more largely attended conference than any of those held in the past. The students arrived last Saturday. Among the speakers who have promised to address meetings are Mr. T. G. Alvarez, Mrs. Bishop, Dr. Greig, of Manchuria, Rev. Wright Hay, Rev. F. B. Meyer, Mr. J. R. Mott, and Dr. W. W. White, of Chicago.

The first address was given by Mr. Wright Hay on Saturday evening. The keynote of what he said was that the presence of God in his servant's heart, bringing peace and spiritual power, can only be realised if we obey his command personally to win men to serve Jesus Christ. The evangelisation of the world in this generation would be an accomplished fact if each Christian lived simply the normal life of obedience to Christ's clear commands.

Dr. White has spoken four times. On Sunday afternoon he began what is really a series of addresses on Bible study. He gave us an example of the wonderful results that are obtained if we concentrate our attention on one book, and study it with scientific accuracy. He chose the Gospel of St. John, and drew out of it several special points to appeal to any who find a belief in Christ difficult. He showed that Christ's claims are based on evidence, not on explanation. It is our part to weigh the evidence, and to begin with that which we more readily believe, and go quite honestly wherever that leads us, never forgetting that truth must be studied in relation and not in the abstract.

In the evening Dr. White gave an example of how the man who longs for victory over temptation may find the way of deliverance, as well as that of salvation, by honest study of the Word of God. He took the Epistle to the Romans as an illustration of the method; and that very evening the Holy Spirit was present, convincing those who heard of sin, righteousness, and judgment in a way as clear to the spiritual eye as anything ever is to the physical. Those who were there will know now, if they did not before, that to-day God can still make his presence as really felt, by his Holy Spirit, as when He was seen of men on earth.

On Monday morning the same speaker illustrated an intelligent study of the Bible by drawing from the Epistle to the Hebrews how clearly the author argued to prove what he thought of Jesus. The Epistle might be summed up as an earnest appeal not to let the good be the enemy of the best. The "old" was good, but the new is better. We have set forth in the Epistle that in Christ we have a better Revelation, a better High Priest, a better ritual, and offering better life-motives. Then the speaker passed on to supplement his address of the evening before by pointing out the secret of Christ's victory over temptation, though He was "tempted in all things like as we are."

Later in the morning Dr. White gave an address on various methods that may be pursued in privately studying the Word of God. In short, the keynote of the Conference so far is, "Through the Bible to Christ, and through Christ to God."

Kensal Town Medical Mission.—One feature of the past year's work has been a largely increased attendance of patients on the Tuesday and Friday afternoons, when attendance is given at 21, Appleford-road, Kensal-road, W. In addition, 250 surgical cases requiring daily dressing have received attention at "the Cottage" each morning. A large number of maternity cases have involved extra expense in a second nurse. Many touching and encouraging stories could be told of people helped in soul and body. The Home of Rest at Herne Bay is much used during the summer and autumn months, and proves of great benefit to many who would otherwise be unable to get a needed change; but special donations for this purpose are much needed. Miss E. C. Thompson is hon. sec.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

"Breaking of Bread."

Dear Sir,—Your correspondent, "A Student," in his letter to the Christian of July 28, raises questions of great importance, because they affect the Truth of God, and he rightly applies the test of the Word of God to the statements of "a fellow-believer."

I deal only with the second paragraph (B), "That only those agreeing in every detail of belief could Scripturally partake" together at the breaking of bread. This appears to me to lack any support whatever from the Scriptures, and even to be in opposition to such passages as Rom. xiv. and xv., 1 Cor. iii., Heb. v., and Phil. iii.

Is the Church of God a place for those of full age only? Is it not a place for new-born babes also? (1 Peter ii. 2). Whence our Lord's charge to Peter (John xxi), "Feed My lambs," "Feed My sheep," if it were otherwise?

Unless the ground and principles of the Church of God be abandoned, I do not know any other rule than that which was followed in apostolic times. Then a believer's standing was "according to the faith of God's elect, and the acknowledging of the truth which is after godliness," and not knowledge or attainment in the things of God.

These are difficult times, I know, but no difficulties can alter the ground of reception into the Church of God; and if it is not the Church of God that people are received into, what is it, and what is it worth?

"Wherefore receive ye one another as Christ also received us to the glory of God" (Rom. xv. 7).—Yours faithfully, Edwin H. Wynne.

Leicester.

Dear Sir,—Many years ago I was constrained, under similar pressure to that mentioned by your correspondent, to "search the Scriptures," that I might know the mind of the Lord as to his loving command, "This do."

Attention must first be directed to 1 Cor. xi., because this Epistle is expressly addressed to "All that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord" (i. 2). And, in ch. xi. the Apostle tells us that the instructions he was giving had been imparted to him by express revelation.

For I received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you, that the Lord Jesus the same night in which He was betrayed took bread; and when He had given thanks, He brake it, and said, Take, eat: this is My body, which is broken for you: this do in remembrance of Me. After the same manner also the cup, when He had supped, saying: This cup is the new covenant in My blood: this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of Me. For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till He come.

If, therefore, there were no other Scriptures extant, the Church of God is here furnished with the mind of her Lord on this subject. Accordingly, it is called "The Lord's Supper," a designation that sufficiently indicates the suitable time of day for its observance. It was "the night in which he was betrayed" that the Lord first made this feast of remembrance; and again by the words, "After the same manner the cup, when He had supped," evening is indicated.

"A Student" is right in saying that all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity are entitled to "break bread." All such should be constrained, indeed, by the love of Christ, to come to the Lord's table. And who shall dare to say them "Nay"? Of course, we know there are those who assume authority to say "Nay." But what will the Lord say to such?

It is not for believers to impose terms of communion upon one another. Self-judgment is what the Lord requires of each one of us. "But let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of the bread and drink of the cup" (1 Cor. xi. 28). And surely we have much more here than "permission" to partake of the Lord's table. The same Lord who lovingly says, "This do," also says, "So let him eat and drink"! Does our blessed Lord Jesus Christ expect anything less than a glad yielding up of ourselves to eagerly fulfil his gracious command?

As to the day, Acts xx. 7 is quite sufficient. Paul and his companions were spending seven days at Troas. "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul discoursed unto them," etc.

It is evident that this was the recognised day, established under apostolic guidance, for the assembly of believers to "break bread." In 1 Cor. xvi. the believers are enjoined to make a collection for the poor saints at Jerusalem, and are charged to do this on the "first day of the week."

Read carefully the whole of the Epistle as one letter, and it will be understood that the believers were to make their collections on the first day of the week (as we do now), because that day of assembly was most convenient for the purpose.—Yours faithfully, W. S.

Dear Sir,—To an honest student of Scripture, that is, to a true-hearted follower of the Lord Jesus, it does not seem very hard to discern the true teaching of this.

We may omit noticing (A) (B) (C) (D), from "A Student's" letter in your issue of July 28, and begin at Acts xx. 7, which is quoted as the only passage in the New Testament which seems to support it. Well, what if it were? "A word to the wise!" It is not the "quantity but the quality" of Scripture that we bow to. In the same paragraph it is admitted that it may be a "united partaking of meals" (Acts xx. 11), and that to remember the Lord Jesus by disciples in the earliest days of the Church, i.e., gathered to his name. Surely if this is what we get now in "breaking of bread" it is something to be aimed at, kept, enjoyed, and obeyed. So much for paragraph (E), as we might term it, for reference.

The next paragraph in the letter—viz., par. (F), if we follow out the lettering—does not call for special remark. I think we may in general accept it. Then as to paragraph (G). Evidently breaking of bread is connected with, or understood by "A Student" to be the same thing as, or synonymous with, the Lord's Supper. If so, then much additional weight of Scripture is given us for keeping the ordinance as delivered at first, for was not this one, if not the only thing, for which the Apostle Paul praises the Corinthian saints, that they observed the ordinance he had given them? And he goes on in the same chapter to write of the due observance of the Lord's Supper, and the unworthy doing it. Is not this clear enough? What more do we want?

Pass we on to paragraph (H), as we call it, in "A Student's" letter, beginning "I find." He says that all who love the Lord are entitled to break bread. Good! Though not inclined to quarrel with the words "time of fellowship," for it certainly is such, we entirely agree with his conclusion, viz., from the word "fellowship" to "till He come." With regard to paragraph (I), or the last short request of "A Student," it is curious he should have quite overlooked 1 Cor. v., which surely applies to the united assembly of the saints and "united partaking of meals," as such. From this Scripture chiefly, no doubt, the discipline is, or should be, enforced, of denying openly immoral persons or "wicked men" from the same fellowship until restored, as 2 Cor. ii. teaches.—Yours faithfully and briefly, G. S. W.

"The Truth-seeker."

THE DISPENSATIONS.

Dear Sir,—If the inquiry were what is the truth on certain subjects, one would refer to the passages of Scripture bearing upon them. But the inquiry is not doctrinal. It is, what is expressed in the 18th chapter of Ezekiel? Permit me, therefore, not as proving a point, but investigating a meaning, to state what I understand it to declare.

It is addressed to the nation of Israel, who were saying, "The way of the Lord is not equal."

God had promised (Deut. xxvii.) to them temporal prosperity in their health, their families, their possessions, and their country, conditional upon their obedience to the first covenant; and He had threatened the reverse should they be disobedient. Overlooking their own sins, they professed to believe that their troubles arose through the lives of their fathers, and that this was unfair, unrighteous. The prophet explains, justifying God.

The Hebrew word "nephesh," translated "soul," is, writes Cruden, "very equivocal." Therefore let us not be dogmatic, but investigate its meaning in the passage where we find it. I believe it may be said that in general it does not mean what in modern days we mean, something distinct from the body—as body, soul, and spirit; but that in the Old Testament it often, and in general, means the entire person—the individual. Thus (Gen. xii. 5) Abram took Sarai, and "the souls" (nephesh) that they had gotten in Haran—the persons; Gen. xiv. 21, "Give me the souls" (nephesh)—the persons, the King of Sodom's subjects, "and take the goods." And so in very many other places in Genesis—as "the souls (nephesh), that came into Egypt were threescore and ten"; Ps. vii. 5. "If... let the enemy pursue my soul"—take my life, and Jer. li. 14, and Amos. vi. 8, "The Lord hath sworn by his soul" (nephesh)—Himself.

Now, if the word nephesh (person) has the same sense in the 18th chapter of Ezekiel, the meaning of the words, "The soul that sinneth it shall die," is that an Israelite grievously sinning, grossly transgressing the first covenant, would have his life shortened instead of attaining to length of days.

If formerly he had kept the covenant, and his life had been prolonged on that account, yet if later on he thus sinned past obedience would not avail. The promise ceased when its basis, the ground of it, fell in; whereupon the threatenings would be fulfilled.

As to Israelitish children, they did suffer in some respects for the sins of their fathers. Nevertheless, this was not a fixed destiny. He who could preserve the house of Rahab when the walls of Jericho fell down can deal with his creatures individually, and if any would keep God's commands He pledged his righteous character that his promises should stand good for such: he should live; that is to say, not as having eternal life, which is quite another matter, and on other grounds, but he should fulfil the full number of his days.

I repeat, salvation from sin and the future state are not the subjects treated of in this chapter. They are more abundantly declared elsewhere. Its object is to justify God in his ways, which are not unequal, as said by some. He is in no respect an unrighteous and harsh God, but one who acts in all fairness, wisdom, and prudence. And in this aspect the chapter should be a lesson for all mankind in all ages.

If we are skilful enough to put the stones, so to speak, of Divine truth in their proper places, the building will go up aright, and all will fit in and harmonise together. Otherwise there is hopeless confusion. James Van Sommer.

"Saint."

Dear Sir,—Your correspondent Mr. Cecil Smith is right in saying that the prefix "Saint" is not exclusively a right of the Apostles, but I venture to think it is more seemly and more reverent to speak of St. Matthew, St. Paul, etc., instead of referring to them as Matthew, Paul, John, etc., as if they were a lot of stable boys, or such like.

In the Greek Testament we have the heading to the Book as the Acts of the Holy Apostles; and Holy Scripture refers to the Apostles as "holy," so I trust the custom will remain of referring to the Apostles as Saint Matthew, etc. "Let all things be done decently and in order."—Yours truly, Upper Norwood. James Alexander.

London Medical Mission. — The principal work of this Mission is to meet the bodily and spiritual needs of the sick poor in certain London districts, but it is also a blessing to the needy of the foreign mission field. The Mission has become in some sort a training school for missionary candidates of any Evangelical denomination, and workers in Africa and China are realising the value of the experience thus gained. The recently opened "Holiday House" at Brasted is a great boon to little children from the hot and crowded alleys of St. Giles and other districts. Dr. Henry Soltau, Med. Sup., 33 and 34, Short's-gardens, Endell-street W.C.

Seats Behind the Counter.—"Twenty-eight years old, and I feel a worn-out woman," is the testimony of a forewoman employed in shops since she was thirteen years of age. "My constitution," she says, "is undermined. About two-thirds of the females employed in shops are between the ages of sixteen and twenty, and many of them under sixteen. Most girls seem fairly strong when they first come, but after a year or two in a shop they are constantly ailing. It is not the light work that injures them, but the standing for long hours together." An appeal for seats for female shop assistants was largely signed by Dublin wives and mothers. Mr. William Fry, of Lower Mount-street, Dublin, has been prominent and active in the movement.

Liverpool Seamen and Boatmen.

THE centre of mission work amongst seamen, boatmen, and Mersey flatmen or bargemen, carried on by the Seamen and Boatmen's Friend Society, is on George's Dock, Liverpool, where for twenty-five years evangelistic, social, and moral effort have been carried on. From that centre the docks are regularly visited by the missionaries, the work covering the entire range of the docks from Hornby to Herculaneum, six and a-half miles in length. The Scriptures are read, prayer offered, and conversation of a spiritual nature entered into with the men on shipboard. The great object is to lead the seamen and boatmen of the port to a heart knowledge of Christ's salvation.

The circulation of New Testaments, Gospel tracts, and useful magazines on shipboard is an important part of the work. Last year 4000 visits were paid to vessels of all kinds, and 14,000 tracts, Gospel booklets (in various languages), magazines, and copies of the Scriptures were given to seamen and dock workers. Short mid-day services are held for dock workers, when many men hear the word in this homely and informal manner. Hundreds of seamen and boatmen have expressed their gratitude for the visits of the missionaries, and some have received spiritual blessing.

At the Bethel on George's Dock, and at Seacombe, on the Birkenhead side of the Mersey, Gospel services are regularly held on the Sabbath; also on nearly every evening during the week useful and instructive meetings are held. An appeal is made for help, as owing to the opening of a reading-room at the Liverpool Bethel, the funds at present are nearly exhausted. Rev. Samuel Ventham, Flatmen's Bethel, George's Dock, Liverpool, is district superintendent of the Society.

French in London.

THE annual gatherings of friends of the mission work in connection with the French Reformed Evangelical Church in Bayswater recently took place at Grove House, Regent's Park. The beautifully shaded lawn was covered with a large company, in which many nationalities were represented. After a season of friendly conversation, and listening to the lively national songs of the French children, a meeting was held, Dr. J. H. Gladstone presiding.

The report, a summary of which was given by Pasteur Du Pontet-de La Harpe, superintendent of the Mission, was encouraging. Services in the church have been well attended throughout the year. The Bienvenue Home for foreign governesses had 293 inmates. Many registered their names at the Society for Befriending Foreign Servant Girls. Most useful work is done by a colporteur, who regularly visits upwards of one hundred foreign families in the neighbourhood of Fitzroy-square. Social and other meetings have been held at different places. Through these varied agencies thousands of people have been reached and benefited. Over £400 was needed at the end of March last to balance accounts. The committee derived encouragement from a legacy of £10 left them by a French servant girl as a token of gratitude.

The chairman, Rev. J. J. Coxhead, Prebendary Lewis Borrett White, Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, and Pasteur Bonnefon, of Cannes, delivered interesting addresses in support of this useful effort.

Deptford Medical Mission.—For nearly nine years the Mission has quietly and steadily gone on doing the work it was designed to do, ministering to the sick and needy in this part of our great city. The work is being continued as it began, its sphere among the sick and needy, its ministry to the soul as well as the body. The actual number of patients who came under treatment in 1897 was 2,710, and when it is remembered that these are drawn from among the poorest classes, the need of such a work is evident. The clothing department and relief fund have proved most useful auxiliaries. Gifts of new or worn garments, blankets, sheets, and old linen, are always most welcome; and without them it is ofttimes difficult for medical aid to be of much avail. Hon. Director, Rev. F. A. Pring, 188, High-street, Deptford, S.E.

"Babies' Castle," Hawkhurst.

YOU can hardly imagine a more interesting or lovelier sight, or one to make the heart more thankful and happy, than can be seen by visiting Dr. Barnardo's home for little children in Kent. Here you may see happy, healthy child-life, home-life too, and the heart must be hard indeed that cannot rejoice at sight of the smiling little faces that, but for this God-given refuge, would all too soon have borne instead the traces of sin and sighs and shame.

The home itself is in a lovely spot, surrounded on all sides by much of earth's beauty in hill, dale, and leafy wood, on the side of a hill in the fair county of Kent. The exterior of the "Castle" is pretty and suggestive, built of red brick, in the form of a castle, with its two round towers at either end; a carriage drive terminates at the flight of broad white steps leading up to the great door, which so readily swings on its hinges to admit these forlorn little ones, or to welcome the friends who care to come and see them.

A short time ago a party of us went to see this charming abode of the babies. We had a drive of about seven miles, up hill and down, through pretty scenery and quiet country roads. We were received at the entrance most kindly by the matron, and in a few moments introduced to Dr. Long (the lady doctor resident in the place), whose kind face and pleasant manner must be as good as any amount of medicine to the toddlers under her care.

This lady led us round from room to room, and untiringly pointed out interesting objects to us. We were told that there were ninety-eight children then in the home—mites from a few months to six years of age. There they were, all looking just as winsome and happy as our own babies at home; indeed, it did one good to see how home-like a place it is. No two children were dressed alike, yet all looked so pretty and comfortable, some with lovely curling hair, which might that moment have had the finishing touch of a fond mother's hand, and some so straight that no amount of love would have induced it to curl; babies and little girls with their pretty ribbon bows, and all looking so wholesome, sweet, and clean, that you wanted to kiss them all round, there and then.

There are six large nurseries, each with its attendant two nurses, rows of lovely little white cots down the sides of the long rooms, over the head of each the name of the donor or donors; pictures on the walls, and large windows looking out on to the extensive playground, making the rooms cheerful, light, and airy. When we paid our visit all the younger part of this big family were just awake from their two hours' mid-day rest, and—in various stages of stretchiness, grumpiness, and happiness—were being made ready for their afternoon outing, while the upper or senior members of the party were being ushered into the schoolroom.

In one nursery we saw a long row of babies, in dear little armchairs—tied in, of course—while in front of them knelt the young nurses feeding them in turns from basins of boiled milk and bread, and very contented and happy they looked; while a tiny baby in long clothes was lying in a lovely swinging-cot and taking its bottle from the hand of a tender little nurse of about six years.

But in the next nursery was a funnier sight still—a row of younger babies, fixed in little chairs also, but all enjoying their bottles. They seemed quite untroubled by our looking on, and sucked away in silence. Such sweet, wee mites, and yet looking, some of them, as if, even in their baby lives, there had been sorrow behind. Thank God for such a work as this, and for the kind hearts that keep it going!

We walked through the sick-room, where were those who are weakly, crippled, or ailing generally, and found them having special food and tender attentions, and thence into the schoolroom, where the children (about thirty, perhaps) had just gathered. It is a light and most pleasant room, with windows overlooking the garden, and is fitted up with low seats and desks that seem just right for tiny arms and legs.

When we entered the boys and girls were standing singing prettily and sweetly an action song, which they evidently enjoyed as much as we did, to judge by their smiling faces; while teacher was seated at the piano accompanying the childish voices in the song. Near the open window, and joining heart and soul with the others, sat, or rather reclined, a poor little invalid cripple in an easy couch-chair; so wan and white, yet so sweetly content looked the patient pale face. One of our party who had been wearing a white hothouse rose was seized with the longing to give something to the little fellow, and so offered her rose; it was good to see the look of delight overspread his face, and to note how eagerly the thin fingers grasped the treasure held out to him. On our walk round, we passed the rooms where the nurses were, in one place making babies' food and filling bottles, and in another cutting up bread and butter for tea; we also saw, in a handy and convenient spot, a large fire-escape, which I hope may never be needed.

In the playground there seemed to be all sorts of enjoyments that children delight in, as well as young nurses to look after them, even in their play. Dr. Long told us that three nurses stay up in turn every night to keep watch over this large family of sleeping babies or tend the waking ones.

We came away, feeling well repaid for our visit to Hawkhurst, and glad and thankful for this grand work among the world's ill-used little ones, whose claim for admission into this real home needs only to be their misery. May his blessing, who called the little children to Him, rest upon it and those who labour in and for it. E. B.

Yarrow Convalescent Home.

LAST Thursday a party of visitors were present at the Yarrow Convalescent Home at Broadstairs to commemorate its establishment three years ago. The home is unique of its kind, and was established for the reception of children recovering from illness, who could not be called the very poor; that is to say, it was intended for the children of educated people, not having the means at their command for securing, entirely at their own cost, the necessary country or sea air, which is so essential in many cases when children are recovering from illness.

There are no subscribers and no letters or other influence required to gain admission. The children are selected, as far as possible, entirely upon their own merits, the one essential condition being that they shall be fit companions for other good-mannered and well-brought-up children, and that the parents should be in such circumstances that, without the assistance of the Institution, their children could not possibly obtain the benefit of a change of air. The usual stay is three weeks, but this period may be extended if, in the opinion of the medical officer, a further stay would permanently benefit the child, and such a case would take precedence over fresh ones, as the trustees prefer to secure permanent benefit for a fewer number rather than temporarily benefit the many.

The institution is fully endowed, but a charge of 5s. a week is made, as the founder prefers to assist those who will help themselves, rather than run the risk of pauperising people by not requiring them to help themselves. Boys are admitted between the age of four and fourteen years, and girls between four and sixteen. There is accommodation for fifty of each sex. The home has been doing exceedingly useful work, and as an illustration of its rapid progress, it may be mentioned that between January and July in the year 1897, 308 children were admitted, and during the same period of the present year the number of admissions has risen to 496.

A Novel Breakfast.—Mr. Emerson Bainbridge, M.P., had a novel breakfast party one morning; his principal guests were 150 of London's nomads, who spend the night under the stars and wake up uncertain of a meal. This hospitable impulse was quickened by a drive through London's free "dossing" ground early one morning. The breakfast was arranged by the sisters of the West London Mission Hall, and Mr. Bainbridge procured from "the cabin" in Piccadilly a substantial repast, consisting of coffee, veal and ham pies, and plum cake, the whole winding up with strawberries and iced cream.

Lavender Bag Mission.—Will friends who have lavender in their gardens kindly help us again this year by sending us lavender to fill little muslin bags to send to our sick soldiers and others in hospitals? A text card is always attached to each bag. Last year we sent many of these little messengers to the sick and suffering at home and abroad, and had many letters telling how much these sweet-smelling bags are appreciated, and also how the texts were blessed. Please address, Miss E. Alice Puckle, The Hollonds, Langton, Tunbridge Wells.

Lambeth Walk Mission.—In connection with the past year's "open-air" operations of this mission, the brass band—all working-men—determined to visit consecutively every court and alley beyond the district covered by the missionary. Many thus heard the glorious Gospel proclaimed in speech, song, and music. The need for this enlarged sphere of influence was brought home very forcibly by a conversation one of the workers had with a resident, who stated that the visit to one court was the first of its kind for over twenty years. Another special feature of the work is evening visitation of the public-houses in the vicinity of the Mission Hall, with distribution of Gospel leaflets among customers at the bar and invitations to Gospel services. Hon. sec., Mr. E. J. Pakeman, 207, Lambeth Walk, S.E.

Father Ignatius (Rev. Joseph Leycester Lyne) is in all things eccentric. As long ago as 1860 he was ordained a deacon in the Church of England; now, after a lapse of thirty-eight years, he has been raised to the priesthood by an archbishop of the Greek Church! The ceremony took place at Llanthony Abbey, without the knowledge or permission of the Bishop of Landaff, in whose diocese Mr. Lyne lives.

The outlook of the coal industry is full of anxiety. In some districts of Wales the overseers are "signing" for an extra poor-rate. In others there is hesitancy. This prolonged struggle throws the blame of all the misery and of the injured trade prospects upon the shoulders of those who decline the conciliator's overtures.

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Crawford Smith on Saturday afternoon held a most successful "At home" at High Cross House, Newcastle, for members of the Young Men's Christian Association, Mr. Smith being chairman of the District Council of that body. "It is not easy nowadays," remarks the Indian Y.M.C.A. national organ, "to get beyond the influence of the world-wide brotherhood of the Young Men's Christian Association. Even among the adventurous gold miners of Klondyke, the only two American missionaries who succeeded in forcing their way thither during the past winter, despite almost insuperable difficulties, found an association already established, with a reading-room kept open constantly, and meetings maintained among the multitude of young men, who have gone there greedy of gain and are subjected to sore temptations."

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Rawlings entertained a large number of members of Associations in the south-west suburban district at Richmond House, Wimbledon Common, on Saturday, July 23. From six to eight o'clock there was a conference, led by Mr. W. Hind Smith, of Exeter Hall, upon the subject of "The Inner Life of the Associations." An important communication, bearing this title, and having principally in view the development of the spiritual side of the work, has recently been circulated amongst the Y.M.C.A.'s of the country by the National Council.

The statistical returns relating to Great Britain presented at the recent International Conference at Basle show considerable development. At the World's Conference in London in 1894 the number of British centres of work reported (including auxiliaries) was 843, while the membership was 87,464. At Basle 1418 centres were reported, with a membership of 104,160. In the English Unions (England, Ireland, and Wales) the value of Association buildings has increased from £397,695 in 1894, to £460,027 in 1898. The Scottish Associations have also made great progress in this respect; thirty-one now occupying their own premises, the approximate value of which is £75,000. The English report stated that "at no period in the history of the Associations have the governing bodies manifested a more loyal adherence to the fundamental principles of the Union than is shown at the present time. While there has been no diminution of general activity, determined effort continues to be maintained by the Associations, with very few exceptions, to give a first place to the directly spiritual agencies, and to carry on an aggressive missionary work."

The War.—Spain's appeal for peace through the French Ambassador has occupied the American Cabinet at Washington for some days. The result is that terms have been sent to Spain which we trust will lead to a cessation of hostilities and an amicable settlement of the numerous intricate questions surrounding the issue so much to be desired. A joint commission will have charge of the terms. The proposed conditions involve the absolute cession of all Spanish islands in the West Indies, save Cuba; the relinquishment of Spanish sovereignty over Cuba, the United States to exercise control until a stable government is established; the cession of one of the Ladrones for a coaling station, and perhaps another coaling station in the Carolines, and the non-assumption by the United States of Spain's Cuban and Porto Rican debts. The Pope's Desire for Scotland.

THE message which the Pope has sent to the Roman Catholic archbishops and bishops of Scotland bears witness to the goodness of heart of the Holy Father, but it is not likely to help much towards the object on which his heart is set—the conversion of Scotland to the Roman Catholic faith. There is no point on which an appeal to Scotch Protestants to return to the Roman Catholic faith is more likely to fail at the present day than one which is founded on their knowledge and love of the Holy Scriptures. Within the last twenty years the attention and interest of intelligent Scotch people has been more directed to the source from which we derive the Scriptures and the authority which the books of the Bible have, but it never occurred to any inquirer that we got our Bible from the Roman Catholic Church, or that the one sure and safe way of understanding the Bible is to ask the Catholic Church to say what it means.—Daily Mail.

National Refuges.—The Earl and Countess of Jersey, and their daughters, the Ladies Villiers, personally assisted last week at the annual fête given in the beautiful grounds of Osterley Park to about 600 boys and girls of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, of which society Lord Jersey is president. The party included the sailor boys of the "Arethusa" and "Chichester" training ships, and 200 girls from the Sudbury and Ealing homes. Mr. H. Bristow Wallen, secretary, and a large staff of officers attended, and the entire proceedings were of a most pleasing character.

Home and School for Blind Girls, Jerusalem.—The prevalence of blindness in Bible lands is well known, also the fact that comparatively little has yet been done to aid practically those thus afflicted. The present work, which it is hoped to extend into Egypt, is the outcome of a day-school commenced in 1896 by Miss Ford, a missionary who was afterwards unable to devote the necessary time to it. There are now seven girls in the school and one day-pupil. The Braille System has been adapted to the Arabic language, and the pupils make good progress considering their age. A new year's treat was much enjoyed by about thirty blind people. As the work increases it is seen how much it might be extended. The treasurer is Rev. J. R. Longley Hall, care of British Consul, Jerusalem.

Protestant Governesses' Home.—The object of this Home (carried on by Miss Clementina Kingdon, in apartments at 22, Chatham-place, Brighton) is to help struggling governesses and gentlewomen who require a temporary home whilst awaiting engagements, and those who, from failing health, need seaside rest, but are unable to pay for it, or perhaps can only give a small weekly fee. Their struggle for existence is intensely severe. Several who were in painfully distressing circumstances have been received this year for a period extending over twelve weeks. The rest, freedom from anxiety, good food and sea air have the desired effect; and they go back braced up to face once more the stern reality of earning a livelihood in some way or other. The work is very much cramped through want of funds.

Folkestone Convalescent Home.—For the past fifteen years there has been in existence at Folkestone a convalescent home where, during that time, no less than 4427 delicate persons have been received as visitors, and provided with the means of health, which, but for the generosity of charitable, if unknown, friends they would never have been able to obtain. To meet increasing requirements it is necessary to build more commodious quarters, and a site has been secured on the East Cliff for the erection of a new building. Two friends have added £500 each to former contributions; and this has decided Mrs. Mearns to proceed. Including this £1000 there is £3500 at command. The expenditure cannot be reckoned at less than £6000 to complete, furnish, and secure the freehold. Communications should be addressed to Mrs. Mearns, Lynton, Hawke-road, Upper Norwood, S.E.

Palmer-place Mission, Islington.—In a variety of ways the Gospel is brought to bear upon the populous neighbourhood of this Mission, which has been in existence for thirteen years. The Sunday-school is in a flourishing condition, embracing nearly 300 children, and a staff of twenty-five teachers. An important branch of the work is the Bible-class Aid Society, supported by the liberality of friends connected with Mr. M. H. Rackstraw's establishment, who greatly help by their monthly contributions. The aim is to give some temporal relief, through the medium of tickets for bread, coal, meat, etc., to the deserving and destitute poor, so painfully numerous in the district of the Mission. The Fresh-Air Mission and free breakfasts are features of the summer and winter work respectively. Hon. sec., Mr. E. G. Day 57, Park-street, Islington, N

Obituary.

MR. G. WATSON.

George Watson, the author of the very popular hymn commencing "With the sweet word of peace," died at his residence at Farnham recently. Mr. Watson was eighty-two years old, but maintained an active interest in affairs to the last. Until 1866 he was in business in London as a printer. From his office, and with his co-operation, there originated the well-known temperance publications The Band of Hope Review and The British Workman. Many of Mr. Watson's hymns have only been issued as fly leaves, but that already mentioned and one beginning, "Oh, the deep mystery of that love," are given in Mr. Paxton Hood's and other collections. His son, Mr. George Watson, is a director of Hazell, Watson, and Viney, Limited, and another son is a well-known architect.

PRINCIPAL CAIRD.

This eminent Scotch professor and divine passed away on Saturday last, at Greenock, at the ripe age of seventy-eight. He had but recently resigned the post of Principal of Glasgow University. He was brother to the Master of Baliol. Born in 1820, he received his education at the University of Glasgow, where he was greatly distinguished. He filled with marked success several pastoral appointments in Glasgow and other places, attracting always large congregations. In 1862 he was appointed Professor of Divinity in Glasgow University, and eleven years later he was made Principal of the University. This position he filled with distinguished ability until he resigned it through failing health.

Among the preachers of the Presbyterian Church of Scotland none was better known than Dr. Caird. His sermons were characterised by a studied and elaborate correctness. He published an "Introduction to the Philosophy of Religion," sermons, and other books.

DR. MOODY-STUART.

The death of Rev. Alexander Moody-Stuart, D.D., is announced. He was born in 1809, at Paisley, of which burgh his father, Mr. Andrew Moody, was at one time provost. He took his M.A. degree at Glasgow seventy-two years ago, and proceeded to the University of Edinburgh, when he came under the influence of Dr. Chalmers. His first ministerial charge was at Holy Island, where he distinguished himself during the cholera epidemic. In 1836 he became "territorial assistant" to Dr. Candlish, having charge of St. Luke's quoad sacra parish. In 1839 Mr. Moody married the daughter of Mr. Kenneth Bruce Stuart, of Annat, and thenceforth used the name of Moody-Stuart. When the Disruption came he was staying at Madeira for health, but his sympathies were all with the seceders, and the entire congregation joined the Free Church. In 1875 the University of Edinburgh conferred on him the degree of D.D. for his theological writings, his long ministry, and his great services to the Church. He wrote biographies of Dr. Duncan and of the Duchess of Gorpan and commentaries on the Song of Solomon and the Fifty-first Psalm, as well as "The Land of Huss," "Capernaum," and other books. Dr. Moody-Stuart is one of the last survivors of those who were ministers in the Scotch Kirk before the great Disruption.

South London Police Court Mission.—Writing with respect to the work of this mission, carried on for nearly twenty years in London and elsewhere, the Bishop of Rochester says:—"The magistrates and police not only recognise it, but daily avail themselves, in dealing with perplexing cases, of the help of which a missionary, and often he alone, is in a position to give. The missionaries are laymen, working for a stipend and giving their whole time to attending the courts, visiting the prisoners, and following up cases whom they have helped or are trying to help. I do not hesitate to speak of this as one of the very best works of charity to body and soul to which help can be given. The South London work (which includes, besides the stipends and expenses of the missionaries, that invaluable instrument of social repair, a Shelter Home for boys who are brought in by the missionaries) requires £1500 a year to maintain it. Its permanent income is nothing like this, and it has no endowments."

The Evangelistic Field.

Tent Mission.

A GOSPEL mission under a large tent in Harlesden-lane, N.W., was commenced July 16, and will be continued to August 7. The work is under the care of the Society of Friends, but several prominent Christians in the district are taking part, including C. Inglis, Ned Wright, Russell Hurditch, W. Noble, and others. James Reed Jones and Charles Goddard, from the U.S., have been the principal preachers during the past eight days, and Mr. and Mrs. Baker, the blind singers from Philadelphia, U.S., have been made a blessing through their sweet singing of the Gospel.

On Sunday last the preaching of the Word was accompanied with blessed result, and at the after-meeting a large portion of the audience remained. The people were broken down under the power of the Holy Spirit, and several were brought out of darkness into light. Christians are looking and praying for much blessing.

Evangelistic Movements.

DURING my visit to Christchurch, Hants, the meetings have been well attended, both indoor and especially the open-air services. The people have been most attentive to the preaching of the Word, and we trust much blessing will follow. —G. Pullinger.

Essex Industrial Home.—The object of this institution (on the Rainsford-road, Chelmsford) is to clothe, feed, lodge, educate, and train to industrial work destitute and neglected boys above six years of age, especially orphans and those in danger of falling into crime. Religious teaching is Protestant and Scriptural, but thoroughly undenominational, thus appealing to men of various religious opinions for its support. Instruction is given in elementary branches of knowledge; and the industrial training is afforded in house and garden work, shoemaking, tailoring, sockmaking, etc. When a boy leaves the Home he is provided with a sufficient outfit according to circumstances, and is apprenticed or placed—as far as practicable—in some employment or service for which he may be deemed most suitable. The manager is Mr. J. Brittain Pash, Chelmsford.

The Book World.

Off Your Bikes. By Walker Miles. (1s. Taylor & Son, 19, Old-street, E.C.) These lively and interesting descriptions of English rural scenery are written for the special benefit of ramblers on foot.

The Mistakes We Make. Compiled by C. E. Clark. (1s. 6d. C. A. Pearson, Limited.) Mr. Clark endeavours, in these pages, to correct common blunders, mis-descriptions, or mis-quotations in popular phraseology. He fills 230 pages with these errata.

Those who know the charms of East Anglia will read with pleasure By Sea Marge, Marsh, and Mere, by William A. Dutt, in the pages of which there are many weird tales, striking sketches of travel, and outlines of scenery and natural history characteristics. (1s. net. Lowestoft, W. Gwyn; London, Simpkin, Marshall & Co.)

Two Men of Devon in Ceylon. By Rev. S. Langdon. (3s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) Whether this "story of the East and West" be pure imagination or supposed fact we are not able to gather, but it is full of vivacity and romantic interest. The two men of Devon are represented as being captives in Ceylon at a far bygone period, and their wanderings and adventures are duly detailed. The narrative is brightened with some excellent photographs of Devonshire and Ceylon scenery.

The prayer in Psa. xc. 14, "Oh, satisfy us early with thy mercy, that we may rejoice and be glad all our days," may well express the purpose aimed at by Mr. Josiah Spiers in the issue of a second series of "True Stories" Illustrated Leaflets, Nos. 9 to 16. They are printed in colours, and may be obtained at 2s. per 100 (lower price pro ratâ on larger parcels) from 13A, Warwick-lane, E.C. They are admirably adapted for distribution among the young, and what suits them suits everybody.

We welcome a fourth edition, revised, of Africa Waiting; or, the Problem of Africa's Evangelisation. By Douglas M. Thornton (1s. net. Student Volunteer Missionary Union, 93, Aldersgate-street). The result of wide and careful reading in regard to the continent and its varied problems, this book will answer many inquiries of students of missions, and materially assist volunteers for service in their preliminary investigations. A useful map is prefixed to this remarkably compendious publication.

Dr. Barnardo's magazine for children, Bubbles, commences a new volume with its August monthly issue. For the little ones there are sixteen full-page coloured pictures. There is a serial story for the bigger boys and girls. Rev. Theodore Wood talks of house flies, of fish, of beasts and birds, and creepy-crawly things that have common names, but romantic, and often almost unbelievable, histories and habits. Many interesting details are given of Dr. Barnardo's work for destitute children. (6d. Office: 158, Aldersgate-street, E.C.)

Archdeacon Sinclair's seventh charge, which was delivered in June last at St. Sepulchre's Church, Holborn, has been issued by Mr. Elliot Stock, with the title The Churches of the East (1s. 6d. net). In the course of 150 large pages Dr. Sinclair summarises information that is not easily accessible to many. He offers no opinions of his own; he points out, however, that the Anglican bishops do "not desire corporate reunion, but closer relations, and that two Churches, on speaking terms, are not responsible for each other's mistakes or differences."

The Baptist Tract and Book Society has issued two little books that will be specially interesting in Baptist families. In Twisted Threads; or, Those Villagers (1s. 6d.), Pastor H. E. Stone tells a story characterised by considerable animation, the inevitable love incidents being appendages to records that admirably illustrate the devotion of rural pastors. In Duty and Destiny: An Australian Story (1s.), by Hugh Phee, an honourable regard for religious principles is set in a right light, and instruction on fundamental truth is pleasingly introduced.

A learned, thoughtful, and reverent analysis of perhaps the most remarkable book in the Bible, The Problems of Job, by Rev. G. N. Garland, M.A. (Nisbet). Such clear statements as, Why is unmerited suffering Divinely tolerated? Why do the wicked prosper? etc., enable general readers to see the scope of teaching which might, owing to poetic language, be missed. The author strongly maintains the personality of Job and the personality of Satan, and sums up the problems with their answers in a closing chapter. Two chapters on Inductive Criticism and Inspiration prove that the writer refuses to exalt human reason above Divine revelation. The book will be of special help to preachers, lecturers, and students of divinity.

Church of England.

The Temple Church will be closed during the months of August and September, reopening on the first Sunday in October.

Tents have been erected at Bulford Camp, Salisbury Plain, one each for recreation, refreshments, and Church services.

The new tent pioneering work of the Church Army in the poor and slum parishes of London is having most encouraging results.

Over a hundred navvies were induced by a Church Army agent to attend an evening service at Upwey, Dorset, many going in their shirt-sleeves.

Rev. Richard Glover, who has been vicar of St. Luke's, West Holloway, for nearly twenty-nine years, has been presented to the rectory of Wotton, Dorking.

It is reported that the Bishop of London, in presence of the continuance of illegal ritual services in his diocese, proposes to issue a second pastoral to the clergy.

Next Sunday the Bishop of Ripon will preach to the members of the students' summer conference in connection with the British College Christian Union at Ripon.

Rev. A. J. P. French has resigned the senior curacy of Radcliffe Parish Church, in order to undertake missionary work in India. He will take his departure on September 7.

The Bishop of Ripon consecrated the newly erected Mission Church of St. Andrew's, Stourton, Leeds. There was a large attendance, many of the local clergy being present.

Missions to the fruit-pickers in Kent are being carried on, as usual, by a number of Church Army evangelists, under the supervision of the local clergy, and with results that are distinctly encouraging.

A prompt and liberal response has been made to the appeal of the Bishop of Bristol for at least £100,000 for Church extension work in the diocese. Close upon £25,000 has been promised in six weeks.

At St. Peter's, Highgate Hill (vicar, Rev. J. F. Osborne), no less than twenty-eight different organisations are successfully employed in work among 700 people, with four paid helpers and 170 voluntary workers.

The boys of the Huddersfield Church Lads' Brigade are to have a summer camp at Blackpool. During their stay there the Bishop of Wakefield will visit the camp, and, it is announced, will sleep under canvas with them.

At St. Anne's, Holborn, Rev. H. B. Freeman began last Sunday his seventh annual series of summer Sunday evening sermons. The subject is: "Seven Things that Matter—Belief, Worship, Purpose, Duty, Charity, Salvation, Death."

Proposals are being considered for binding together societies devoted to work amongst young men on Church of England lines into one strong organisation which shall be able to touch all parts of the country. The Archbishop of Canterbury is throwing himself into the effort with great zeal.

At the men's services on Sunday afternoon, started recently at St. James's, Bethnal Green, attendance rarely falls below 400, and has reached 600. Freethought lecturers from Victoria Park have attended the church, while thrift clubs and social societies have sprung out of the services, and are worked by the working-men's committee.

The Lord Mayor, Lady Mayoress, and the Misses Davies visited Herne Bay and laid the foundation-stone of a building in Brunswick-square, to be called the Church of St. John the Evangelist. Continuing its exposure of extreme ritual in certain churches, The Record deals with the "choral eucharist" at St. Augustine's, Kilburn, which was "marked by almost every kind of ritual extravagance," the sacrament being reserved. There were some communicants—a welcome departure, which it is hoped may soon become more general in the diocese.

Rev. J. E. Watts Ditchfield, Vicar of St. James-the-Less, Bethnal-green, gave a graphic account, on Sunday last, of life in Bethnal Green to fully 600 men at St. Peter's, Highgate-hill. He found one woman making 1000 matchboxes for 7d., finding her own paste. Mr. Ditchfield gave an animating account of his nine months' ministry in his new parish of 11,000 people.

Prebendary Eardley Wilmot has issued the report for the parish of St. Jude's, South Kensington. The multifarious parochial organisations continue to do good work. St. Jude's, as is well known, was one of the first to observe the practice of linking a rich parish with poorer ones in the diocese, and during the past twelve months the two "aided" parishes, St. Clement's, Fulham, and St. Mary's, Whitechapel, have received much valuable assistance.

The programme of the Church Congress, to be held at Bradford, September 27-30, includes the following subjects: "Clergy and Laity (Mutual Relations)," "The Church and the Nation," "The Church and the Age"—under which come "The Unrest of the Age (Intellectual, Moral, and Social)" and "Biblical Criticism and Study"; "The Church and the Individual—the Message to the Heart of Man (Devotional and Practical Use of Holy Scripture)," and "The Church and the World."

In the Sunday-school at East Ham Church (Rev. H. G. Brown) there has been of late an average attendance of 500 scholars. It has been resolved to erect a new place of worship, to seat 900, at a cost of £5000, so soon as half the cost has been secured.

The extension of Medland Hall, the London Congregational Union's free shelter for the homeless, has been completed at a cost of nearly £3000. By the erection of an additional floor and the enlargement of the floor beneath the institution now furnishes accommodation for 450.

Dr. Washington Gladden, the eminent American Congregational minister and author, is now on a visit to this country, and, in addition to preaching in Congregational pulpits on Sundays, will give a series of addresses on "Reasons for Friendship between England and America," and "Causes and Issues of the Spanish-American War."

The committee of the Congregational Union of England and Wales express gratification that steps are being taken to amalgamate the Irish Evangelical Society with the Irish Congregational Union, and have passed a resolution appealing for funds necessary to enable the society to continue payment of agents pending the completion of the proposed amalgamation.

Rev. J. L. Brooks, who has been acting from the commencement as hon. director of the Training Colony of the Christian Union for Social Service, has accepted the earnest invitation of the committee to devote himself wholly to this work, and has consequently resigned the pastorate of the Broadway Church, Hammersmith. He will commence his residence at Lingfield in October.

The Congregational Union of West Australia met at Bunbury, Rev. W. F. Turton presiding, when the erection of new mission halls at Cottesloe and Donnybrook was reported, also of a new church at Bunbury. Services have been begun at Helena Vale. Plans for further church extension were considered. The need for a well-equipped man for the Kalgoorlie Mission is felt, and one is being sought from England.

Mr. Albert E. Jennings, a member of New-court Chapel, Tollington Park, is about to leave England for mission work in South Africa. His field of labour will be Barkley West, one of the northern towns of Cape Colony, about twenty-five miles from Kimberley, and peopled to a great extent by Kaffirs, Hottentots, and Bechuanas. There is a flourishing native church, although it has been without a missionary for some time.

Rev. Frederick Hall has been recognised as pastor of Bar Church, Scarborough. In the course of his remarks he said the battle for the principles of Knox and Luther and the Reformation was before them, and they would have the Protestant party and friends in the Church of England to know that they would find no truer and stauncher allies in that Waterloo than the Methodists, Presbyterians, Salvationists, Quakers, Congregationalists, and Baptists.

A new Baptist chapel is to be erected at San Salvador.

Poplar and Bromley Tabernacle, to which Rev. A. Tildsley has received a unanimous call, seats over 1200 people.

Last Sunday evening Rev. John Spence, of Chelsea Chapel, baptized twelve persons, making the number of baptisms for July twenty. On Monday evening a special thanksgiving meeting was held for the continued blessing resting on the present ministry.

The Mayor and High Sheriff of Nottingham have invited delegates to the Baptist Union to a garden party in the Castle grounds on Monday, September 26. The subjects set down for discussion at the meetings include "Our Part in the Evangelisation of England," "Primary National Education," and "The Condition of Assistants in Shops." The concluding devotional address will be by Dr. Maclaren.

The foundation-stone of a new chapel in Great Clowes-street, Manchester, for a congregation under Rev. J. D. Bray, has been laid. It will accommodate 530, and will cost about £2,500. Dr. Maclaren, in laying the stone, said this was the outcome of a joint effort on the part of the churches in Manchester, supported by the Extension Fund in London. They were endeavouring simultaneously to erect two chapels—that one and a chapel at Longsight, in the midst of a rapidly growing population. He rejoiced that the drift of the day was to bring the members of the different Free Churches together.

Methodist.

The work at Woodvale Hall, Belfast, is carried on by two ministers, one evangelist, two deaconesses, and a large staff of voluntary workers.

In connection with the South Wales Mission, a mission hall to seat 450 is about to be erected at a cost of £2365 at Pontypridd, and a new chapel at Senghenydd to seat 400 at a cost of £1037.

The lecture hall has just been opened, the ceremony constituting the last official function performed by Rev. W. L. Watkins on.

The report of the London Chapel Extension Fund (U.M.) showed a satisfactory year's working, but lamented the financial limitations by which the committee was hampered. To conserve what has been already done, at least five building schemes must be undertaken during the next few years at an expenditure of £20,000.

The P.M. "Minutes of Conference" this year will include the "Address to the Churches"; dates for temperance sermons and Sunday-school prayer; the educational programme, chapters on union with the Bible Christians and Methodist concerted action; and the preliminary arrangements for the Ecumenical Conference of 1901.

Mr. McNeill's London Mission.—Many friends who attended the recent memorable gatherings at the Royal Albert Hall will like to know that acceptable memorials of the meetings may be had in the shape of photographs of the interior of the Hall. Mr. J. S. Dodington, of 62, Upper-street, Islington N., secured some excellent views, one showing the interior empty, and two others taken while a meeting was being held. In these two latter pictures, taken from different points, the preacher comes out well, and the general effect is decidedly pleasing. Copies may be had at 2s. 6d. each, post free, 3s.; or in frames from 6s., carriage free. Admirable cabinet photos of Mr. McNeill can also be had, 1s. each.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

IT is an immense relief to both the friends of America and of Spain that peace is now an assured fact. The war has been one of the shortest, on record, and on the whole one of the least destructive to life. The Americans have been so uniformly successful, both on land and sea, that they can afford to be generous in the conditions of peace. It is too soon to forecast the final issues of the struggle, but two results are fairly certain: it will be an unmixed ultimate blessing to Cuba, and it has scattered into the air much of the suspicious feeling entertained towards this country in the United States, thus preparing the way for a stable and lasting friendship between the two nations. The demon of warfare does not always bring such benefits as these in its blood-stained hands.

The passing away of Gladstone and Bismarck within three months of each other has brought home the fact that the mighty men of the past generation, who had the chief share in the shaping of destinies of nations in the 19th century, are now all gone. The era of great personalities for the present is over, and the world is in the hands of lesser leaders. This is true of art and literature, possibly of religion, as well as of politics. This makes a forecast of the future a matter of great difficulty. We do not know, humanly speaking, whither we are being led. But to the Christian believer this is no matter of dismay. He knows that the will of God is supreme, and can fulfil itself through all instrumentalities be they great or little. This is the great lesson of the prophet Isaiah, who perpetually dwells with joy on the sure leadership of God. "Who hath wrought and done it, calling the generations from the beginning? I the Lord, the first, and with the last, I am He" (Isa. xli. 4). This is ever the mainstay and refuge of faith.

Whatever may have been Prince Bismarck's merits as the maker of United Germany, the world at large has scarcely been benefited by the system of militarism which he initiated. An estimate of the expense entailed by his policy on the European states is given in the Economiste Européen. From 1865 to 1897 these countries, nine in number, increased their annual naval and military expenditure by £80,000,000, and without reckoning anything in addition to the expenditure set forth in the budgets of the countries concerned, Bismarck's ideas are estimated to have entailed an expenditure of £1,800,000,000 since 1865. To this must be added the loss to the community, caused by compulsory military service, estimated at £160,000,000. The worst of this enormous burden is that it runs forward indefinitely into the future, and may be the parent of other evils whose range and continuance no one can forecast. It is an appalling picture of the enormous mischief that may flow from one great mind whose ideals are of the earth, earthy.

It is one of the cardinal ideas in the system of militarism that without long and severe training men cannot be made into brave and efficient soldiers. The American war with Spain affords an instructive test of this theory. In the attack on Santiago, on the one side there was an army of seasoned veterans, fighting from behind entrenchments; on the other hand one of raw recruits, who, a month or two before the battle, had come straight from civilian life, and had hardly gone through even the elements of military drill. And yet the raw recruits beat the seasoned veterans, which proves that training is of little importance compared with qualities of a very different order. Is not this a plea for the moderation of that iron system of long and painful training which is the chief enemy of social industry, as well as the chief incentive to material aggressiveness and international suspicions?

The mission cause is deeply interested in the fate of the Philippine Islands, and in the hands of President McKinley the highest welfare of the people will assuredly be safe. The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions demands justice for its workers in Micronesia, from which the Spaniards practically expelled them some years ago. Not only there, but also in the Philippine Islands, that powerful agency and the Presbyterian, Baptist, and Methodist Episcopal Churches in the United States are ready to found missions as soon as practicable. This is as it should be. The Church of Christ should be ready to enter doors as soon as, in the providence of God, they are opened to the Gospel.

Compare the state of things amongst soldiers described on pp. 15 and 16. Could anything show more conclusively that the Gospel of Jesus Christ is the one and only hope of remedy? For the sake of the bodies and souls of these young men we earnestly commend the proposed Cairo scheme to the practical sympathy of our readers.

In the discussion at the Wesleyan Conference on the allocation of £100,000 of the "million guineas" scheme to the cause of foreign missions, a speaker, in advocating that this sum be at least doubled, told a good story. There was a schoolboy who had sixpence given him for the collection. He spent fourpence at the tuck-shop, and gave twopence to the offertory. "Smith, Smith," remonstrated the head master, "how could you spend fourpence on your miserable self, and only give twopence for the wide world?" Here is a rebuke that applies to others than schoolboys. If those on whom the evangelisation of the world depends were collectively to spend a little less on their pleasure, and give the little more to the great cause of missions, China and India, Africa and the islands of the sea, would not be clamouring in vain for preachers and teachers of the Gospel. But we shall not give the little more unless we are brought to know that we ourselves and all we have belongs to God.

If anyone could have carried a resolution in the Wesleyan Conference against appointing persons engaged in the sale of strong drink to official positions it would have been Rev. Thomas Champness; but he failed. It marks a great advance in temperance feeling that the question should have come up at all in such a body as the Conference, and that a man of such influence as Mr. Champness should have introduced it. Nevertheless, the Conference would not depart from "the constitutional method of appointing its church officers," and that because of the interests of temperance itself. The Conference, however, added a recommendation which, if voluntarily carried out, will have the same effect as an authoritative and binding rule. It was that Methodists should keep themselves free from complicity with a traffic the results of which are so injurious to the interests of religion, morality, and social life.

The emancipation of all Christian persons from association with the liquor trade would soon usher in a great and triumphant effort to save the nation from one of its worst curses.

While the English Chautauqua is to be held this month in Glasgow, some of our readers may not be aware of its steady extension in the United States. We cannot but desire for the movement the continuous manifestations of the Divine favour while the Bible and its prayerful study still hold a foremost place in the proceedings. Its extended influence throughout the States is alluded to in glowing language by the Congregationalist (Boston):—

The Chautauqua idea does not seem to grow less popular as it grows older. The Chautauquan has a list of fifty-seven assemblies held or to be held during the summer months. They are scattered all the way from Maine to California, and from Florida to Washington. In Illinois and New York there are six each, and the remainder are located in twenty-five States. The same general features characterise them all, and some names of lecturers appear in several of the programmes.

"Pastor" writes to the Christian World to inquire of his brethren in the ministry what has been the effect of their preaching the Gospel of the Fatherhood of God. For himself he admits that although he has now preached it for ten years, it does "not lay hold of the masses like the older, even harder, Gospel," which contained an element of terror. He believes it to be the true Gospel, but asks what he is to do in face of its failure savingly to lay hold of men. He is perplexed, pained, and humbled. He longs to see souls saved, but though crowds come to hear he seems to have "no power in his Gospel to save." His inquiry is one of the most important that can be instituted; and we are glad that this point of experience has been arrived at by anyone who has entered upon the dangerous course of exalting the Gospel of Fatherhood above the Gospel of the Grace of God. Experience is furnishing an argument for fidelity to Scripture on this as well as on other matters.

In a vigorous article on the "New Calvinism" in the August number of the Evangelical Magazine, Rev. Silvester Horne pleads for a re-statement of Calvinism as the theology most needed for this "scientific age," especially of the two central doctrines of Calvin—the idea of a Divine destiny for every life, and the conception of the Divine will as the ground of all hope, the principle of all progress. We must not reduce our conception of the will of God to merely the wish of God; in doing so lies the secret of the lamentable loss of faith in the future which afflicts many. He goes on to say :—

Reduce the will of God to an abstract will and you have Deism, and to save us from Deism we owed a re-statement of Calvinism, not a denial of the freedom of our will, but an affirmation of the freedom and reality and activity of God's will, working in us to will and to do of his good pleasure, that his destiny for us may be accomplished.

There is a strenuous and old-fashioned ring about this article that is refreshing in an age of vagueness.

Probably the feature which marks the Parliamentary Session of 1897-8 more than any other is the strong Protestant reaction which has at last met the flowing tide of Sacerdotalism. The Benefices Bill gave an opportunity for the discussion of this vexed subject, and there can be no doubt that the debates reflected the deep disquiet and rising determination of the people no longer to lie passive under the encroachments of the priestly party. The British nation is proverbially slow to respond to anything in the shape of a party cry, and religious controversy is not much to its liking; but there are indications of a real awakening of its deeply rooted Protestant instincts, and that the issues between Romanism and Evangelicalism will be faced in the immediate future. The crisis calls for earnest self-restraint as well as uncompromising faithfulness to conviction.

Mr. John Kensit's campaign against the illegal practices by Sacerdotalists in this country is to be held over during the summer months. There will be no more protests in any church till November, with a view to give the bishops full and adequate opportunity of taking restrictive measures on their own account. If they fail to do their duty in this matter, he proposes to arrange for a thousand protests simultaneously in different parts of England, but without disturbances. This statesmanlike policy it is to be hoped will be more effective in checking the evil than when the endeavour to do so is conjoined with the appearance of disorder and riot. Whether the appeal to the bishops is likely to be successful is another matter. They have shown only a lukewarm and intermittent desire, and that under strong constraint, to take any action at all.

A correspondent, writing in furtherance of Lady Wimborne's action as detailed in her recent letter to The Times, makes an appeal to the women of England to take their due share in the anti-sacerdotal movement. There is a good deal of relevancy in this appeal, especially in view of the fact that the large majority of worshippers in Ritualistic churches are of that sex, and by their presence help to give popularity to these objectionable forms of service. Unfortunately, as our correspondent says—

Many younger women are attracted by the music, show, and idolatrous practices of the church, of which men in many instances have seen the unreality, and so have withdrawn themselves from at-

Anyone, therefore, who would initiate a sensible campaign with a view to enlighten and rouse the Protestant sympathies of Englishwomen would be doing a signal service to the Evangelical faith. Once this was done the evil would be speedily checked.

The letter of the Bishop of London in defence of the Established Church betrays an entire misconception of the Nonconformist position. He credits the Free Churches with a most selfish and unworthy motive in their opposition to the principle of Establishment, and summarises their position thus :—

We wish for no national organisation of religion. The scramble of voluntary associations seems to us most likely to bring our own to the top.

He characterises such a position as "quite natural, if not quite dignified." If it were true it would be most unnatural as well as most undignified. But the Free Churches, as we know them, which are here stigmatised simply as "voluntary associations," are not engaged in a scramble for the top position. They are engaged, in a spirit of growing unity and co-operation, in the evangelisation of the nation. The only rivalry they desire to uphold is that of good works.

The ultimate remedy for the shallowness, the love of show and pleasure, and the formality of modern religious life is suggested by another correspondent, an aged missionary who, after many years of service abroad, has returned home to find a striking deterioration in the spiritual atmosphere of the churches. He has been greatly pained by the fading of the old fire on the family altar, the lack of zeal for the perusal of the Word of God, the rage for amusements and excursions by land and water on the Lord's Day. All this betokens a declension in heart-religion. Not till this ultimate cause is met will the consequent evils be removed. The axe must be again laid at the root of the tree, and an appeal made to the primal sources of spiritual reality. A reawakening of religious fervour and a thorough national humiliation at the throne of grace is greatly needed. There is much here that merits pondering and prayer on the part of all who are called upon to preach and teach. It is clearly of little use removing symptoms till the life is renewed at the source.

Miss Macpherson sends us a graphic account of days in the country, enjoyed by wives and widows, young men, young women, children, each on their own particular day :—

There are thousands of all these classes to whom each new day is but a repetition of the last, to be spent at the wash-tub, at the bench, or in the factory. But some kind hearts think of these weary toilers, and one morning a letter arrives with an invitation for 200 of our dear mothers to spend a day at Blackheath, and the day is looked forward to with unbounded interest.

We could wish that many more realised the joy that such treats bring to people like these, to whom we are all indebted for many of our comforts and enjoyments. As Miss Macpherson says :—

All this is the result of kind thoughts, generous hearts, and practical sympathy on the part of those to whom God has entrusted the stewardship of money.

And certain it is that these facts are applicable to many missions and works having their centre in our great city.

A reader and correspondent asks :—

What do the thousands of readers of The Christian do with the helpful and suggestive notes on some verse in the chapter for the day under the head of "Daily Homily"? Each day's Homily is complete in itself, and I would suggest that those for the previous week be cut out—you thus get seven excellent leaflets for inserting in letters—and thus the light and blessing your readers get is passed on and multiplied many times. This is much better than letting the light these Homilies give lie covered up in back numbers and stored away. I have adopted this plan some time, and enclose a cutting in letters I send to friends. Here is a reference to the blessing one correspondent received, just to hand: "I am sure you were guided to send me those cuttings; they were as the voice of God speaking to me, and have been quite an inspiration to-day."

Our note last week on matters in Uganda was founded on reports which prove to be hardly up to date. It is a pleasure to learn that the gloomy outlook which we depicted belongs to the past, and that whatever may have been the case a month or two ago, it is no longer the fact that "missionaries go about in daily peril of their lives." Needless to say, the C.M.S authorities are always in possession of the latest reliable news from this important and interesting field; so, calling upon them on Tuesday morning, we were delighted to learn that things have so settled down that missionaries who in the time of trouble were called to the mission centre have now returned to their out-stations. This fact carries its own significance; and, with the blessing of God upon the people and their rulers, is, we trust, a token of good times ahead.

New Caledonia, an island that the saintly John Williams was anxious to evangelise, has in these latter days come under the power of the Gospel through the devotion of native Christians from the two neighbouring islands of Lifu and Uvea. The first teachers, who were landed on the island soon after Williams was martyred, were expelled, and the people seemed to be resolutely opposed to mission work. When the French took possession Protestantism was denied admission. But in 1884 a Uvean student, named Matthiu, went across of his own accord and commenced teaching and preaching Jesus when once he had mastered the language. He is an entirely independent worker. There are now sixteen villages in which he has worship regularly conducted. Other Christians from Uvea and Lifu have followed his example by going to other places along the same coast, and their humble requirements have been voluntarily provided by their friends. Thus obscure native Christians have so far done work which was beyond the reach of the white man. They have not excited jealousy or hostility on the part of the French, but have been screened from persecution by the French Minister of Native Affairs. They may require direct help in the future for the consolidation of a growing work; they certainly deserve sympathy and prayer.

Mrs. Hugh Bell's "Plea for Better Teaching of Good Manners," in the current Nineteenth Century, contains a good deal that it would be well for parents to consider in the training of their children; and if her demand that a "complete training in demeanour should form part of the regular curriculum in school" is probably a vain one, there is a great deal that may be done by those who have the training of the young in teaching the principles of courtesy. Human intercourse largely depends for its freedom from offence and its good fellowship on the bearing of men and women to one another. It should be a part of our religion not to "provoke" others, but to cultivate such manners as shall be pleasing and soothing and attractive to them. As Mrs. Bell says, to make the machinery of life run smoothly is surely well worth doing, instead of daily throwing a handful of sand among the wheels; for it would be as easy to pick up again one by one actual grains of sand so thrown, and to reassemble them in one's hand, as to remove the effect of a hundred little crudities of manner and manners with which some people are wont to roughen the path of life for themselves and for others.

Things That Keep Us from God.

By Rev. G. B. F. HALLOCK, D.D.

FEW Christians there are who are not regretfully aware of living at far too great a distance from God. Most of us are sensible of a sad lack of vital religion and depth of Christian experience, and of loving and intimate communion with our heavenly Father. We would like to live near to Him, and to experience the joys of fellowship; but we do not seem to succeed. To be sure, we do not make much effort in this direction. Our attitude is rather that of indefinite longing than of making any downright effort to attain this desired fellowship. In fact, either consciously or unconsciously, we continue to do or to permit the very things that increase the barriers between us and God.

If any of us are mourning the coldness of our Christian living, it is well to face the fact that there are many easily enumerated things, possibly common in our lives, that are sure to maintain a sense of distance between our souls and our Saviour. It may prove a real help toward their avoidance if we will definitely recall what some of them are.

One of these things is simply the rush and hurry of our modern life. Many of us are in danger of being "jostled" out of our spirituality. We scarcely take time to think. There is a beautiful hymn we sometimes sing, "Take time to be holy." It takes time to be holy. We need to take time for meditation and prayer. Meditation kindles thought, and thought kindles love. Someone has said that

MEDITATION IS A LOST ART.

If so, then communion with God is in danger of becoming a lost art. "Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place and rest awhile," said our Lord to his disciples when they were pressed by the multitude. Let us not fail to take seasons for thought, and communion with God, and for the cultivation of our spiritual natures. The rush and hurry of business are sure to stand between us and a true life unless we are very careful to "live in the Spirit and walk in the Spirit," and to allow ourselves time in which to cultivate the grace of communion with God.

Irregularity of spiritual nourishment is another thing that may stand between us and attainment in grace. Some of us may take time for religion, but is it only occasionally, or at long intervals? Do we read God's Word only at irregular periods, pray only once in a while, attend God's house too seldom? Instead, we ought to seek spiritual nourishment at frequent and stated times. We need communion with God as much as we need our daily bread, and as regularly too. There is almost limitless resource for holding us to duty and for making us strong in all Christian attainments if we will but observe stated seasons for meditation and prayer; while the opposite of this keeps us far from God, and makes us weak and sickly in soul, and lacking in Christian joy and usefulness.

Another barrier between us and God is the attraction of worldliness. This is a beautiful world, and God wants us to be happy in it. But, while we live in the world, the world must not live in us. We are to "use the world as not abusing it." It is all right for the boat to be in the water, but when the water gets into the boat the boat sinks. So, when money-getting or pleasure-getting fills us our spiritual life is submerged. Let us watch against reserving the best of our time and the best of our talents for self. Nothing more certainly than selfishness will separate between us and God.

Grieving the Holy Spirit is another common barrier that comes between the Christian and his Lord. The good Messenger comes over and over again, and we do not receive Him. He points out a duty, and we do not perform it. He calls to a higher life, and we do not respond. We drown his voice in the confusion of earthly things, and go on heedless of his love. In so doing we certainly grieve Him, and cut ourselves away from the grace and blessing of God.

Furthermore, we often display a lack in the matter of frank and full and immediate confession of our sins. We cover and excuse and make allowances for the wrong things we do. And so these things separate between us and God. "If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me." "He that covereth his sin shall not prosper." Let us be careful not to cover, or excuse, or apologise for our sins, nor delay penitence or the seeking of pardon, if we would not experience a growing sense of distance between us and God.

We need scarcely add that deliberate disobedience is sure to drive us away from God and turn his face away from us. "Your sins have separated between you and your God." This is always true of sinful thoughts, sinful imaginations, sinful deeds. They are sure to build high barriers between us and our Lord.

Let us guard against the things that separate between our souls and God, and let us cling only to the things that promote nearness to God. The nearer the stronger. The nearer the more useful. The nearer the happier.

"Kept."

Kept always by his power,
To do our Father's will;
Kept when the billows tower,
Contented, calm, and still.

Kept for a purpose, Lord,
To daily cast around
The reflex of thy blessed Word,
Where'er thy sheep are found.

Kept from sin's foul dart,
By thy strong shield alone,
In body, mind, and heart,
Preserved in ways unknown.

Kept that thy cause may grow
In joy, hope, peace, and love,
And make the Church below

The C.D Acts. — An esteemed correspondent writes:—"It was stated in your issue of July 21 that the evil legislation commonly known as the Contagious Diseases Acts was first introduced into this country by Mr. Gladstone. I believe the true facts of the case to be these. These Acts were first contemplated during the reign of William IV., but his unexpected death cut short the designs of the promoters of the system, who did not dare to bring the matter before the young Queen. The strong hostility of Prince Albert further postponed their schemes, and it was during Lord Palmerston's Ministry in 1864 that the first C.D. Acts were smuggled through Parliament. It is true that they were extended and confirmed in 1866 and 1869, during which time Lord Derby, Earl Russell, Mr. Disraeli, and, finally, Mr. Gladstone were Prime Ministers; but the guilt of first introducing this terrible and degrading system into England certainly does not rest with Mr. Gladstone. It is not even certain that he knew anything about the legislation in 1869. It is well known that in 1876 Mr. Gladstone, with John Bright, W. E. Forster, and James Stansfeld, voted in favour of repeal, and that in 1886 his Ministry carried total repeal, making it a Cabinet measure."

Venturing on Christ.

By DR. BALGARNIE.

"Peter seeth the disciple whom Jesus loved following."—John xxi. 20.

PETER had been invited. "Follow thou Me," the Lord had said to Simon, and he had risen from the breakfast-table and gone after his Master. No such command had been laid upon the younger man. No look or gesture had assured him that he would be welcome. He had been left among the rest to gather up the fragments of the meal so miraculously provided for them, and to wonder over the commission that had been entrusted to the son of Jonas. It was hard to be left behind. Was the slight intentional, or was it merely a trial of his faith. Was he no longer "the disciple whom Jesus loved"? Was there no service that he could render? Was he to drop out of the place he had so long occupied in the wanderings in Galilee and on the bosom of his Lord at the supper table? The thought was not to be endured. John sprang to his feet and hurried off to submit himself to his Saviour and Lord.

"Him that cometh unto Me I will in nowise cast out." John's offer of himself was not rejected He was received graciously and loved freely. The Lord had been a witness of the struggle within He had secretly rejoiced over his decision. His heart had been with him from the first, and the sound of his hurrying footsteps was music to his ear. "I have loved thee with an everlasting love, therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee."

It is for those who have

with God and eternal life in Christ to venture like John to offer themselves to the Saviour of the world. They must not wait like Peter for some special call from heaven. Christ is waiting and ready to receive them. Their surrender is the evidence of acceptance, for it shows that the Gospel has triumphed and Divine love has won. "As the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee." They ought to know, after so many years of Bible teaching, enough of Christ to feel sure of a welcome, and that "whosoever shall call upon Him shall be saved." "But how shall I know," said the great Bishop Butler, Lord Bishop of Durham, and author of "The Analogy," on his deathbed—"how shall I know that He is a Saviour for me?" "My lord," said his chaplain, "it is written, 'Him that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out,'" "Now," said the Bishop, "I die happy."

Venture, too, to offer service. "Can I do anything?" is a question seldom heard in the church except in revival times. Dr. Chalmers used to advise those who were anxious to have some assurance of acceptance to begin work for Christ. Those who do his will know the power that is with them in their work.

Venture to give to Christ up to what you can afford. Money is the least of the gifts available for use in the church. Those who cannot teach, or pray, or preach in public can at least give what they can afford to help forward the Gospel work at home and abroad. Only—let us give as He has given, "Follow thou Me."

A Spiritual Awakening
In College or University.

By Mr. JOHN R. MOTT.*

BY a spiritual awakening let us understand such a work of the Spirit of God as shall not only promote a more abundant spiritual life among Christians, but also, and especially, such a work of the Spirit as shall lead non-Christian students to confess Jesus Christ as their Saviour and Lord. Such a state of spiritual life in a college as manifests itself in constant spiritual awakening should be the normal condition of the spiritual life of the college. So what we shall think about is no new or strange or unscriptural experience. We do not sympathise with so-called spiritual awakenings which manifest themselves in unhealthy excitement, due to unnatural causes, and followed by dangerous reaction; we shall speak to-night of those awakenings which are traceable to God Himself, and which have their abundant justification in the practice and teaching of the early Christian Church.

Is it necessary that we should pause at the beginning and of such a spiritual awakening among our students? If so, we may ask ourselves questions like these: How many students are there in my college who do not know Jesus Christ as an actual, personal, mighty Saviour? Then think also of the great number of so-called Christian students that we have who by their inconsistent, if not sinful, lives and practices are trailing the banner of Jesus Christ in the dust. Reflect also upon the intense spirit of worldliness which is so rapidly invading the Church in so many places. Think also of the ingenuity and activity of the aggressive forces of evil which are seeking to ruin students, especially those forces of materialism, of un-Christian science and philosophy, of intellectual pride; it may be, those worse evils of impurity, intemperance, etc., which are doing such infinite harm.

Think, on the other hand, how comparatively few Christians there are among those we know who are really concerned about the spiritual state of their fellow-students. And do not omit from your consideration, in realising this need, the terrible consequences which will follow if these students are not led to accept Christ as Saviour, both to themselves and to the cause of Christ; and even to ourselves if we do not do our part to reach them. As we think of such aspects of the need, and give them local application in our own college, are we not the more convinced of the abundant need of a spiritual awakening in our colleges? The words of Scripture come home to me as I think of the student world as a whole: "It is time, O Lord, for Thee to ork."

SOME INCENTIVES.

There are some incentives which should powerfully emphasise the desire to seek a great work of the Spirit. It would seem that this awful need should, in itself, spur every one of us to make this next year a much more active, watchful year than the past. Think again of the students in your own college living lives absolutely indifferent to the claims of Christ; of those who are living sceptical or perhaps scoffing lives, selfish and proud lives; of those living tempted lives (and where is the student who is not?); of those who are living sinful lives. As we think of all these classes we recall the words at the end of the letter by James: "Brethren, if any among you do err from the truth and one convert him, let him know that he who converteth a sinner from the error of his ways shall save a soul from death, and cover a multitude of sins."

Then there is the incentive which always comes to my mind when I meet a body of delegates like this—the incentive of the importance of the class with which we are spending our time as students. The soul of the student is worth no more in the sight of God than the soul of a man who never went to college, but the trained man will do far more for or against the Kingdom of Christ in this world than the untrained man. You remember how Charles Simeon was accustomed to say when he saw one undergraduate come into Trinity Church, Cambridge: "There goes six hundred people." It may be seriously questioned whether God will ever give us a greater opportunity than we have as fellow students of influencing our generation.

I am reminded here of another incentive. Students are especially more so than any other class with which I am familiar. I do not forget that the natural man is always at enmity with God, whether in the university or out of it. Yet I am convinced that the purpose and spirit of a college or university education predisposes a man to consider honestly the truth, no matter from what quarter it comes. What does a student go to college for? To learn to shut his eyes, to look at things crookedly, to juggle with the truth, to ignore and trifle with facts and evidence? Certainly not. His object is to earn how to find the truth, to sift and weigh evidence, in order that he may be better able to recognise, and welcome, and obey the truth when he finds it. So I say that a college or university course predisposes a man to consider honestly the truth from any quarter.

This is not a matter of theory. We have made careful investigation in countries where it is possible. In South India the proportion of students who are Christians is twelve times larger than among people outside of colleges. In Japan, among students in Government colleges, the number of Christians is twenty times as large as the proportion of the people of Japan as a whole. In some of the countries in the West we have statistics even more striking. This fact should be a marked encouragement to us to work during these days of golden opportunity.

Here is another incentive. If these students are not reached for Christ while they are students, the probabilities are very great that they will not in after life be led to Christ. I might mention many facts to illustrate this. At one of our conferences there were present leaders who had studied at different universities, but who had been out of college for years. The question was put to them: How many of your fellow-students who were not Christians when they graduated have to your knowledge since become Christians? They took time to think, and the answers were collected later—with what result?

WE DID NOT FIND A SINGLE CASE of a man, who, after leaving college, had accepted Christ. I heard the other day of a college president of long experience who said he could not recall more than two or three cases of men who had left college non-Christians who had since become Christians. If the college is a place for unsettling men, it is equally true that it is a place for settling questions, for determining life attitudes and tendencies. May the Spirit of God enforce this lesson upon us.

And so there is this incentive: if we do not reach them who will? The churches in many of our college and university towns cannot do it on a large scale because many of the students who are not Christians will not go to church. The pastors cannot organise missions to these students. They would resent it, and it would be a most untactful approach. The professors as a class, I am pained to say, are not even beginning to wield the influence they might. I say this with deep feeling, because I remember what Professor Drummond, President Mark Hopkins, of Williams College, and Professor Tholuck, of Halle, have done in recognising their influence and using it. I ask you to join with me in prayer that God will raise up in every college at least one professor or teacher of commanding influence who believes in Jesus Christ, and who will liberally set apart time for this specific work of bringing his influence to bear on the students who look up to them with so much respect and even reverence.

After all has been said, I come back to the point: If students do not do this work, who is to do it? Even if professors were doing all they might do, and if churches had complete access, the fact would remain that there is much work in the colleges that can only be done by the students, and best done by them, because

THEY KNOW THEIR FELLOW STUDENTS BEST.

They belong to the same organisations and classes. They are spending the time together in work, in play, in conversation. They talk together about all subjects with perfect freedom. They understand each other's heart-life and thought-life. They know each other's temptations, and, if the life of the Christian student is what it ought to be, he has a special influence over his unbelieving fellow.

There is a strong incentive, also, in the fact of spiritual awakenings in other colleges, or it may be in our own college in past times. God has wrought such wonders in the difficult student fields of the Orient, and He can do equal wonders here in the Occident. Perhaps He did a mighty work in your college or university twenty years ago, or more recently than that. He can repeat it on a larger scale. He is not limited by time, or race, or local difficulties, provided He has the channels through which He can get at the lives of men.

This leads me to emphasise some points in connection with the promotion of such a spiritual awakening among our fellow students. First, get a few Christian students in your college to face the plain facts about the spiritual needs of the college. If we are to have prayer and effort for a changed state of things, we must have convictions as to the need of them. If we are to have convictions, we must have knowledge. Christ was moved with compassion when He actually saw the need of the multitude. Get together, then, so as to realise the need. It will take time to do this. It does not take long to think about it, but it takes time to realise it lest we become so accustomed to things as they are that the sad side of the subject is lost sight of. Let us pray God to see the facts as He sees them. I tremble for the delegation here, if there be one, that thanks God that their college is not as others are.

Secondly, let the Christians themselves be revived—especially the most earnest Christians With whom does a spiritual awakening in a college begin as a rule? It begins with the most earnest, consistent Christians; and I have found no exception to this rule. Let them humble themselves before God with much heart-searching and self-examination. I think of a college where two of the most spiritual men came to one of our conferences. They learnt this secret, and when they went back agreed to meet for prayer each day before breakfast. They invited some others to join them, and the numbers increased. so that when we went there we found some thirty men thus uniting. They said they hoped the spiritual awakening would begin in the college about the Christmas holidays. We said, "It has begun already." The students were approached, and in a few weeks some thirty acknowledged Jesus as their Saviour. Let the work in our own hearts be thorough. Let there be a confessing and quitting of sins, and not only this, but the taking of a positive stand on the other side. As we have looked into the Scripture lately we have found that since the days of the Hebrew prophets down to the present time a deep work of God in the hearts of the Christians is a necessary precursor.

A third means of promoting spiritual awakening is

PERSONAL, DEVOTIONAL, BIBLE STUDY.

I must linger a moment on this. Bible study is a great hammer; it will break through the crust of indifference. It is a great fire; it will refine us. It is a great search-light; it will reveal to us our hidden evils. It will make of us instruments that God can use. Moreover, it will give power to our prayer-life. It furnishes the best equipment for Christian service, because it shows us the work that God wants done, and how to do it. It surrounds us with a great cloud of master workmen, and shows how the work is done successfully.

Fourthly, prayer is an indispensable means of spiritual awakening. Charles Finney, one of the greatest evangelists of this century, said that a spiritual awakening may be expected when there is a spirit of prayer for a spiritual awakening, and the reason why so many fail to prevail with unconverted men is because of the greater failure to prevail with God in prayer.

HOW TO PRAY.

What should characterise our praying? It should be very intense and earnest. A deep work of grace that took place in Germany this last year is traceable to the prayers of one Christian woman who believed in God and held on in the face of tremendous difficulties until the answer came. The greatest revival that Yale has seen in this century was caused by a little band of students, who were so earnest in prayer that they got up every morning before daylight to spend some time in special prayer for revival. In Japan a friend was told one morning by the principal of a college that there was a deep spiritual movement there. "How do you know it?" "Because some of our students have been praying all night." We need that kind of momentum that is strong enough to make us pray even all night.

Our praying should also be united. In one university, where the students had been praying for weeks for an outpouring of the Spirit, their prayers were powerless because some of the leaders of the Christian Union were jealous of each other and criticising each other. At length the Spirit showed them this evil. They came together, sank their differences at the feet of Christ, and joined in prayer in a real union. The work began that night, and was the greatest revival that university had ever known.

Our prayers must also be persevering. We have become convinced of this because we have known so many colleges where they gave up special prayer just when they were on the eve of receiving an answer. I know a university where a band of ten men went back from a summer school and continued in prayer for five months. Then all became discouraged but two, who held on; the work began gradually as the result of this perseverance in prayer. There was nothing strange or exciting about it. One man openly accepted Christ, others followed, until some twenty or thirty men were led to the Saviour. Oh, for more of this importunity in prayer, for in this we recognise that the awakening is from God. We are often prone to magnify human agencies and personalities. Prayer magnifies and glorifies God, and shows that we have more faith in Him than in human effort.

Let us give ourselves to prayer, to more prayer, to continued prayer. If we are to have a genuine spiritual awakening, there must be a deeper sense than ever of our dependence on the Spirit of God. It is the Holy Spirit that convinces and converts men. It is He who reveals Jesus Christ, who energises men to accept the Christ.

If I had time I would enlarge on some of those in different universities; as for instance, let there be special efforts to reach new students for Christ while they are new students. They are more susceptible then than later. I would go so far as to say that the first two months give a greater opportunity for this than the next two years. Then, in other cases, sympathetic, spiritual pastors or professors are secured to give special addresses or conduct special missions; this prepares the way for other things. Another method is the workers' Bible training class, in which a band of students associate themselves in order to become skilled personal workers. They have a holy ambition to become such workers, and are willing to make sacrifices to attain this end. Why should you not have in every college represented here, where there are Christians, and at the same time students not yet Christians, one or more of these little workers' bands? God forgive us if this personal work is not attempted, tactfully, lovingly, constantly.

I need not enlarge on the importance of it; but I may say a word about the manner of it. Our personal work must be intelligent if we would win students. "He that winneth souls is wise." It takes study to understand the human spirit; to meet, and not to trifle with, a man's intellectual and spiritual difficulties. Then such work should be natural. I know some who limit their personal work to one day in the week. I know some who use a certain tone of voice in it. The more we study the life of Christ the more we will be impressed with his naturalnesss. Then such work should be sincere. There is no class more than students. It is the reality behind the words that gives them their power. It should also be sympathetic. Students will not bear dogmatism. We must put ourselves in their places; we must consider their environment, and respect their judgment. Students are a difficult class to reach, and the sympathetic man will go furthest in that direction. Your very sensitiveness will enable you to work your way into the consciences and feelings of those with whom you are dealing.

Above all, our personal work must be prayerful. How humble we should be in this work. How low we should get at the Master's feet. We cannot convert a man. The most convincing argument will not convert him, nor the most persuasive eloquence. It is the Spirit of God using any or all of these things that converts men, and leads them to turn from Satan to God. Let us therefore walk softly. We may not use many words. The prayerful man will recognise what this means. The hours spent on the knees, the message at last obtained, the words spoken with much trembling, but with much meaning—it may be apparent defeat, but it will be real victory. These are the seeds sown that bring forth not thirty-fold, but a hundred-fold.

The last thing that should characterise our personal work, like prayer, is that it should be persevering. Let us never give a man up. If we are tempted to be discouraged, let us think of our workers in India. I found some there who had been working for individual students for years, and had not won their man yet. But they were not thinking of giving up. All they said was:

"WE ARE SO MUCH NEARER VICTORY."

That is the spirit that overcomes the world. In Holland I was much impressed by a student who "roomed" in the same house with another, had morning prayers with him for over two years, and at last won him to Jesus Christ. That is what I call perseverance. We cannot afford to be discouraged.

May I give a closing word to the delegates to this particular conference? There is a deep obligation resting upon every Christian who is in touch with the living Christ to seek a spiritual awakening. But a far greater burden of responsibility settles upon those of us who in the providence of God are called upon to go back to colleges and universities to be leaders of organisations. If these Christian nations—England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales—are to be spiritual nations, we must be spiritual. The fountain will never get above the head, the stream will never get above the fountain. After this summer conference we cannot go away and be the same as before. Let us be very honest in facing the facts. "He that hath sent Me is with Me." "I do always the things that please Him." Let that spirit go with us. "I must work the works of Him that sent Me while it is day; for the night cometh, when no man can work." "He that reapeth receiveth wages and gathereth fruit unto life eternal." "He that winneth souls is wise." "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever."

THE INSPIRATION OF THE PREACHER.

THE ex-President's charge at the ordination service on Monday morning made a deep impression. Some forty or more young ministers, who had already completed a probation of four years, were solemnly set apart for the work of the ministry. Mr. Watkinson discharged the last duty of his high office by delivering the ordination charge in the chapel of his boyhood. Speaking from 1 Chron. xxviii. 19—his view was that the great need was inspiration—he proceeded to speak of the nature of the inspiration needed, its limits and conditions. With a wealth of illustration he urged that the true minister had a spiritual faculty that beggared imagination as much as imagination beggared sense.

In regard to the limits of this inspiration, they must guard against literalism and licence. The Protestant recognised the authority of the Bible, and also the fact that the Spirit of God was always in the Church enabling them to interpret that Book. He testified that after fifty years of thought and reading and experience he did not vary a hair's breadth from the substantial teachings he heard in that chapel in the days of his youth from the masters of those days.

The memorial service for ministers who have died during the year was impressive and solemn. The roll of the dead was a long one, containing the names of forty-four ministers in Great Britain, three in Ireland, and eight in the foreign mission field.

The Irish representatives addressed some cheering words to the Conference during one of the ordinary sessions, as they were crowded out on the public occasion when the other representatives spoke. Dr. Crawford Johnson gave an account of the success of the Belfast Mission. He rejoiced also that in Ireland they had gained a free pulpit. Years ago there was practically no liberty to preach the Gospel in the open air outside the province of Ulster, but now the Gospel was preached every Sunday in Munster, Leinster, and Connaught.

An interesting conversation took place on the relations of Methodist office-bearers to the drink traffic. Rev. Charles Garrett and Rev. Thomas Champness spoke with thrilling earnestness of the terrible evils of the drink traffic. The former pointed out the perils of grocers' licences, and the widening ramifications of the traffic through the large dividend-earning brewing companies. It was unanimously agreed that, while it was not desirable to interfere with the constitutional methods of appointing church officers, the Conference recommended the Methodist people to keep themselves free from complicity with a traffic the results of which were so injurious to the interests of religion, morality, and social life as the drink traffic.

The pastoral address to the societies had been prepared by Rev. T. G. Selby. It was read by Rev. F. Galland Hartley, whose effective enunciation lent force to a very able production. It was heartily approved by the Conference, and will be shortly read in all the societies.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, August 14.

"The Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ." —2 Thess. iii. 5.

"DIRECT" might be rendered "make straight." It is used of the Apostle's own coming to these beloved converts in 1 Thess. iii. 11. It is as though he asked that their hearts might travel easily and swiftly along the road which leads into the love of God, and the patience which, untiring, waits for Christ.

The Love of God.—We urgently need to be brought into the love of God for many reasons. Only so can our selfishness be conquered and expelled; only so can we become like God in our daily life and conversation; only this is the complete evidence to the world that our holy religion is true; only thus shall we have power to influence the lost and fallen; only so can we know God, "for he that loveth not, knoweth not God." But how can we learn to love? God alone can teach us and guide our way into this sacred art.

The Patience of Christ.—Thus the original might be rendered, and the beloved disciple confesses himself a brother and companion in the patience of Jesus Christ (Rev. i. 9). We all know something of this. Longing for answers to prayers that are still delayed; yearning for the realisation of hopes and ideals of which God's Spirit has spoken to us; waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God. May we be led into something of that sublime faith and patience with which Jesus sits, until all things are put under Him, and he is satisfied.

MONDAY, August 15.

"Sinners, of whom I am chief."—1 Tim. i. 15.

If the elephant can go safely over the swaying bridge, the horse and mule can; and the apostle seems to glory that in the very beginning of the progress of the Gospel through the world it had laid hold of and converted himself, because if he had been saved anyone might be. As men have been brought under conviction, in successive ages, it has been a profound consolation to learn that the chief of sinners has been in heaven for 1800 years. "In him first Jesus Christ showed forth all long-suffering for a pattern to them which should hereafter believe."

Without doubt Paul never forgot the excess of his hatred and persecutions towards the infant Church. But probably he alludes here also to the deepening consciousness of unworthiness and sinfulness which accompanies all progress towards the knowledge and love of God.

It may seem difficult to understand this phase of experience, but it is a universal one, and may be accounted for thus. The true saint of God, though certain of forgiveness, reviews his past sins in the light of that purity of which he is ever obtaining truer perceptions, and thus recognises shades of evil in them which a slighter knowledge of God had failed to reveal. He also feels himself a greater sinner than others, because he supposes that God cannot have treated another with the same forbearance and mercy as have been extended to himself, and the greater the love the more heinous the transgression. And in addition, as subtler forms of temptation are suggested to him, and to every one, he knows that there are kindred susceptibilities within him, even though they are abhorred and resisted. It is beneath the pressure of such thoughts that he recognises his uttermost indebtedness to the grace of God.

TUESDAY, August 16.

"I exhort therefore that, first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks be made for all men."—1 Tim. ii. 1.

A life is revealed here of which many of us know practically nothing. We do not feel the absolute necessity of being much alone in the presence of God, not so much for ourselves, as for others; and this sad neglect of intercessory prayer, which we all deplore, really points to a lack of the Divine life, since if that were mightily within us we should inevitably feel its throb and pulse in this direction. This comes out clearly in the words that follow.

Intercession is necessary that we may know the secrets of a quiet, peaceable, and godly life (ver. 2).

Such intercession for others is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Saviour (ver. 3). And the word translated good might be rendered beautiful.

It is consonant with the Divine purpose, for God wishes to have all men saved (ver. 4). If, then, his Spirit is within us, we, too, shall long that men should be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth. Our hearts will be filled with a Divine tenderness of yearning which will find vent in strong cryings and tears. It is only thus we can live in harmony with the Divine purpose.

Such intercession is in profound union with the mediation of our Lord (verses 5, 6).—As the great High Priest He ever liveth to intercede, and in our little measure we, too, have to stand between God and man as part of his mystical body; and we blend our supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks with his.

WEDNESDAY, August 17.

"Without controversy great is the mystery of godliness."—1 Tim. iii. 16.

This is a fragment of one of the earliest hymns of the Church. The words "mystery of godliness" are probably a general heading which is further unfolded and expanded in the six following sentences, which may have been sung antiphonally:—

God was manifest in the flesh,
Justified in the Spirit.
Seen of angels,
Preached unto the Gentiles.
Believed on in the world,
Received up into glory.

The Extremes of Manifestation.—The Eternal Word was manifested in the flesh: "He was made flesh, and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory." But it was not simply a physical manifestation; we cannot forget the descent and abiding of the Holy Spirit at his baptism, or the authentication of his words which the Spirit gave in signs and wonders, and convinced hearts, and converted lives.

The Extremes of Created Intelligence.—Angels worship Him; and Gentiles, sunk in heathen darkness, hear the story of his wondrous love. Jesus is the centre of all worlds; from heaven's bright spaces they come to him on the one hand; from earth's dark sins they come on the other. In Him they meet, and angels say to redeemed men: "We are your fellow servants, and of your brethren, that have the testimony of Jesus."

The Extremes of Space.—Glory is above; "He was received up into glory." The world is but a speck, a mote in the beam of eternity. How great the space between the two! But the feet of our Emmanuel have trodden its low pavement, and He has now taken to Himself his former glory. Like Jacob's ladder, He links earth with the throne of God.

THURSDAY, August 18.

"Every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused, if it be received with thanksgiving."—1 Tim. iv. 4.

When we are quite sure that we are dealing with one of God's pure and unadulterated gifts, such as human love, friendship, the beauties of nature, wholesome food, fresh young spirits, the innocent mirth of the Christmas home-gathering, we must distinguish between God's gift and the abuse of God's gift, between his creation and our distortion of it. There are things in our lives, which are not his creation or gift, which we must resolutely refuse and put away. There are others which we cannot put from us. It is to these that our text applies, and concerning which we lay down the following rules:—

Rejoice in every good thing which the Lord gives. Do not be afraid of joy. Do not enjoy things as though under the sword of Damocles, suspended by a thread.

Be careful to maintain the spirit of thanksgiving and prayer. What you can thank God for or use in his name and for his glory, what lifts you from the gift to the Giver, or is capable of being prayed over, with no shadow of misgiving, is innocent and healthy. Be glad for it.

Watch only against the intrusion of self. Whatever you place between yourself and God, or rest on apart from God, or make the aim and centre of your life, is hurtful and must pass through the fire.

FRIDAY, August 19.

"She that is a widow indeed, and desolate, trusteth in God, and continueth in supplications and prayers night and day." —1 Tim. v. 5.

Art thou desolate indeed, because the light of thine eyes has passed from view, leaving thee immeasurably lonely? Dear soul, do not look down into the grave which has received the precious mortal frame, but up into the face of God.

He lent thee thy beloved. From the time of the first knitting of soul with soul he was but a loan for a specified time; and wouldst thou not rather have had him for so short a time than not at all? Wouldst thou not have said, had God asked thee, "I would rather have a year or month of such love as his than none?" Do not be angry, because God has done as He always intended.

Besides, that beloved one is still thine. Thy love so entered into his heart that it could not be eradicated, though ages should pass. Do not suppose that death is so mighty a magician as to alter the very nature of those who pass for a moment beneath his wand. They who live on the other side love as they did here, and are perhaps nearer to us than when limited by mortal flesh. "Ye are come to the spirits of the just made perfect."

And God will care for thee. Trust Him for society that thou be not lonely, for the provision of what is necessary to thy support, and for the protecting love which thy shrinking nature calls for. Thy Maker will be thy husband.

Wouldst thou be comforted, continue in prayers and supplications for others night and day. Cease to shut thyself up with thy sorrow, and go out to minister comfort to those who sorrow as without hope.

SATURDAY, August 20.

"Nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God."—1 Tim. vi. 17.

The contrast here is very beautiful. Men, for the most part, look to riches to supply them with all they need richly to enjoy, but the Apostle says that it is beyond all comparison better to look away from dead coin to a living Person, who takes pleasure in giving liberally without upbraiding.

Here is a rebuke. Supposing you had your cellars filled with gold coin, would you not think yourself secure against all possible need and care? Almost certainly you would. But you ought to be even more at rest, since you have neither silver nor gold, and only your Heavenly Father's hand. Is not that enough?

Here is a contrast. Riches are uncertain at the best. A man in these difficult days finds it easier to gain money than to hold it. He who is rich to-day may awake to-morrow to find that some sudden turn of the market has made him poor. But God is not uncertain. He is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. His promises are yea and amen. His covenants are certainties.

Here is an appeal. Trust in the living God with as much restfulness as others in their lands and revenues, and be almost glad if God takes away from you what you have clung to so tenaciously, that you may drop securely into his everlasting arms. You smile at the story of the lady who was told by the captain that he had done all he could for the vessel, and they must now look to the Almighty, and who replied, "O, captain, has it really come to that?" But beware lest you be nearer akin to her spirit than you suppose.

Called to the War.

STIRRING EXPERIENCES IN CAMP.

IN an address brimful of pathetic and practical interest, Rev. R. A. Torrey, of Chicago, gave to the Students' Convention at Northfield an outline of the evangelistic work recently organised among the American soldiers.

In the first place, he said, every American ought to be grateful to God for the reunion between the North and South which has been brought about by this war. In the South you see the Stars and Stripes floating everywhere, and Southerners are shouting for the American flag with an enthusiasm that I have not seen equalled in the North. In what was called the "Jeff Davis (1st Mississippi) Regiment," we found, as far as an expression could bring it out, that nine-tenths of that regiment were either themselves in the Civil War or were sons of men who had been in it.

Major Whittle, when preaching, said: "Most of my war experience was passed in Mississippi. I was shot by the bullet of a Mississippi man, and his son may be in this audience to-day. I never expected to have the privilege of preaching the Gospel to the sons of these men with whom we were then at war." He went on to speak of some incidents of that war, and those men forgetting all of that feeling which men sometimes have that it is a shame to shed tears, the tears commenced to flow down their cheeks. And when Major Whittle asked how many of them to-day desired to obey the truth which had been put to them by a Union officer, man after man got up and accepted Jesus Christ Afterwards they sent up an invitation that he would come down and speak to them again. That sort of thing is going on all over the camp.

The 158th Indiana has its camp directly opposite the 1st Georgia. Moved by kindly feeling towards their Southern neighbours, the officers of the 158th Indiana said to the band: "You had better not play 'Marching Through Georgia'; it may create an unpleasant impression in the camp across the road." A day or two passed, and the 1st Georgia band was playing "Marching Through Georgia"! The 31st Michigan is right next to the 1st Georgia, and when the 1st Georgia came into camp they said: "We were opposed to one another during the late war; let us welcome them." Then the band and all the regiment lined up and played "Dixie" as the 1st Georgia marched into camp. Then they crowded over into camp carrying to the thirsty, hungry, dusty soldiers boiler after boiler of coffee, the best that the camp afforded.

Everywhere there is enthusiasm. Everywhere there is the love of brothers that have been long separated, but who have been reunited at last.

Another blessing is the putting away of that feud, a century old, between mother and child—between England and America. Every true American's heart must be filled with joy as he sees the sympathy that exists to-day between Great Britain and our own country. When I was a boy the effect of my study of such histories as we then had in our schools was to make me hate an Englishman. But to-day the Union Jack and the Stars and Stripes will float throughout our land, and in England too, in most loving concord. I am told that our Canadian brethren are coming across the line to celebrate our independence with us.

But great as these blessings are, there is a greater one that has come through this war, and that is a wonderful revival of the religion of Jesus Christ among the young men of our nation. Man after man has said to me—men of discrimination, men of force, men high in position—that they had a feeling that one of God's purposes in this war was to bring together these hundreds of thousands of men to hear the Gospel under the most advantageous circumstances, that they might be won to Christ and carry back to their homes the glad tidings that they have heard, that throughout our nation there might come that great revival for which many of us have been praying for years. I believe this is true. I think

THE MOST SWEEPING REVIVAL

I ever saw in my life is the one going on at Chickamauga Park to-day. The one great subject of conversation in many of those camps is the religion of Jesus Christ. Men are talking about it in the street cars, on the streets, in the restaurants, on drill, on guard duty — officers and men are talking about it everywhere, and men by the hundreds and by the thousands have already been won to the Lord Jesus Christ on these camp grounds.

In Chickamauga alone are gathered together 50,000 men, and at other camps as many more. Many have the idea that in our army we have only the offscouring of society. On the contrary, it is made up of all that is best in our American young manhood, physically, intellectually, and morally. I was told by Col. Rolfe, of the 1st New Hampshire Regiment, that in one company of his regiment there were thirty Dartmouth Seniors. One troop of cavalry is almost entirely composed of college graduates, and in the 31st Michigan there is a very large delegation of students. In one Arkansas regiment I found a college president as sergeant, and two professors as privates. You would be surprised to know the number of successful ministers of the Gospel who are in the ranks to-day, either as privates or officers. I do not hesitate to say, then, that some of the very best of our American young manhood is found upon the camp grounds at Chickamauga, and I presume the same is true of the other camps. This constitutes

A GREAT OPPORTUNITY.

Further, they are in a peculiarly receptive frame of mind. There is very little to do; camp life is very tedious and unpleasant. After you have breathed dust day and night for weeks; after you have lived upon bacon and potatoes, coffee without milk or cream, and bread without butter, life becomes rather burdensome. Add to this the prevalence of sickness in camp, and the fact that men who have not gone to the front are dying from pneumonia, or dysentery, or typhoid fever, or other diseases; add to this the other fact that they may be called out in a few days to go to the front and to face sickness and hardship and death and eternity, and you can see how these men are in a peculiarly receptive frame of mind.

A young man came to me one night in very great earnestness and with emotion, and said, "I want to take Christ to-night. One of my tent-mates was on guard and fell asleep. It is his second offence, and I do not know what they will do with him. I suppose he will be shot. It has set me to thinking, and I want to take the Lord Jesus Christ now if you will only show me how." Men are being roused to a sense of the fact that there is a God and an eternity, and that they need a preparation to meet that eternity and to meet that God.

A young college graduate came to Major Whittle at the close of one of the services, and said, "Major, I have just received word from home that my mother has died. I want you to tell me how to become a Christian, as she prayed that I might before she died. I know I shall never meet her again upon earth, but I wish to meet her in heaven."

Again, these men come from every State and territory in the Union. They are REPRESENTATIVE MEN.

Many of them who have been known as irreligious, as sceptical and infidels, are being converted and will go home to tell what Christ Jesus has become to them upon the camp ground. Thus to towns and cities all over this country there is coming a great revival through these men who have gone to the front, and have found Jesus there.

Then note the moral results. The effect on the canteen is an illustration. In one regiment of which I have spoken a canteen sold 180 dols. worth of beer a day. The very first week after the Gospel tent came there the receipts of the canteen for the sale of beer fell from 180 dols. to 125 dols. a day, and from that day to this they have steadily decreased. In another regiment where the Gospel tent was located the canteen has gone out altogether. I do not say that the Gospel tent is the only cause of this change, but it has a great deal to do with it.

I was preaching one night in one of these tents, and when the meeting was over a man came to me and said: "You don't know what good these services are doing in this camp. Before this tent came we heard cursing and saw card-playing everywhere, but since the tent came you hardly hear anybody cursing and you see no card-playing. This tent has made a complete transformation in our camp."

But all that is as nothing compared with the great results of this work in

THE CONVERSION OF MEN.

Two weeks ago Sunday there was a two o'clock service beneath a tent that came down to within a few feet of the ground; outside the tent was a high board fence, fourteen feet high. You can imagine the state of the temperature at two o'clock in the afternoon at Camp Thomas under these circumstances. But the men stayed and listened. And when we had finished I gave them a very strong invitation. "Now," I said, "men, I am not going to ask you to rise for prayers. But you men who came to this tent to-day as non-Christians, but who have decided that you will here and now take Jesus Christ as your personal Saviour and Lord; that you will begin from this date, under all circumstances, as God shall give you opportunity, to confess Him before the world; that you will strive to live every day to please Him; that you will be out-and-out for Christ in the camp, on the battlefield, and when you go home, just get up before this body of men." One rose here, one there, and then they stood up in squads. One of the chaplains said there were forty-one by actual count. We wanted to make it more definite, and got out a card that read, as nearly as I can remember: "I do this day accept Jesus Christ as my Saviour, and purpose from this time to confess Him before the world as my Lord and Master, and to love and serve Him." A pretty strong statement. Now we say: "Men, here is this card. We want you to understand what you are doing. You are not asking prayers merely; not expressing a wish to become a Christian, but you are stating that you have become a Christian. If you do mean business, one of these cards before the whole regiment."

SIT DOWN AND SIGN

On one Sunday, between 500 and 600 men in our fifteen services signed those cards. We wanted to know whether they meant business or not, so we had them looked up. I think it is safe to say that upwards of 500 men definitely professed to accept the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour and their Master. I do not know anything that stirs the blood of a Christian man so much as to see these soldier boys and these officers stand up and definitely profess in that way that they are going to take the Lord Jesus Christ, and that before they go to Cuba; that they are not merely going to enlist under the banner of our country, but enlist under the banner of the Lord and Master, Jesus Christ.

Now that sort of thing is going on all over the camps, men by the hundred coming to Christ before going to the front. One of those regiments that had such an awful time the other day, when so many dropped before the Spanish bullets, was the very regiment that Rev. A. C. Dixon was preaching to in Tampa, and in which many professed to accept Christ before they went to Cuba to meet death. Surely the heart of every true child of God ought to go out in prayer that throughout all the coming days the Spirit of God even in greater power may come down among those that survive.

In the New York Observer a graphic description is given of the services and general religious activity. Chancellor Wm. E. Boggs, of the University of Georgia, offered his services free as a chaplain, or evangelist, in one of the Army camps.

He writes from Chickamauga:—"There are some very bad men among the fifty thousand on this great camping-ground; there are many more who are too weak to keep out of temptation;...but the great body of them are kindly, quiet fellows who are glad to have a word of greeting, and return your smile in a way that goes to your heart. On Sunday night, in the Gospel Tent, it was enough to thrill any preacher's soul to look into the faces of that large congregation of stalwart, manly fellows. They sang with the heartiness of college boys, and when the quartet of the 52nd Wisconsin stood up together to sing, 'Rock of Ages,' I said to myself, while tears filled my eyes, 'There is not—there cannot be—in any city church such ravishingly sweet music as these dear fellows are making.' There was enough light in the tent to see how many strong faces were fixed in silent attention while the sermon was in progress. And all around the big pavilion I could catch glimpses of many more who could not get in; and when the last word had been said a great company of them came forward to say kind things about the services, and to receive with smiles and tears a few words of affectionate counsel."

FROM OTHER LANDS.

Swedish Missions on the Congo.

ONE of the first missionary societies which took up work on the Congo is the Swedish Missionary Union, connected with the Swedish Free Church. Its first missionary went out in 1881 in connection with the old Congo or Livingstone Inland Mission, which in 1884 was transferred to the American Baptist Missionary Union. Although the first missionary, Rev. C. J. Engvall, after only a few months, had to return home broken down in health, the Union was not discouraged, but sent out in 1882 two new missionaries, one of whom is still in the field.

At present the Swedish Missionary Union has six stations, with twenty out-stations, about thirty European missionaries, forty-four native evangelists, forty-three schools with 1083 children. During last year 261 converts were baptized. Translations have been made of the Gospel of John and the Acts of the Apostles, and editions of 7000 each printed, also 5000 copies of a hymn-book with 312 hymns. Of the monthly paper, "Mansamu Mayinge," 800 copies are issued every month.

In the beginning of this year a three months' course for training of native evangelists was held at Mukimbungu, the oldest station. The course was attended by thirty-four natives, of whom two were from Mayinge, belonging to Rev. A. B. Simpson's missions. The subjects were Bible knowledge, reading, writing, geography, arithmetic, natural history, singing, mission and church history, homiletics, etc. Some lectures about the great missionaries of the century were also given. At the examination in May it was found that many had made good progress in these subjects.

In a recent letter one of the missionaries writes: "We have now many new native workers. May the Lord of the harvest also find amongst the friends of the mission many willing to support them." The support of a native evangelist in that part of Congo amounts to about £9 a year. Further information can be obtained from Rev. K. E. Laman, Mukimbungo, Matadi, Congo; or from Rev. C. J. Engvall, Scandinavian West End Mission, 17, Percy-street, London, W.

Soldiers in Cairo.

SINCE my appeal in your issue of THE CHRISTIAN, December 9, we have been trying to help the soldiers in Cairo. A temporary home was opened on November 23, and on April 27 General Sir F. Grenfell opened the Russell Soldiers' Home, expressing his warm appreciation of our efforts to help the men under his command. The rent of the Russell Soldiers' Home is paid by a father in memory of a beloved son. Every night a Gospel meeting is held in the Home, and our three workers are kept busy visiting the sick and wounded in the great Military hospital, the women whose husbands are up the hill, and the troops in the different barracks, holding meetings amongst them with good results.

But our house, though the best we could secure at the time, is too small and inconvenient for the great work we have to do. To enable us in some little measure to cope with the drinking-houses all around us, which are such a snare to our soldiers, we should have a coffee-bar and hall on the ground flat, and more workers, with suitable rooms for their accommodation. The need is very great.

A friend who went at his own expense to help Mr. Stewart, wrote: "I often think it would break the hearts of fathers and mothers if they knew the position of the lads out here. Passing through the lowest bazaars, as we once did, the scene is like a glimpse of the infernal regions. It is utterly indescribable; one shudders to remember it. Into this hell upon earth our soldiers are going night after night, many of them lads of eighteen and twenty years of age, to be drugged by poisonous drink and ruined irretrievably in body and soul. There is ample work among the soldiers in this city at present for a dozen of the best workers that could be sent."

A young, intelligent, well-educated soldier, who was looking from the balcony of our Home at his comrades as they swarmed into the distillery public-house, said, "Such things as there are in this city ought not to be allowed. I never thought there was such a place on the face of the earth." "Where our men have to form up and march back to barracks is like hell, miss," said a sergeant of the military police. "I have read of Sodom in the Bible, but it is worse here," wrote a Christian once stationed in Maryhill, whose regiment is now in Cairo. "My duty causes me to ride through the streets of Cairo between one and four o'clock every morning, and I'm sorry for my own countrymen. I'm glad you have come to help them."

How can we help them? The Alhambra was offered to the Rev. Mr. Lawrence in 1886 for £12,000. He had it valued by a competent person, who testified it to be worth £6000. It is now in the market for £3000. At a meeting in Keswick the Lord stirred the spirit (Ezra i. 1, Haggai i. 14) of his people to give, and £1154 16s. were devoted to the purchase of this building, £1845 4s. are needed to enable us to purchase it, and for alterations and furnishing about £1000. This would give us a large central hall where not only soldiers, but English-speaking Jews, Armenians, Copts, Syrians, and many of our own countrymen may hear the Gospel. There is no English service on Sunday morning, except that in the English Church, which is a comparatively small building. Divine service is held within each barracks for the troops. A convention is to be held early in February. We are asking God to give us this building for this Convention, and believe, since we seek it for his service and glory only, He will give it.—Yours, etc.,

Japanese Jottings.

BY GEO. C. NEEDHAM.

THE stupendous heathenism of Japan is neither farcical nor sentimental. Its semi-civilisation rather intensifies the darkness of "the light of Asia," and is more depressing than otherwise. The imitation of Western customs and costumes is ridiculous, nor does it of itself portend a rise in the scale of a higher civilisation. It is appalling to reflect that nearly forty millions of Japanese are yet "in the shadow of death," and their feet walk in paths of darkness wherein they stumble. But there are many agencies at work pushing on the chariot of salvation, and thousands are entering therein.

One of the oldest and most practical forms of missionary work is that of the British and American Bible Society for the circulation of the Scriptures. The work is chiefly done through colporteurs, and the books are sold. Experience has proved that purchased books are more appreciated than those freely presented; but circumstances and occasions are considered, and many copies of the Bible, some of great value, have gone into the hands of leading dignitaries as well as the more humble people. The latest report is most cheering. During the past seven years there were circulated: Bibles, 19,574; Testaments, 121,676; portions, 590,940. The total value of manufacture amounted to more than £10,000. The successful and beloved agent, Rev. H. Loomis, of Yokohama, has toiled nobly and persistently in this primary department of Christian missions. During the late war with China he had access to Japanese officers and soldiers, and with his helpers placed the Book in the hands of thousands who hold it as a choice treasure.

One of the most useful native Christians who has recently come to the front is Kataoka Kenkichi, late the President of the Lower House of Parliament. After the dissolution of the Diet he held a meeting for prayer and thanksgiving at his official residence, where several members of the House, and other official friends, were gathered. Among other important remarks Mr. Kataoka said: "When I was first approached by my friends, and urged to accept nomination for President, I positively refused; but when I came afterwards to think and pray over the matter, I felt that perhaps it was God's will for me to accept the position, and if so I ought not to refuse, as God would surely also grant me the help necessary rightly to perform my duties. With this faith and trust in God, I accepted the nomination, and the fact that I have not, as I believe, brought discredit upon myself nor disgrace upon the office is entirely due to the help which God has given me. On taking my seat in the House it has been my daily custom before beginning the business of the day to offer up a silent prayer to God for help, and to ask his blessing upon myself and upon the assembly." This is the first time that such a meeting has been held in an official residence in Japan, and is truly a remarkable occurrence. This fact of itself needs no comment. It was our privilege two days ago to address a number of leading students, representing the Imperial University and twenty-two other schools. Mr. Kataoka spoke to the young men on the practical results of Christianity. It was an address of great power, as told me by the men who understood the language.

Doors are open to us in this land. Mrs. Needham has access to many ladies. Our Bible conferences will be held in the mountains. Calls are coming from various cities. Missionaries of all churches are invited. We expect great things from our God.

Progress in China.

GOD'S work in this land seems to have taken a long step forward, perhaps in answer to many prayers called forth by political unrest in the Far East. On all hands there seems to be a better attitude on the part of officials and people, a greater readiness to listen and learn. At our own station we have much to be thankful for. One unique feature here is that so many men officially connected with the Yamun (the magistrate's residence) have become inquirers. How long they will be able to retain their offices and live Christian lives, remains to be seen. Already some of them have refused to have any part in idolatrous worship connected with their offices.

Last Sunday we baptized five persons, three of whom are father, mother, and son. Several families are coming forward. A few weeks ago we examined several candidates for baptism, and there are ten accepted, who, if they show a good profession until the autumn, will be baptized. One of them is a B.A., the first Sin-chang literary man to confess Christ. There are also about a dozen hopeful inquirers.

As in many other parts of China, the Roman Catholics have been causing trouble. Two men, last year, left us because the Romanists took up a lawsuit in which I refused to help them, as it had no connection with the church. This was the first attempt of the Romanists to enter this district, and since then these two men have been willing tools, trying to persuade others to leave us and join them. Two months ago some Buddhist priests offered to sell their idol temple to us for a chapel, with some land attached to it. I consulted with the church members, who said they would bear the financial responsibility if I undertook the purchase.

The price is 1000 dols., or just £100. One Christian has already advanced 400 dols., obtained on the security of his own fields, and others have promised certain sums. They cannot give this money, but they have advanced it, expecting to be able to repay themselves by realising the property that is attached to the temple, bearing any loss there may be themselves, but if there is any gain it is to come to the church for God's work. We have an increasing body of Christians and inquirers in that district, and have long been praying that God would give us a place for them to worship in. The proceeds from the land would support a native pastor or evangelist in perpetuity, as well as helping on the work in other ways.

The matter of the temple has progressed since I wrote the above; and yesterday, after prayer together, several of us went over and took possession in the name of the Lord, putting a man in charge. We missionaries greatly desire, and are earnestly praying, that God will send us the money to enable us to retain the whole property. It would be a very great help to the church on the way to self-support. My hope is that God will send us a couple of young men for evangelistic work, for there is a large district away beyond that place that has scarcely been reached, and the temple is more than large enough to accommodate them, whereas our house accommodation in the city is very cramped.

A Bright Home in India.

A GOOD work is being carried on in Chunar, a station in North India, on the River Ganges, by Miss Patteson, an experienced missionary, who has lived and worked for many years among the women and girls of India.

Last year she opened a home for widows and orphans whom she rescued from starvation during the late terrible famine. At first it seemed more like a hospital, as the inmates suffered so much from scurvy, insanity, dysentery, fever, ulcers and boils. Miss Patteson, having received some medical training before she went to India, was able to give medicine to the sick, as well as to comfort and relieve the suffering ones and to lead them to Jesus, who is a "rest for the weary and joy of the sad." Many of the women and children when received into the Home were too weak and ill to learn anything, but now they receive daily instruction, and many of them are able to read the Hindi New Testament, and have been led to trust in Christ as their Saviour, and to enjoy his full salvation.

A woman of high caste came into the Home hoping to be allowed to keep her caste, but was told that there is no such thing as caste there, but that all are equal who share the food the Lord sends them. So with many tears Maharajni broke her caste and ate with the Christians. At length she, too, became a Christian, and is now being trained as a Biblewoman that she may teach her own countrywomen the way of salvation through Christ.

Miss Patteson, in writing about the women, says:—"Another Brahmini, or high caste, woman came to me lately from Allahabad with her little son and daughter. She was blind, and all were objects of misery, especially the little baby girl, who had been sadly neglected. The boy, whose name was Rambahadur, lingered only a few days, as he was very ill from starvation, though he did not look so reduced as the baby. One evening the poor blind mother felt her boy all over, and then cried out, 'He is dying!' She then threw herself on the ground in an agony of grief, and we had to remove her to let her son die in peace. She never seemed to notice the wail of the fragile baby whose transparent skin and large sad eyes touched every heart in the Home. We did all we could to restore this little one, but one day her eyes closed to open no more in this world. Soon after the mother died with her son's name on her lips."

Some of the orphans have been found dying of starvation on the road to Chunar, and others have been brought in too far gone in hunger and misery to be restored to life. All the children now in the Home are very healthy and happy. There are about 130 women and children, the Home is always full; some of the women go to other parts of India as soon as they are able to earn their own livelihood, and others come. Miss Patteson says, "How often do we pray that this Home may be the spiritual birthplace of every woman and child, and that God will give to them a name better than that of sons and daughters."

Miss Patteson is the only European missionary living in Chunar, but once a month a missionary comes from Benares to conduct services in the church. The Home is supported by freewill offerings of the Lord's people.

In October I hope to join Miss Patteson in this interesting but arduous work, and endeavour to make her life a little less lonely. May I ask the prayers of God's people who read this account, that all the help we need may be given, and many more women and children be won for Christ?

On the Niger.—Mr. Ernest A. J. Thomas, of the C.M.S. Niger Mission, writing from Lokoja, acknowledges the kindness of the unknown friend who regularly sends him The Christian. He says: "This is an act of Christian sympathy that I much appreciate. After reading, I always pass the paper on to my native fellow-workers, and they are always glad to get it. Prayer is needed for this part; at present I am the only European missionary working in this district, where there are thousands of heathen and Mohammedans who know nothing of Jesus the Saviour."

THE LATE

Rev. Edward White.

THE late Rev. Edward White, regarding whose ministerial life and work all types of religious papers have been writing at length, was pleased on several occasions to acknowledge his interest in the purpose and tone of The Christian. Occasionally he sent to us, as well as to others, kind messages and candid criticisms; and a year or two ago we printed from his pen a thoughtful paper on the place of the outpouring of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost. Mr. White held that this sublime event took place, not in the upper room, as seems to have been generally believed, but in the precincts of the Temple—in fact, in "Solomon's porch"—where the disciples, with men of all nations, would in the ordinary course be assembled at the hour of prayer and morning sacrifice.

During recent years Mr. White was very strong in his advocacy of such as would give a more fundamental place to Scripture study in its breadth and depth. This was not altogether surprising, seeing that one of his addresses from the chair of the Congregational Union in 1886 was on "Handling the Scriptures." It is a pleasure at this time to give the substance of a letter received from Mr. White a short time ago on this important subject:—

From a photograph by Mr. J. B. Best, Broxbourne.

The education of a teacher in Christ's Church should be founded on three things: (1) A general but exact knowledge of the contents of the Sacred Scriptures as a whole, in English; (2) a special and an exact knowledge of the Pentateuch and of the Gospels, and one or two of the Epistles; (3) a determination to make these the foundation of all future study and teaching—as authoritative. Not one of these conditions is fulfilled in the course generally pursued in

THE THEOLOGICAL COLLEGES.

The students are grounded and founded upon a set of lectures, drawn up and delivered by tutors who scarcely ever had any really Scriptural education themselves. I do not know any college where the students are taught the Scriptures in order. They are taught a book in Hebrew, and a Gospel or an Epistle in Greek, but the whole revelation—never, never! If Timothy's grandmother, Lois, had taught him in this fashion he might have held any set of pagan notions as the substance of Divine revelation mixed with Christianity.

I have belonged (Deo gratias) for forty years to a "breakfast" of "ministers of the Word" (dear men, all of them). After the meal we sit down to study a chapter of some book of Scripture in order. Nothing is more wonderful than the small desire existing in many to care for Old Testament books, or to accept them (especially the Mosaic) as authorities introductory to the New. Nothing is more needed than a of theological colleges, so that the students may be founded not on the word of men, but of God, by direct and connected study, close and continuous exposition, based on all existing aids in hermeneutics, so that the men may early and clearly know that God has revealed Himself to man, and requires that revelation to be made known by his servants.

As things are at present, the men go forth, not so much as "fishers of men" as of texts; and thus they spend their lives in fishing for their texts, instead of in close, connected study of these wonderful writings, one half of whose meaning is between the "verses"—i.e., in a real and logical connection of the paragraphs.

The theory of modern preaching is to make a "Sermo"—a human speech—not to set forth the connected ideas of Deity, starting from the death which came by sin, and ending in the immortality which comes by the incarnate Word and the Eternal Spirit. The masses of our middle-classes who go to church are grossly ignorant of the contents of the Bible (Biblia—set of books), and submit to methods and rules of interpretation which they would scout if attempted to be enforced in interpreting or dealing with a classic or a newspaper.

Here is an eruption of my little mole-hill of a volcano! But it is a just and necessary outbreak; which is (I doubt not) in direct conformity with the will of Him who is the Amen — "the Faithful and True Witness." I thank God that the only theological education I ever had in early life was that received from my friend and tutor, Charles Nice Davis,* an Indian officer, once Persian interpreter to his regiment, who had a bad accident to his spine, and became a minister of a Congregational church at Norwood, where I lived well nigh a year before going to Glasgow University. And all my subsequent experiences have confirmed what I heard from him as to the ordinary method of clerical education. The devil knows well that if he can of ministers, he has the ball at his feet.

The New Hebrides.—The Scotsman of Saturday last contained an instructive article on Great Britain and America in the Pacific Ocean. In conclusion, the writer says:—"From the circumstance that their convict colony of New Caledonia is only two hundred miles distant, although Cook both discovered and named that island, the French covet the New Hebrides, and have been restrained from seizing the group only by a convention which equally keeps Great Britain from taking formal possession. The position has long been intolerable, and it could not last if the colonies of Australia united to put pressure on the Colonial Office. As the Powers of North America and Europe map out the Pacific coasts and islands anew, as new coaling stations are formed, and fortresses like that planned already at Honolulu are built, and as new lines of swift steamers make the Pacific a lake of the English-speaking peoples, Federal Australia must obtain possession of the New Hebrides—and much more."

* We remember Charles Nice Davis as one of the tutors at Brecon College. The injury to his spine was occasioned by a heroic act in stopping a pair of runaway horses in a carriage, and saving the lives of the lady occupants.

"In Christ Jesus."*

By Dr. A. T. PIERSON.

I WILL call attention to two verses in the Epistle to the Romans—the second verse of the eighth chapter: "For the law of the Spirit of life in sin and Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of death"; and the fourth verse of the sixth chapter: "Therefore we are buried with Him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." These two verses in their connection suggest to us three great thoughts: First, a new sphere of holy living—"In Christ Jesus"; secondly, a new spirit of holy living—"the Spirit of life"; and thirdly, a new secret of holy living—"the law of the Spirit of life."

First, the Sphere of the New Life—"In Christ Jesus." Three words in the fourteenth chapter of the Gospel of St. John are perhaps the most pregnant words in the New Testament about this subject. "Ye in Me." It is amazing how often the expression "in Christ" or "in Christ Jesus" occurs in the New Testament. I have counted it over 130 times, and when you take the kindred expressions "by Christ," or "with Christ," or "through Christ," which mean essentially the same thing, you have the number raised to hundreds. Now notice, the sphere of holy living, not simply the circle of holy living. A circle differs from a sphere in this: a circle surrounds us on one plane, but a sphere on every plane. If you draw a circle on the floor and step within it, you are inside of the circle on the plane of your feet, but not on the plane of your head, or of any other part of your body. But if you step inside a sphere, the plane is in front, behind, on the right, on the left, below and above. And a sphere that thus surrounds us also separates from what is outside of us. Hence Christ is to the believer. A sphere is also a protecting surrounding to the believer; it protects from what is outside. And Christ is the protecting sphere of our spiritual life. And then it is also a supplying sphere, for whatever is in it you get, too, if you are in it.

Now the question comes, how am I ever to live this new life? Here is the secret, and here is the answer, "The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death"; and "Like as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." What thanks can we give to God for these six words: "like as," "even so," "we also"? See the amount the Holy Ghost can put into these six little words.

Now, just a word about this sphere of life. I have already said this expression, "in Christ," occurs very frequently in the New Testament—in fact, it is a kind of key to the whole New Testament. You can write over every Epistle in the New Testament the words "in Christ Jesus," and qualify them by one other word, and you will express the key-meaning of every one of the Epistles. I suppose we cannot get hold of this idea, "in Christ Jesus," unless we get hold of the conception of the second Adam, that is, Christ, the second Adam and the last Adam, which implies that there is no third Adam. What was Adam? The representative of the race. And you may quibble about it theologically, and resist it, though practically it must be admitted that the whole race went down in Adam when he fell. His penalty made it impossible for him to transmit a better nature and estate than he had, and so the whole race practically fell with him in his first transgression. Nevertheless there are a great many that fall in Adam, but do not sin after the similitude of Adam's transgression. And so God gave the race, for this and other reasons, a second Representative, and I think that is the only way we can account for the salvation of infants that die before they have sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression, though they have not exercised the similitude of Adam's faith; because, inasmuch as they only fall representatively, they rise representatively. But if you have sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression you must believe after the similitude of Adam's faith. When the element of the will enters into your sin, it must enter into your salvation also. I remember seeing at St. Andrews this epitaph on a tombstone:—

Blind infidelity, turn pale and die,
Beneath this stone two infants' ashes lie:
Say, are they lost or saved?
If death's by sin, they sinned, for they are here;
If heaven's by works, in heaven they can't appear.
Ah reason, how depraved!
Revere the Sacred Page, the knot's untied—
They died, for Adam sinned; they live, for Jesus died.

Why not look a little more at the blessed doctrine of the last Adam, for then we come to see how all Christ's acts and experiences in this world had a certain representative character, for He was the Son of Man as well as the Son of God?

There are some events of his life that you will readily recall and see their representative character. For instance, his death, burial, and resurrection; then his breathing the Holy Ghost on his disciples as an indwelling Spirit; then his forty days' walk in newness of life; then his ascension to the right hand of God; then his satisfaction—the joy set before Him for all his human suffering; then his session at the right hand of God; and then his coming again in glory. If you take from Romans to Thessalonians, and follow them closely, you will find they set forth the representative character of Christ in exactly this order, although not standing in the order of their composition.

In Romans you have Christ justified through his death, burial, and resurrection; in Corinthians you have the indwelling Spirit making the human being a temple, the breathing the Spirit into the disciples; in Galatians you have the walk in the Spirit in newness of life; in Ephesians you have the ascent to the heavenlies; in Philippians you have the joy that was set before the disciple which compensated Him for all his sufferings; in Colossians you have the session at the right hand of God, for Christ is seated there; in Thessalonians you have the coming again in glory. So that you may say that all these epistles represent the great subject, "In Christ Jesus." Romans—justified in Christ Jesus; Corinthians, sanctified in Christ Jesus; Galatians, the new walk in Christ Jesus; Ephesians, the ascension in Christ Jesus; Philippians, compensation in Christ Jesus; Colossians, the session at God's right hand in Christ Jesus; Thessalonians, the coming again in Christ Jesus. And the thing I want you to apprehend, so far as it is possible to be apprehended, is that the moment you enter into this holy sphere in Christ Jesus He is all to you that these words represent, and ten thousand times more than words can express.

Now I pray you to look a little further. "The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus." You enter this sphere of life and you find there a new atmosphere, the Holy Ghost. That Spirit filled Him, and that Spirit fills you when you are in Him. And, as I have already intimated, that Spirit becomes the Spirit of a new life, utterly impossible for you to have if you do not get into this new sphere. And that settles ten thousand things that are otherwise doubts and perplexities. Let us stop and look a moment. "Like as." The Greek scholar would tell you that the word translated "as" there is the intensive form—"just as," "precisely as." "Like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life."

Did you ever comprehend what a wonderful miracle the resurrection of Jesus Christ was? It is only a short time ago I noticed, in John xx., what I am ashamed to say I never noticed before—that is, that John's unbelief seems to have been overcome by something he saw when he looked into the empty sepulchre. For instance, in the 7th and 8th verses: "And the napkin, that was about his head, not lying with the linen clothes, but wrapped together in a place by itself. Then went in also that other disciple"—John—"which came first to the tomb, and he saw and believed." What did he see that made him believe? He did not simply believe that there was the empty sepulchre—that was easy enough to believe—but he saw something that convinced him that was a miracle. What did he see? Will you notice a peculiar word used in the previous verse for "convolution," "wrapped together"; it does not mean "folded together." It means "in convolution."

There is another word used by the Evangelist to describe the temporary embalmment; it means "to bind round tightly as with cloth." They brought the linen clothes that they were going to embalm Him with permanently, and a hundred pounds of spices, and they wrapped the body and the spices in between the folds of the clothes that there should be no decay until they could properly remove the perishable parts of his human body and fill it with spices. Now when John stooped and looked in that sepulchre, what did he see? He saw those linen clothes exactly as they had been wrapped around that sacred body, undisturbed in their convolutions, and he knew that it was a miracle. Jesus Christ had sloughed them off; they could not hold his body when it was thrilled with the new energy of the Spirit of God. John saw that, and he believed. Now, "Like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." If you have got the old habits of your life wound tightly about you, it would take centuries for you to unwind one fold of them, but when the Spirit of God comes on you, you can slough them off just as Christ did the cerements of the sepulchre. The miracle of Christ's resurrection was the greatest miracle of all, and it makes all other miracles credible. In that miracle the blind eyes get sight, and the deaf ears get hearing, and the lame get the power of motion, and the dead heart resumes its beating, and the silent mouth learns again to speak.

Now the thing I want to impress upon you is this. You say, "I have tried often to lead a right life, and I cannot do it." Certainly not, for you have not the Spirit of life. "But as soon as I became a child of God I tried, and have not been successful." Just so; you have not come out of the struggle of the seventh chapter of Romans into the security of the wonderful life of the eighth. There is nothing said in the seventh chapter about the Spirit of God, and I think there are something like nineteen references to the Spirit of God in the first twenty-seven verses of the eighth chapter. In the seventh chapter you will find that the expression law is used in the sense of tendency. There are four laws referred to in the seventh and eighth chapters: there is the law of God, there is the law of the mind, there is the law of sin and death, and there is the law of life. And, as I have said, law seems to be used in the sense of tendency. "I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members." Now if you use the word "law" in this second verse of the eighth chapter as expressing the idea of a new tendency, you get the conception that I want to bring out. "The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death."

What is gravitation? It is a tendency towards the centre. Now, if you got delivered from the power of the law of gravitation you would rise at once into the air without the slightest effort. There is a centrifugal and a centripetal force in the solar system—the one draws a planet towards the centre, and the other draws it off into space. These are and in nature, over and over again, we have forces to counteract other forces. Now, here is a tendency you see in yourself, a tendency downward, working towards evil. But when you are filled with the Spirit of God you have a new tendency, a tendency that counteracts the other tendency, and frees you from the law and dominion of sin and death which is in your members. And you can never understand this until you experience it. A man who is a profane man, and a drunkard, and a blasphemous man, and a man of lust, cannot understand how there is such deliverance as we preach to you here in the name of the Lord. But when he comes to God and enters into the sphere of Christ Jesus he finds there a new atmosphere that makes him vitalised with the vitality of God, and, enabled by the power of God, he begins to understand what cannot be understood except as it is experienced, that "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death."

At this stage let me ask—for it is possible there may be an unconverted soul here—How do you get into that sphere, beloved? You get into it by an act of faith or appropriation on your part. But that would not answer if there were not an act of regeneration on God's part. For every animal has its element. A bird cannot live in the water, nor a fish in the air; a bird would suffocate in the water, and a fish would suffocate in the air. And if you are going to enter into Christ Jesus and live, your gills must be changed to lungs or your lungs changed to gills. That is to say, there must occur in your very spiritual construction a new adaptation to the new atmosphere. Even if you could enter the sphere without regeneration, you would be stifled in an instant; and so God ordains that your act of appropriation should make it possible for you to enter, and his act of regeneration can make it possible to stay. That is the wonderful truth that seems to me to be unfolded in this remarkable text of Scripture—in Christ Jesus my sphere of holy living; in the Holy Spirit, because in Christ Jesus, the element of my holy living, the atmosphere of my holy living; and the new tendency I find, in the habitation of this Spirit, to live a separated and sanctified and gloriously vitalised life, the secret of my overcoming power. So that, do not you see that for everything you are to look to the Lord Jesus? The moment you begin to look at yourself you are in trouble; you have your eye off the centre of power, and your eye is now on the centre and source of all weakness and failure.

Look at Peter walking on the water, Christ perhaps two or three hundred yards away, far enough to seem ghostly, near enough to be heard when He spoke. He said to Peter, "Come," and Peter stepped out of the boat and went on the water. As long as he kept his eye on Jesus he did exactly as Jesus did; he performed the miracle of walking not only on the water, but on the storm-tossed waves. But the moment he got his eye off Jesus, and thought of the wind and waves, he began to sink; and, blessed be God, the moment he got his eye back to Jesus he was restored and then walked back to the boat. You are Peter. The law of sin and death is the tendency to sin; the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus is the ability to walk: and the simple question is how far you are going to keep your eyes on Jesus and away from yourselves. And then there is the secret of peace.

The bride eyes not her garment,
But her dear bridegroom's face;
I will not gaze at glory,
But on my King of grace;
Not at the crown He giveth,
But on his pierced hand—
The Lamb is all the glory
Of Immanuel's land.

If you will keep your eyes off your garments, and keep them on Him, if you will keep them away from your resources of strength, as you sometimes think them to be in your resolutions and struggles, and keep them on Him, you will find that so long as they are on Him it is just as unnatural for you to sin as it is natural for you to sin when your eyes are off Him. I remarked at Leicester, last Sunday, that I think the devil has his hymn-book as well as Keswick, and I think a good many of us are singing the devil's hymns even while we think we are not doing it. I know I have been singing them for years.

What do I mean? I mean that, in our formal singing, instead of fixing our eyes on Jesus, his merit, ability, greatness, almighty power, and wisdom, in practical fact we get our eyes on ourselves, and we go about talking of our experience, of visions, and looking at the narrowness of our own resources and weaknesses, and so we get down into the slough. Suppose we try one of the Keswick hymns and see how the devil would read it:

Like a river glorious
Is my inward peace,
For I'm now victorious,
And my conflicts cease.
Once sin had enslaved me,
Satan was too strong;
Now my struggle's saved me,
And repelled the wrong.

How will that do as the devil's hymn? A great many people are singing it. Take another:

Jesus, I am resting, resting,
In the joy of what Thou art;
I am finding out the greatness
Of thy loving heart.

Now, how do we practically sing that in our own experience?

Jesus, I am resting, resting,
In the joy of what I am,
I have overcome my temper,
And become a lamb.

You smile, but it is a most awful fact that we disciples of Jesus Christ are constantly looking at ourselves, our attainments, our victories, our failures, our despondencies, the ups and downs of our Christian life; and the consequence is we get our eye off the centre and source of power. You say, "I am not always discouraged when I look at myself." So much the worse for you. If any glimpse of your interior life, out of Christ Jesus and your connection with Him, gives you one instant of satisfaction, you are in the most dangerous way you can possibly be. It is far better to be despondent to the verge of despair in self-investigation and scrutiny, than to have the slightest satisfaction with your inward state apart from Him. Beloved, the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus is mighty to help you to overcome all your enemies, but you have got to be "in Jesus Christ" and stay there.

I remember when I was a boy and put my hand for the first time on an electric machine, I became electric; all my hair stood on end, because electricity seeks a point of departure; and as my instructor came to me and presented his knuckle on my body he got an electric shock from me. If you keep your hand on Jesus you become Christlike; the power that is in Him is in you, the attraction that is in Him is in you, the repulsion that is in Him is in you. And the whole secret of power, holiness, and peace is found, in my judgment, in these two verses, "Like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life"; and "The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death."

Thy Little One.

Only "Thy little one," Master!
Here, at thy feet nestled low;
Waiting thy whispered directions,
Ere on thine errands I go.

Only "Thy little one," Master!
Yet, I am close within call.
Wilt Thou not trust me with something,
Even the least task of all?

Only "Thy little one," Master!
Thine—altogether—alone.
Make of me all Thou would'st have me,
Do what Thou wilt with thine own.

Only "Thy little one," Master!
Here for a while at thy will;
Then, let me serve Thee up yonder;
Only "Thy little one" still.

Wesleyan Mission in the Mysore Province. —Among much interesting information concerning the extensive field covered by this work, we learn that the nearest approach to a class movement is found in the wandering tribe of Gipsy Koramas. Since the founding of the first Christian village of Korama converts at Bommanahalli, Mr. Dumbarton reports the building of a second Christian village near Tarikere, named Satyapura, "the city of truth." Another promising class are the outcasts Holeyas. Mr. Gulliford writes of Holagere: Numbers of persons in this suburb of Mysore are largely Christian in thought and worship. They speak frankly of their position—if they publicly embrace Christianity, their means of living would be taken from them. Till we are able to purchase gardens for them, it is not easy to see what they are to do, but the work of years ought soon to appear in the ingathering of many. The general superintendent of the mission is Rev. J. A. Vanes.

INTERNATIONAL S.S. LESSONS.

August 21.

"Naaman healed."—2 Kings v. 1-14.

Golden Text.—"Heal me, O Lord, and I shall be healed; save me, and I shall be saved."
—Jer. xvii. 14.

NAAMAN THE LEPER (1).

"Leper."—Naaman was a general in the army of Syria, and with Israel the Syrians had defeated the Assyrians. He is every inch a soldier, hardy, fiery, yet generous. His character as a soldier is borne throughout this story.

Lessons. 1. Everyone who would be great must overcome obstacles. Many would have given up striving with a disease like Naaman's. He succeeded in spite of disadvantages.

2. Every life has its burden. This was no curse, but the schoolmaster which brought Naaman nearer to God.

3. We must mind where we place our "but." It should come after the troubles and before the blessings, "Naaman was a leper, but," etc. "Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth him out of them all."

WHAT A CHILD CAN DO.

Naaman, in one of his raids on the Israelites' borders, had carried this little maid captive. She became a slave in his house (compare story of Joseph). She bore no ill-will to her captor. She tried to do him good. This is the love we should show to our enemies.

Lessons.—1. The importance of little things. The Pyramids are built on grains of sand. The shipworm boring through the side of the vessel made a leak and sunk the ship and passengers.

2. Say the right, kind word when we can in home and school; we can never tell how much good it may do.

THE WRONG PHYSICIAN (5-7).

King of Syria writes to the King of Israel, thinking that Elisha must be in the king's power, if not in his service. He sends raiment and money as presents—Talent of silver, about £389—in all, £3890. Shekel of gold, about £2—in all, £12,000. The King of Israel was powerless to heal Naaman.

Lesson.—Only one Person who is able to cleanse the soul from sin—God Himself. We may forgive wrong done to us, but every wrong act is done against God. He can by his love forgive, and He can remove not only the guilt of sin, but also its power.

GOD'S PHYSICIAN (8-10).

Every man to his work. God had appointed Elisha to do this. The messenger of God has no need to humble himself before earthly princes and generals (10). Reasons for Elisha's command (10):—

1. To prove that the cure was of God. The waters of Jordan could not of themselves cure leprosy. 2. It would strengthen his faith in God. 3. It would humiliate him. 4. It would be something simple, which could give no excuse for disobedience.

The teacher should apply this to the acceptance of God's love offered by Jesus Christ to cleanse man from his sin.

GOD'S WAY REFUSED (11, 12).

Naaman was angry (1) because Elisha did not come down to him, (2) because the remedy was not what he expected, (3) because it seemed to imply that the waters of Jordan were better than those of his own country.

Teachers should emphasise how man rejects God's offer because (1) his pride is so great that he expects to be treated with some special consideration. He cannot realise that "all have sinned," and therefore "there is no difference." All must humble themselves before Him." (2) They expect to be saved in their own way. They cannot get away from their own preconceived notions as to how they ought to be saved. (3) The way of salvation is to them ridiculously simple—that they think it cannot come from God.

NAAMAN HEALED (13, 14).

The servants were not excited and enraged as Naaman was. They could reflect, hence they reasoned with him (13). How many seek to do some great thing whereby to be saved. If the "great thing" would save them, they would give no glory to God.

Students' Summer Conference.

[By Our Special Correspondent.]

THE Conference of British students at Ripon, briefly noted in last issue, was continued throughout the week, and was from first to last a very notable convocation. It was notable for the composition of its personnel, embracing, as it did, between 300 and 400 of the flower of the Christian educated youth of Great Britain and Ireland. A large number of colleges were represented; the delegates numbered 200 women and 180 men, being, as stated last week, the largest muster of students attending any summer conference since these gatherings began at Keswick five years ago.

The choice of Ripon as a location for this year's conference was a happy one. Centrally situated for all parts of the country, there are an old-fashioned quietude and leisure about this ancient Yorkshire town that fit it for such a gathering. The male students' camp was pitched in a pleasant field half a mile out of the town, and near to the fine Grammar School, which served as a sleeping and eating place for the lady students, as well as an auditorium when stress of weather made the meeting tent uncomfortably damp. Much of the weather was favourable, but there were intervals of rain and storm sufficiently severe to test the stamina of the sojourners in camp.

Your brief notice of last week summarised the main proceedings up to Monday. The gatherings of Tuesday, though most important, may be recorded briefly in outline. The morning hour from nine to ten was filled up with held in the different dwelling tents. These appropriately supplemented the more public Bible readings of Professor White referred to in last week's report, and were a gratifying indication of the place of honour which the study of the revealed Scriptures holds in the several College Christian Unions which supply the conference membership.

An hour later at a meeting in the large tent, Mr. D. M. Thornton and Mr. G. H. Moule expounded the conduct of missionary bands in the colleges. A three or four years' course of missionary study having been mapped out for these bands, China has been chosen as the great theme of next year's special attention on the part of student volunteers. A number of text books on the condition of China from the missionary standpoint has been collected, so that students may choose those which they deem most likely to help them in their researches.

Still later in the forenoon of Tuesday addresses were given in the tent by Miss Glass, the lady travelling secretary, and Mr. A. G. Fraser, the newly appointed travelling secretary of the S.V.M.U., on to the Lord's work. This subject was explained, illustrated, and commended by both speakers in a very wise and practical as well as thorough-going fashion. Suggestions were given as to ways in which, by some personal self-denial, the students might materially help on the coming of Christ's Kingdom, and the fruit will doubtless appear in succeeding days and years.

In the afternoon a meeting was held on behalf of the Khalsa Prayer Union, which is devoted to the evangelisation of the Sikh tribes in India. That was followed by an interesting setting forth of the work of the Bombay Settlement for Ladies.

As most readers may recollect, these summer conferences were originated by the Students' Volunteer Missionary Union (S.V.M.U.), with which there became affiliated afterwards the more local British College Christian Union (B.C.C.U.). After some years' experience it has been thought best that the two kindred associations

SHOULD BECOME ORGANICALLY ONE.

The officials of both have virtually been the same, and it has been felt that confusion will be avoided, while the organisations will be simplified by the union. This step was considered at a meeting in the tent late on Tuesday afternoon. A report of the relations between the two Unions during the past year was given, a new constitution was submitted, and the amalgamation was practically accomplished. The title to be finally adopted for the enlarged organisation was not fixed, but probably that of the B.C.C.U. will be retained, with the S.V.M.U. as a subordinate department.

In the evening Rev. F. B. Meyer was the speaker at a large and deeply impressive convention meeting in the tent. His theme was the infilling of the Holy Spirit, and it was pressed home with all Mr. Meyer's customary clearness and urgency. A second meeting took the form largely of a consecration season, when many were led to claim God for themselves and their life work, his promised enduement of possession and power.

On Wednesday morning there was a meeting solely for student volunteers to consider and promote the organising of fresh local branches. Addresses were given by Mr. H. C. Duncan and others. Afterwards Professor White gave his last Bible reading, which was on "Prayer." These expositions by Mr. White, so luminous in style and so fraught with helpful teaching, have been greatly valued.

The closing meeting of the forenoon was one on the aims of a College Christian Union. These were unfolded and applied by Mr. Gairdner and Mr. Oldham. The former summed up the thing to be aimed at in this pregnant sentence, "All the colleges for Christ, and each student of all." As he remarked, it is a superhuman aim only to be striven after in superhuman strength.

MEDICAL MISSIONS

drew a good company of students of both sexes to the tent in the afternoon of Wednesday, to hear an admirable and vigorous address from Dr. Greig, of the Irish Presbyterian Mission, Manchuria. He set forth with much cogency and convincing force the double claims of medical missions for wide adoption in heathen lands, as fully carrying out Christ's work of healing both the bodies and the souls of men. Then followed some extremely graphic and interesting details of the work of the medical mission which Dr. Greig superintends in Manchuria. That work is of the customary sort in such missions—the treatment of in-patients at the hospital, and of the large numbers of out-patients who flock to the dispensary day by day. Many questions were put by the auditors as to various points bearing on medical mission work and its influence on the people, all of which received full and clear replies that brought into yet fuller relief the vast importance of sending out to heathen lands those who are skilled in medicine and surgery, as well as skilled in pointing lost sinners to the Saviour. The doctor, in closing, made a strong appeal to his hearers of both sexes (all of whom were supposed to be practical students of medicine) to dedicate their knowledge, their talents, and their lives to this most blessed of Christian avocations—that of the well-equipped medical missionary.

The rain having come down in torrents during the late part of the afternoon, the evening assembly gathered into the Grammar School, when addresses were given by Dr. Greig and Mrs. Bishop.

Taking for his theme the vast subject of

as illustrated in his own experience in Manchuria, Dr. Greig greatly interested his hearers. First of all, he furnished some vivid glimpses of the character of the Chinese people. He remarked on the bad government and the corrupt officialism which have been largely responsible for the national weakness recently displayed. There is scant justice to be had, for even the judges can be bought. The people generally are selfish, very avaricious, and callous to the sufferings of others. Still they have their good traits of character—e.g., their ceaseless industry, their fine mercantile instincts, their politeness, their calmness of temper, their clear intellects, and marvellous memory power. They have also a decided affinity to religious truth and to the reception of it.

As to methods of Christian work among the Chinese, Dr. Greig said that it is true wisdom to conform as far as possible to harmless native customs. If the Christian worker does not show love and sympathy towards those among whom he works, he will never win their attention and esteem. Self-possession is needed for such work, as some of the hearers will sit and smoke while they listen, and will probably interrupt in the middle of an earnest discourse to ask the speaker the price of his boot-laces! It is a mistake to indulge in the denunciation of their ways and beliefs, or to seek to explain elaborately any abstruse or deep doctrine. The best way to reach them in public exhortation is to take some aspect of Christ's work, such as his mediation between God and the sinner, illustrating it by their own social life. Such a story as that of the Prodigal Son, re-clothed in Chinese dress, never fails to interest. Referring to his special work as a medical missionary, Dr. Greig had much to say that was full of interest and encouragement. Here is a large fact and one full of hope and good cheer—as the result of thirty years' work in Manchuria there are now at least 10,000 native baptized Christians. Cases of opium suicide, or attempted suicide, are very frequent. Dr. Greig said he had rescued fifty such cases within three months. Like all those who have worked long in China, Dr. Greig spoke in terms of high commendation of the fidelity of some of the converts, under circumstances of great trial and persecution. For the successful carrying on of work in China, much Divine enthusiasm is needed. These pagan lands must be possessed for Christ at all costs. Who will respond to the Master's call?

THE ASIATIC WORLD

and its unfathomable spiritual needs provided Mrs. Bishop with a subject, in the delineation of which she almost stands alone among Christian travellers. It must surely be in the high and definite purpose of God that she has spent so much time in learning, by personal contact with the people, the social and religious condition of these Asiatic lands, and that she is now devoting herself so zealously to imparting that knowledge to the churches in Western Christian lands. After her moving and realistic recitals no one can plead the excuse of ignorance for not helping on all possible efforts for the evangelisation of these Eastern peoples.

Mrs. Bishop began by saying that in her view those who stayed at home and helped to raise funds for sending others into the foreign field were fellow workers worthy of all honour. She referred to the wonderful revival of Mohammedanism in recent times. It is a puzzling problem how this religious system, which has been regarded as a decaying one, has had such a large resurrection. Missionaries go from the Islam College at Cairo, and they secure very speedy and extensive conversions in Africa from fetish worship to Mohammedanism. These converts are, of course, more difficult than ever to reach with the Christian Gospel. A brief survey followed of the special tendencies of Buddhism, Hindooism, Confucianism, Taoism, Shintoism, and demonolatry, as these hoary systems of faith and practice are prevalent in India, China, Japan, and Corea. Their devotees, as a rule, consider themselves heirs of a great past, and they are by no means anxious to cast aside their false religions in favour of Christianity. In sending out our missionaries to these fields we must recognise that fact, and also the great variety of these false faiths; hence the need of full equipment in dealing with them. The mind of the Oriental is very subtle and alert, and he loves an argument on some recondite or abstruse problem.

Mrs. Bishop admitted that when she first visited these great Asiatic lands she was hopeful of finding at least a modicum of good result in the individual and social life of the people, from the long teaching of these ancient faiths. But now, after years of travel and close observation of the inner life of the people, her solemn and deliberate conclusion is that in all those far-spreading territories the dense darkness is unrelieved by a single bright spot—one region where purity and truth prevail, or any of the things that we associate with mankind as virtues. The condition of the people is piteous to contemplate, whether reference be made to the ruling classes or to the great mass of the population. Universal corruption; one section preying on another, and all preying on the toiling multitudes; the grinding of the faces of the poor; no truth, no mutual trust, justice unknown, no public opinion to prevent or modify injustice, the utter degradation of womankind—these were some of the points in Mrs. Bishop's detailed and terrible indictment. She sees no hope of a resurrection for the better in these systems, the original elements of good in which have been corrupted or lost by succeeding generations. Without the redemptive and saving influences of Christianity the Asiatic world must inevitably sink lower and lower. The facts recited as to the condition and influence of women in these lands were substantially the same as those given by Mrs. Bishop in her recent address to the Y.W.C.A. at the Mansion House, which we reproduced fully at the time. She closed her powerfully impressive recital by an earnest appeal to young men and women before her to step into the breach for the uplifting of those whose lives and surroundings she had described. In view of such facts, she said, will there not be many of you who will dare and do, and, if need be, die? The hope of the future and all its splendid possibilities rests with you. With you are the aspirations and the glowing enthusiasms which those who have grown older lose. May the highest aspirations of your best moments be fulfilled, whether at home or abroad; and when each one of you passes into the presence of the King Eternal, Immortal, and Invisible, may you be able to say with joy, "I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision."

The framers of the Conference programme have provided ample material for the serious consideration of the assembled students. But they have not failed to recognise that the needs of the physical frame must not be overlooked. Coming in the very middle of the Conference, Thursday was to a great extent counted an off day, when relaxation was the chief thing to be seen to. There were no general meetings fixed between 10 a.m. and 7 p.m. The weather happily took a turn for the better, and on the whole was most favourable for recreation, whether walking or cycling. A goodly number of the students of both sexes had brought their bicycles with them, and these were frequently brought into requisition in the free intervals. A good proportion of the students paid a visit to the famous Fountains Abbey, the splendid remains of which are situated some three miles out of Ripon, amid the loveliest surroundings. Even in their diversion the students did not forget the main purpose of their conference gathering; and it was delightful to hear them making the vaulted arches of the ruined abbey ring with Gospel and missionary hymns.

A VERY NOTABLE GATHERING

was the morning prayer meeting of Thursday, when the large tent was nearly filled and the manifested presence and power of God must have been evident to all. The proceedings were guided with wonderful and spirit-taught skill by one of the travelling secretaries, Mr. Gairdner, whose short preliminary exhortation led his fellow students to the necessary point of agreement as to the things to be prayed for in order to assure answers. Many prayers went up for the special needs of special colleges, and one could not doubt that a rich blessing is in store in the directions pleaded for.

A special matter for prayer was mentioned by Mr. Williamson, who has been associated as a leader in these British Students' Conventions from the beginning. He said that an urgent call had come to him from the friends in America to spend six months in visiting medical colleges in the United States. Though purposing to have proceeded to the foreign field as a medical missionary, he felt that this call was from God, and his entrance on foreign work would, he hoped, only be postponed for a brief season. He asked for earnest prayer that this visit to America might be greatly blessed of God in creating or stirring up a greater interest in the cause of Christ among the 24,000 medical students across the Atlantic.

The meeting of Thursday evening was probably one of the most important of the whole series, embracing as it did a powerful address by Mr. J. R. Mott on "The Spiritual Awakening in College or University." This address is reported almost in extenso in another part of the present issue, and we think will amply repay a careful perusal and study. The principles laid down by Mr. Mott, of course, have special application to the case of students, but they will be found serviceable and suggestive to all Christians who are desirous of bringing about a revived state of things in the Churches as a whole.

"THE MORNING WATCH"

found an able exponent and advocate at the same meeting in Mr. Williamson. He adduced cogent reasons for devoting the earliest part of the waking day to Divine fellowship and prayer. To leave to haphazard the cultivation of daily relations with God must injure our spiritual vitality, our spiritual growth, our spiritual influence, and our spiritual service. The keeping of such a quiet morning hour will make the things of God more vivid throughout the day. God demands our best, and we are at our best in the early hours of the day. The testimony of many of the saintliest men and women of to-day is in favour of the Morning Watch. Mr. Williamson went on to deal with various supposed objections and difficulties—want of time, ill health, etc.—and showed that these objections have no genuine weight in them. At the same time we are not to be in bondage to any habit, and occasionally there may be circumstances when the devotion of a stated period in the early morning to prayer and study may not be attainable.

(To be concluded.)

"Hanging Upon Nothing."

"IT is written (Job. xxvi. 7) 'He hangeth the earth upon nothing'; that is, on no visible support. And so we exult in the fact that the Scriptural Knowledge Institution for Home and Abroad, hangs, as it has ever hung since its commencement, now more than sixty-four years ago, 'upon nothing'—that is, upon no visible support. It hangs upon no human patron, upon no endowment or funded property, but solely upon the good pleasure of the Blessed God."

In these striking words Mr. Wright greets the readers of the new report of the Ashley Down Orphanages. The familiar pamphlet, which for considerably over half a century has appeared so regularly, is again before us, but we are conscious that the pen has now passed into another hand, although from the fact that the late revered founder had begun his preparation for the new report we still have words from his own pen.

Mr. Wright, as might be expected, takes up the work with cheerful hope and buoyant faith, and the record here found will show readers how that faith continues to be tested. A brief glance at the balance-sheet will indicate this clearly, while at the same time it will show the faithfulness of God and the blessedness of trust in Him.

The fact of the great bereavement does not occupy much space in the report, but the words, though few, on this point are deeply pathetic and impressive. The "will" of Mr. Müller is given in full, and closes with these striking words:—"I have written this my last will and testament with my own hand, and now, in finishing it, I cannot help admiring God's wondrous grace in bringing me to the knowledge of the Lord Jesus when I was an entirely careless and thoughtless young man, twenty years and five weeks old, and that He has kept me in his fear and truth for sixty-nine years and four months, allowing me the great honour for so long a time of serving Him. And now, in the prospect of eternity, I confess that my only hope of salvation is faith in the merits and in the atoning death of my precious, adorable Lord Jesus Christ. I sign this my last will before two witnesses, both of whom are present at the same time.—Ashley Down, Bristol, March Sixteenth, One Thousand Eight Hundred and Ninety-five (1895)."

Accompanying this "will" was a letter to Mr. Wright, in which he desired him to make known "his particular desire that those who minister the Word of God may be led to bring before their hearers the deep importance of systematic giving for the work of God in proportion to the amount with which He is pleased to entrust his children."

Mr. Wright enters fully into an account of the need which he felt for a co-worker in the directorate of the institution, and records the circumstances under which that need has been met by the association with himself of Mr. G. Fred Bergin. In this he recognises "one of the most striking answers to prayer which he has ever experienced."

Passing on to the affairs of the institution, Mr. Wright alludes to the trials of faith, in the course of which he says:—"Latterly, and especially during the last two or three years, it has been the very reverse" (i.e., of abounding). "Pressing need has been the rule; a balance in hand over and above our need the rare exception. Yet we have never been forsaken."..."We have never been permitted to give way to unbelief; and in the end our Heavenly Father has invariably shown us that his only purpose in delaying the answer to prayer was to strengthen our confidence in Himself." Thus the work "is going on," to quote the words of Mr. Wright on the day of the funeral of Mr. Müller, "and may be compared to some stately vessel pursuing her course through storm and calm, continually contradicting the fears which are often felt for her safety."

Readers of the reports are familiar enough with the anonymous donations from "A servant of the Lord Jesus," etc. It was pretty well known long ago who that donor was, but concerning this Mr. Wright has the following interesting remarks:—"Now that that happy servant is with his Lord, I feel free to make known thus publicly the fact that the large donations to the funds of this institution which for many years have appeared in the reports coupled with these words were all his own donations, which he gave joyfully to the work so dear to his heart and to the Lord whom he so deeply loved. By papers which have come into my hands, as his executor, I find that by acting habitually, through his long Christian course, on the principle of systematic giving, as God was pleased to entrust him with means for his personal use, he was enabled to give away up to March 1, 1898, £81,490 18s. 8d., of which about £64,500 was put to the funds of the Scriptural Knowledge Institution, and about £17,000 to the poor and to relatives when in need."

It will be seen from the report that, in addition to the orphan work, the school, Bible, missionary, and tract work have been well sustained, the account for these showing a balance in hand on May 26 of £675 1s. 6½d.

The selections given from the numerous donations show the same interesting variety in amount and circumstance, and serve to point many important lessons. Being the first since the departure of the beloved founder, this report will, doubtless, be looked for with special interest, and will, we trust, awaken larger and wider sympathy for this now historic institution. Miss Child's Welcome Home, Canning Town, E.—At the muster of the "Christian Lifeboat Crew," on Tuesday, Aug. 2, Miss Child, after announcing the text for the month (Rom. viii. 28), gave a cheering account of the efforts made throughout the month of July. Prince and Princess Bernadotte attended the fo'c'sle meetings on the previous Friday and Saturday, evidently with much pleasure. Addresses were given by many present, among them Mr. William Luff. Prayer was asked in connection with the new mission room so greatly needed.

Hoxton Costers' Mission.—In our Costers' Hall School—which has a regular attendance of 650 children—we have only been able to send 160 to enjoy the beneficial influence of the country and seaside homes. The remaining 490 disappointed little ones are consoled by the promise that they shall have a day in September on Hampstead Heath. The cost will be £25, but we have only £2 16s. in hand for this object. Will the good readers of THE CHRISTIAN kindly help us to make up the sum of £22 14s.?

Christ and Childhood.

V.—Christ's Lessons from the Children.

Christ drew many lessons from the children, but the most important is given by Matt. xviii. 1-5, Mark ix. 33-37, Luke ix. 46-48.

AFTER the disciples had been disputing by the way as to who should be the greatest in the kingdom of heaven, Jesus called a little child unto Him, and set him in the midst of them, and when He had taken him in his arms, He said unto them three things: (1) "Except ye turn and come as little children ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven." He had before said when blessing the children, "Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child shall not enter therein." It is a most important saying of Jesus that no one can enter the kingdom except he become a little child by being born again and having a new life and a new nature.

(2) Jesus says, "Whoso shall humble himself as this little child the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven." All must enter as little children, but the greatest is he who has most of the child-like nature of humbleness and gentleness. The little boy in their midst had come to Jesus at his call, had obeyed his voice—that is what all must do who enter the kingdom. Thus Jesus answers the disciples' question as to who is greatest. Christ's thought of greatness is the reverse of this world's; those most free from all pride and self, those most meek and lowly in heart, rise to be chief and mighty in power and influence for good, "for he that is least among you all the same shall be great."

(3) Jesus says, "Whoso shall receive one such little child in my name receiveth Me," and not only so, "but he that receiveth Me receiveth Him that sent Me." The little child, in its purity, trust, and love, was most like the character of Jesus. Hence, anyone receiving a little child in Christ's name received something of the true nature of Jesus, and in having that little and imperfect portrait of the Saviour would also receive in it a likeness of God, because Christ and the Father are one. Whoever could take to his heart the child life would receive far more; through the eyes of love and faith in Jesus, he would see an image of the Father in whose likeness the child had been made. And he who serves one of these little ones in the name of a disciple—even by the giving of a cup of cold water only—shall in no wise lose his reward, for "inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least, ye did it unto Me."

Two other lessons Jesus drew from the presence of the child in the midst: First, that no one should cause the little ones to offend or lead them astray; and, secondly, that no one should despise them or think lightly of them (Mark ix. 42, Matt. xviii. 10). Hence He shows the exceeding preciousness of every little child, for Jesus said that the angel children, or the guardian angels of the children, do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven, and also that it is not "the will of your Father which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish."

When Jesus began to upbraid the cities where his mighty works were done because they repented not at that time, He said (Matt. xi. 25) "I thank Thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that Thou didst hide these things from the wise and understanding, and didst reveal them unto babes; yea, Father, for so it was well-pleasing in thy sight." And, again, when the seventy returned and Jesus rejoiced in spirit (Luke x. 21), He said the same words. In the time of his disappointment and grief at the unbelief of the people in Capernaum, and in the time of his gladness and joy at the success of his disciples, Jesus alike thanks the Father that the things hidden from the wise are made known to those of child-like heart and nature. Thus our Lord teaches the blessedness of those who are like Himself meek and lowly in heart, and turns with grateful heart to God because the children can receive with open eyes of love and faith what the world in its selfishness and blindness of unbelief cannot see. With Jesus the children are the hope of the race even in darkness. So Jesus teaches the lesson of thankfulness; what the worldly-wise cannot perceive the children see; what science may hide love can know; what wealth cannot buy trust may possess.

Jesus draws a lesson even from the play of the children (Matt. xi. 16; 1 Luke vii. 12). When the Saviour is speaking of the good works of John the Baptist, whose teaching the Pharisees and Scribes had rejected, Jesus said the people in his day were like the children who played in the market-place. The game to which He referred was one played by two groups of children. One party of the company look on while the others go through some imitation of weddings and funerals, which was quite a common pastime among the boys and girls in our Lord's day. The little company that did the acting expected the spectators to laugh or cry in response to the play; in the gladness of the wedding they were to join and dance, and in the sorrow of the funeral they were to mourn according to the Eastern custom.

Sometimes Jesus may have seen some of the children, whose turn it was to watch, having grown weary of the game, sit sullenly and silently and refuse to take their part either to join in the dance or to take up the wailing chorus of grief.

This was the picture Jesus saw before Him with children of an older growth, who had no sympathy with the sternness of John's teaching or with the gladness of the message of Jesus. There were people who remained indifferent to the condemnation of the one or the Gospel of the other; by these hearers the stern preacher of the wilderness or the Friend of publicans and sinners were alike rejected with heartlessness. And still the "don't care" children sit not only in the playground and school to-day, but in the churches of our land. The scenes that Jesus saw with deep meaning are enacted to-day by those who are not moved or touched by the gladness of Bethlehem or the agony of Calvary.

Jesus and the Children.

Think how honoured were those children,
Playing in the market-place,
When they met such kindly glances
From the Saviour's blessed face.

Once a funeral they were acting,
Marching slow with solemn feet;
Sounds of wailing, cries of mourning,
Sending down the busy street.

Then it was a wedding party,
Passing by with joyous tread;
Sounds of mirth and magic music,
Borne upon the breeze instead.

Jesus watched, with loving interest,
These dear children at their play;
Used them to explain his teaching
To the grown-up folk one day.

Still, He watches from his palace,
In the kingdom far away;
Stoops to watch his little children
At their work or merry play.

How He loves to have them trust Him,
In their simple, happy way;
As to use them as examples
To the grown-up-folk to-day.

2. First with the old men, who had stood before Solomon, and afterwards with the young men who had grown up with him.

3. The old men advised him to speak good words to the people, so that they might be his servants for ever. The young men advised him to make the yoke much heavier than Solomon had done. Rehoboam followed the advice of the young men.

4. Ten tribes revolted and made Jeroboam their king. Judah and Benjamin (v. 21).

5. The son of Nebat, an Ephrathite of Zereda. Ahijah had prophesied that he should reign over ten tribes after Solomon's death. Therefore Solomon sought to kill him, but he fled into Egypt.

6. Shemaiah, the man of God.

7. Because he thought that if the people went to Jerusalem to worship they might make Rehoboam their king, and kill him. He therefore made two calves, and placed one in Bethel and the other in Dan, and told the people these were the gods who brought them out of Egypt.

Personal.

Dear Uncle Tom,—Please give our best thanks to your nieces for the flowers we so constantly receive, and especially a box of lovely peas and mignonette. I have not time to write every week, but the flowers are always acceptable. Perhaps your little nieces would make us some lavender bags. We are going to send a large number to the hop pickers next month. They should be just three inches (little bags), tied about an inch from the top, like a little sack.—Yours very truly, Louisa Turton, Hon. Sec.

Many thanks for flowers and needle-books; the latter I am sending to the soldiers.

Dorothy Berry.—I am glad you have quite recovered, and can now do the Searcher again.

Dorothy and Meta-Steel.—I hope you will both spend a very happy holiday.

Kathleen McClure.—It was because others were before you in the competition that your name was not mentioned.

Douglas Adams.—I think you could manage to find time to do the Searcher; it seems a pity to give up just for a few weeks.

Daisy Petrides.—I was glad to see an improvement in your writing; if you try a little more, you will perhaps get a star.

G. E. A., Bath.—Prizes are given at each competition. I am glad you have joined again.

Francie Hoyte.—I hope your mother will soon be quite well again.

Ada Macnutt.—I have several nieces older than you are. Am glad you like your prize.

Ruth Knight.—I am glad you are better, and able to do "The Searcher" again.

Elsie Clark.—Thank you for your letter. I hope you may get a first prize next time.

S. H.—It is best to give permanent address, unless an answer is desired.

Gracie and Margie Marston.—Many thanks for your photograph. I am very pleased with it.

Uncle Tom.

Militia in Training.—A correspondend reports good work among the Durham Light Infantry Militia, last month, at Redcar, Yorks. The evangelistic services held nightly in the open-air and in a large marquee were a wonderful success. Many stayed to the after meeting. Every tent in camp was visited during the day, and Gospel booklets, tracts, etc., were distributed to the men. A band of Christian friends of Redcar helped in the work.

OBITUARY.

REV. W. TULLOCH.

There recently died at Glasgow, in the seventy-eighth year of his age, in the person of Rev. Wm. Tulloch, one who deserves more than a mere passing notice. Some years ago Mr. Tulloch was a prominent preacher in connection with the Baptist body in Scotland. He did good work in the Tabernacle, Edinburgh, one of the churches founded by the well-known James Haldane. This church migrated to Duncan-street, where, under Mr. Tulloch's earnest ministry, much lasting work was done. He also laboured for some time in Dundee and Elgin. A man of high character, an able and impressive preacher, he did much by his zeal and self-denial to increase the position and usefulness of the denomination to which he belonged, but best of all in winning souls for Christ.

DR. JOHN M'LEOD, GOVAN.

By the death of Dr. M'Leod, another foremost man in the Established Church of Scotland has passed away. For many years he devoted his energies almost entirely to the needs of his extensive parish, and was the means of building a considerable number of churches in various districts. His greatest power was in the pulpit. To some he seemed to manifest High Church tendencies in ritual, but in his preaching he was thoroughly Evangelical and true to the Gospel of Jesus Christ. One of his latest endeavours was to raise a large fund for the purpose of building residences for students where they might obtain training for their work as pastors. Cut off in the best of his days, he is mourned by brother ministers as well as by a large and attached congregation.

PROFESSOR EBERS.

Dr. Georg Ebers, the famous Professor of Egyptology in Leipzig, died on Sunday at the age of sixty-one. Born in Berlin, it was at Froebel's famous school in Thuringen that his education was begun. Later he was sent to Göttingen University. It was here that he suffered from a paralytic affection which attacked his lower limbs. This led him to turn his attention from the study of law to the pursuit of classical and Oriental philology and archæology. Recovered from his malady, he started on a course of foreign travel, and visited all the great museums and collections. For two years he was Extraordinary Professor of Egyptology at the University of Jena. Returning to Germany in 1870, he was appointed to the professorship in Leipzig. Dr. Ebers also earned laurels in the realm of fiction, weaving his learning into the form of romances which won widespread popularity.

REV. DR. R. N. YOUNG.

By the death of Rev. Dr. R. N. Young, which took place in Birmingham last week, the Wesleyan Methodist Church loses one of its most scholarly and eloquent ministers, as well as a distinguished divine widely known among the Churches in England and America. The son of Rev. Robert Young, at one time President of Conference, Robert Newton Young entered the ministry in 1851, and was thereupon engaged for two years as assistant classical tutor at Richmond. Two years later he began circuit work, receiving an appointment at Hastings. Other circuits in which he travelled were Bradford, Leeds, Birmingham, Bolton, Highbury, Blackheath, and Clapton. In 1877 Dr. Young was appointed classical tutor at Headingley. This position he held for four years, being then transferred to the new college at Handsworth, where he remained until lately, subsequently becoming tutor in Pastoral Theology and House Governor. From 1881 to 1886, after twenty years of assistant secretaryship, he was secretary of Conference, in 1883 he was senior representative from the British to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church of America, and in 1886 the honour of the Presidency was conferred upon him. A man of scholarly attainments, Dr. Young wielded a trenchant pen, and contributed largely to Methodist literature. He was an author well known on both sides of the Atlantic, and was also Fernley Lecturer. Dr. Young was in his seventieth year. As a preacher he was refined rather than eloquent, but as he never failed of careful preparation his discourses were always attractive. Dr. Young was a recognised authority on all questions involving a knowledge of Methodist polity and discipline.

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

Great Assembly Hall.

DESPITE the fact that we are in the height of summer, the meetings during the past month in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, have been above the average for this time of the year. The preaching of Mr. Bewley Weaver and the sweet singing of his brother Frank have been greatly blessed to the East Enders. They have become very popular, and their mission has been marked by prosperity attending their efforts, notwithstanding the weather has been against indoor gatherings. Mr. Bewley Weaver is an earnest preacher of the Gospel. His addresses are well thought out, and once he gets warmed to his subject the audience begin to feel most uncomfortable. His direct and searching appeal at the close of each meeting is always effectual, and not a night passed but some rose before the great congregations to be prayed for.

The inquiry-room was occupied every night with those seeking salvation, and the workers had the joy of pointing many a poor distressed soul to the Lord Jesus Christ. Many interesting cases could be recorded. Among others a Ritualist one night sought the help of the preacher, and on his knees in the inquiry-room prayed that strength might be given him to boldly confess Christ openly, and to give up his confessing to man and the worship of idols. Another striking case was that of a ticket-of-leave-man who was completely broken down. He went on well for a week, and then the thought that he had not reported himself to the police authorities troubled him. He came for advice, and when told he ought to go and make a clean breast of it, cried most bitterly, and said he could never do it, as he was keeping his poor widowed mother and sisters, and if he went to the police he would be sent back to do three years. Within a week he returned, saying he had been and reported himself, and told them he had been converted in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, and now wished to live a new life; on condition he regularly reported himself in the future they forgave him, and he seems now to be the happiest man in creation. This man said he had been a public advocate of total abstinence for fifteen years before he gave way to drink, but he had never given his heart to Christ. K.

Evangelistic Movements.

Sergeant Pullinger, August 13-21, Soldiers' Home, Winchester, and Salisbury Plain.

Messrs. Carleton and Loney, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, are having a good time in Ballydehob with one of the society's wooden halls. They are in their fifth week, and hope to remain a fortnight longer, counting on the prayers of the people of God.

During July Mr. J. J. Sims conducted services in Edinburgh. The Sunday evening meetings were held in the Free Assembly Hall, and during the week evenings in halls in different parts of the city. The interest in the meetings was wonderfully sustained, and the Lord has been working very manifestly, honouring the faith of his servants. Testimonies have come that whole families have been blessed. Open-air meetings conducted by Mr. Sims have been held on nearly every night, and many have been blessed by the Gospel message in this way.

Requests for Prayer.

For special services by Mr. William Forbes at Sunderland, to begin on Sunday, 14th.

That Christian people in South Wales may be so humbled that God may intervene in the matter of the coal strike, and have the glory in the end.

Personalia.

Rev. John McNeill is to occupy the pulpit of Stonehaven Free Church throughout the present month.

Mr. S. E. Burrow, for over five years superintendent of Dr. Barnardo's Mission Church, "The Edinburgh Castle," Limehouse, and now secretary of the Theatrical Mission, Macready House, Covent Garden, is open to conduct mission services or supply pulpits, on Sundays only, in or near London. Address, Ainsworth, Argyle-road, Ilford, E.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

"Breaking of Bread."

Dear Sir,—Let us consider in order what the Scripture teaches on this subject.

As to time generally. The ordinance was instituted at supper time, and is once called "the Lord's Supper." It is more often spoken of as "the breaking of bread." In the institution the bread came first, and afterwards the wine. So the first term became its primitive name.

The persons to partake are disciples—learners, followers—of the Lord Jesus.

The object is stated by the Lord, "Do this in remembrance of Me"—Himself. And specially in connection with the righteous foundation for the exercise of the grace of God—his death for sin.

The period of its continuance is—"till I come."

The time for observing his direction. The Lord fixed no period. Nor is it related that the Apostles did so. The appointment is open and general—"as often."

The time.—If any community wish to observe it on the very day on which the Lord's Supper was instituted, they can do so. It would then be on Thursday evening.

If the practice at Troas is followed, then the time would be on Saturday after sunset, for day commenced in the evening. The evening and the morning were the first day: and I think the Jews' Sabbath still commences on Friday evening and lasts till Saturday evening, when another day commences.

If the day of the week when the Lord died is preferred in order to observe that which the ordinance is for, namely, to show forth his death, then Friday is the day, before sunset.

If the time the Lord rose is preferred, it would be very early on our Sunday morning.

If the Divine appointment of a seventh day's rest is most convenient, then our Sunday, any hour, would be the time. The morning would suit some individuals best, others the evening. Some might attend both.

There is no bondage in such matters. They are all small details of no real moment. The Lord Himself and his Apostles are not recorded as directing any such particulars. The very Early Church continued "in the breaking of bread." Very likely, with 3000 persons it went on all day long, and every day, as disciples could attend, or go to each other's houses.

The substance of things, as to the ordinance, is that which alone is important; namely, to do what the Lord said, and for the purpose He indicated, and in a loving, reverential way—namely, in a spirit of personal self-discernment, with intelligence, and love, and hope, and (as needful) with contrition, and even with the spirit of the deepest gratitude and worship to our Deliverer. Then to such there will be the wonderful and blessed admixture of humiliation with joy in the Holy Spirit.

As to discerning the condition of everybody else, if every one of the 3000 at Pentecost had, as a preliminary responsibility, to judge the remaining 2999, I am afraid no one would have taken the Lord's Supper at all. He might have spent his life in judging others. In general, every one who professes to be a believer in Christ is to be freely received by others who make the same profession. If he brings in false doctrine, or lives in sin, then there are Scriptural directions how to act. Or if he has been similar to Saul, who, having been a persecutor, might well create fear and doubt, he would need a Barnabas to bring him, and declare the Lord's dealings and his life. But this is evidently exceptional.

My knowledge, through fifty years' experience, of the effect of principles opposite to the above is that they very seriously affect the spirit of the love of fellow Christians which should characterise the Divine family circle.

I was at the first series of the Barnet Conferences—the parent of modern conventions—some thirty-eight years ago, called by the holy and catholic and loving Mr. Bennefather. The day [illegible] meetings closed it was rumoured that it was contemplated that the friends (and there were about 120 from different churches) should take the Lord's Supper together. Possibly the practice had existed in unknown quarters before, but it was a new thing now—a great event, one carrying deep thought. A friend greatly beloved took his younger brother into consultation about it. And we agreed, and this was the general conclusion: that we went, not to the table of one another, nor to identify ourselves thereby as approving of all details and practices, to some of which we had a conscientious objection; but the substance was that we went to "the Lord's table." And so thoroughly has this been my practice that I have done what perhaps not one of your readers has done—namely, I have taken the Lord's Supper in the Established Church, with the Presbyterians, the Wesleyans, the so-called Brethren, the Independents, the Baptists, and (when at Portsmouth) in a disused theatre, and, after a very profitable week, with some of the Salvationists; and their captain, presiding elder, excelled in sober-mindedness, graciousness, love, and holy exhortation and zeal; and I was not stumbled even by the sister-lieutenant.

"The Truth-Seeker."

THE DISPENSATIONS.

Dear Sir,—In dealing with dispensational truth must we not distinguish between what is dispensational and what is universal? "The soul that sinneth, it shall die" is of universal truth. It is parallel to the primæval declaration "In the day thou eatest thereof [=in the day thou sinnest] thou shalt surely die," and to that of the Apostle, "The wages of sin is death."

Ezekiel xviii. is God's vindication of his own righteous dealing. Its principle is not confined to any dispensation, though its application here is in accordance with its special dispensational period. The questions "Are not my ways equal? Are not your ways unequal?" though addressed to the house of Israel, are equally applicable to any other people. For the house of Israel is of the house of Adam. The sins of Israel are the sins of the race, and God is the same righteous God in all ages.

Ezekiel xviii. is a very important chapter for the evangelist in insisting on the righteousness of God on the one hand and in distinguishing between law and grace on the other. But in rightly dividing the word of truth we must be careful not to place dispensational limitations on universal and essential truths: such as "All souls are mine!" "The soul that sinneth, it shall die!" "'Are not my ways equal? Are not your ways unequal?' saith the Lord." Evangelist.

The Holy Spirit.

Dear Sir,—I have been deeply interested in the letters which have appeared lately in The Christian on the subject of the worship of the Holy Spirit. I must confess I felt a difficulty at one time in addressing the Saviour alone and then the Holy Spirit, having commenced my prayer first to the Father. Not that my difficulty was connected with the doctrine of the Trinity, in the firm belief in which I have never wavered, but that I felt what I can only express by the term a confusion of thought and feeling, which continued till I again addressed myself to God the Father, thus returning to the Master's model for us all. Is not this a proof of the consummate wisdom which marked every utterance of his, thus adapting his teaching to the limited nature of our finite minds, which so soon get bewildered in dealing with the Infinite?

Permit me to mention here the omission of the name of the Holy Spirit in all the salutations in the Epistles. During the experiences of a long life I have never heard this omission mentioned in the pulpit, nor in private intercourse except on the few occasions when I referred to it myself. Perhaps I would never have drawn attention to it but for the conviction that a satisfactory explanation can be given. So, at least it appears to me, namely, that the Holy Spirit is here with the Church, and thus as the Inspirer of the Scriptures containing those salutations he refrained from addressing them to Himself, but only to God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. Have we not also in this interesting fact a touching confirmation of the truth of his indwelling and abiding presence in these poor human hearts of ours?—Yours faithfully, Liverpool. An Old Disciple.

"Saint."

Dear Sir,—I fail to see that Mr. Alexander produces any Scriptural proof for prefixing "St." to the names of the Apostles by quoting the Greek heading of the Acts, where they are spoken of as "holy," for it is only the equivalent of the other, "saints" or "holy ones." The Spirit of God in Hebrews iii. 1 applies the title to all believers, "holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling," and in chapter v. some were "dull of hearing," so the word "holy" must be one of standing and not of attainment.

The reference to "stable-boys" is very unhappy. A stable-boy can by the grace be as holy as Paul; and by glorifying God where he is called ought to command our respect as much as the other; for hath not God "set the members every one of them in the body as it hath pleased Him"? and, furthermore, those members "which seem to be more feeble are necessary."

For my own part I can have more reverence for that which is written than that which is merely human, and judge that is the only way of having things "decently and in order," and a strong argument in support of Mr. Smith's plea for dropping the prefixes.—Yours in Christ, Payhembury, Ottery St. Mary. J. Niven.

The Increase of Vivisection.

Dear Sir,—On account of the dumb creatures committed to our care I feel grateful for the remarks on vivisection which appear in your number for July 28. It has been to me, and to many others, a cause of surprise and shame that Christian churches and leaders, with a few honourable exceptions, stand aloof from this question. We would think very little of a clergyman, or of any prominent professor of Christianity, if he could stand approvingly by and see a horse or dog brutally ill-treated in the street; and we would be strongly tempted to doubt either the sufficiency of his creed or the sincerity of his profession. How, then, can Christians permit, without unanimous and indignant protest, the increasing horrors of vivisection, with its official recognition and its farcical inspection? With your leave, sir, I shall answer my own question. It is because they do not know what vivisectors do, and how they do it. They do not know that medical and surgical authorities of the highest rank consider it absolutely untrustworthy as a guide in practice, and they do not know that the use of anæsthetics is becoming more and more rare. I am certain, however, that they ought to know, and I should recommend them to obtain the literature on the subject from the National Anti-Vivisection Society, 20, Victoria-street, London, S.W. They can then judge and test the facts for themselves. My own conclusion is that these facts are a disgrace not only to Christianity, but to humanity.—Yours truly, J. G.

Colportage Work.—Mr. James Rennie, Hitchin, has been labouring in South Beds and North Herts for twenty-seven years. He has visited eighty villages, and there are few houses in these villages in which he has not sold a Bible or some other religious book. He has introduced £18,000 worth of Christian literature into the homes of the people, including 305,644 volumes, 701,063 magazines and small publications, and 3,425,400 tracts, besides conducting Gospel and temperance meetings in more than 100 chapels and mission halls. Those who wish to help in the spread of the Gospel by means of the printed page and the spoken word may communicate with Mr. Rennie, whose address is Hitchin, Herts.

The Deptford Medical Mission was established nine years ago to meet the urgent need of an almost forgotten district of poorer London. Since the time when the mission was first opened there have been no fewer than 113,000 attendances at the dispensary. Three years ago a convalescent home was opened at Boxhill in connection with the mission. The home has ten beds, and is worked at an annual cost of £250. Last year 142 patients were sent to the home. This year over eighty have already been sent, and the demand is so great that there are now forty-nine applications for admission. Its usefulness, however, is likely to be seriously curtailed for lack of funds. Both the mission dispensary and the convalescent home were founded by Rev. Dr. F. A. Pring, the hon. director of the mission, who would gratefully acknowledge any contributions, which should be forwarded to him at the Medical Mission, [illegible] High-street, Deptford, S.E.

Work in Hyde Park.

On Monday the address at the Aldersgate-street noon prayer-meeting was given by Mr. R. C. Morgan. The practical lesson taught by the faith of Abraham in offering up Isaac was enforced. God is the answer to all our difficulties and trials. "God will provide" settles all our needs. Someone has said, "Those who trust never worry, and those who worry never trust." God honours those who honour Him, and the blessing of God was intensified in Abraham's case after his act of obedience.

The pathetic and sanctified singing of Mr. and Mrs. Baker, the blind singers from America, greatly edified all present.

The meeting was encouraged by the testimony of Mr. Chas. Cook, who spoke of the wonderful blessing being experienced almost nightly in Hyde Park. A recent convert is a brother of Mr. Thos. Richardson, of the Free Church, Rotherhithe; he has boldly taken his stand for Christ, and has identified himself with the work of Hyde Park Hall. A most interesting case is that of a head coachman, who accepted and confessed Christ, and sent a £5 note to Hyde Park Hall as a thank-offering.

On Sunday evening last two young girls who had been awakened in the park were in tears; before the meeting closed they were rejoicing in Christ. Quite a number of backsliders have been restored through the services.

We may add that the same evening Mr. W. R. Lane spoke at the meeting in Hyde Park. The blind singers sang the Gospel. At the close of the meeting a large number followed on to Hyde Park Hall, where Mr. Lane gave an exhortation to all to decide. Mr. Harry Richardson bore testimony that a few weeks ago he accepted Christ at the park meetings, and two lads testified that the previous night (Sunday) they had both accepted Christ. Several interesting cases of conversion resulted from the meeting, and the workers went home rejoicing in the Lord.

It was announced that on Sunday and following days next week the Rhondda Valley Welsh Choir will sing at the park meetings, Sunday at 6, week-nights at 7.30.

Mr. Fegan's Boys on Wisborough Green.

WITH reference to the recent motion in the Chancery Division for an injunction to prohibit the boys from using the Green at Wisborough, near Billinghurst, Mr. Fegan writes to us: "This is our third annual visit, and on each occasion the boys have been publicly entertained to tea and sports, and received a unanimous invitation to come again. In the present instance we are the welcome guests of more than 95 per cent. of the inhabitants, all the householders, with two or three exceptions, whose houses surround the green, the local cricket club, etc.

"During the three years we have been here I have not had, directly or indirectly, a single complaint as to misconduct, obstruction, or danger through our boys using the Green, but everyone has assured me that their enjoyment of the Green has been enhanced by the presence of the boys.

"The Court has granted us the use of the Green for the remainder of our holidays as usual this year, and next year there is not the shadow of a doubt we shall (D.V.) use it, not merely with the consent, but on the spontaneous official invitation, of the parish council then in office."

Hop-picking will soon commence, and I am arranging for the visitation of hop-gardens in Mid-Kent, where workers will, in addition to individual dealing with pickers, hold services daily where practicable, and on Sundays nearly all day at their camps, during the four or five weeks of the season. I shall be glad of the fellowship of Christians in this service through prayer, Gospel books, and help towards workers' expenses. G. Gillingham.

Chalford, Glos.

Orphan Home, Walthamstow.

MANY of your readers, especially in former years, have given valuable help towards the work for children which I have had the privilege of carrying on for thirty-two years.

In 1894 we removed from Eastfield House to our present smaller abode, having here room only for twelve girls. Owing to lack of funds, caused by removal of many old supporters by death and otherwise, and various changes in the neighbourhood, I am sorry to say that the committee now feel it needful to close the Home, transferring the children to other hands.

I should be thankful for the prayerful interest of your readers that the will of God may be shown in this matter, and that if He permits this little piece of work to be discontinued He will guide me as to the future. I should be unable to undertake any financial responsibility or active labour, but would gladly give what strength I have in association with some Christian work.

God has given much blessing here in the past, and I feel sure the seed sown will continue to bear fruit in years to come. Mary Parsons.

Christian Police Association.

EXTENSIVE and varied operations for the spiritual, moral, and physical benefit of the police forces of the United Kingdom and abroad continue to be carried on by the International Christian Police Association, which has its central office at 7, Adam-street, Strand, London, W.C., Miss Catherine Gurney being one of the hon. secretaries. In the neighbourhood just named (at 1a, Adelphi-terrace) is the Central Police Institute, now reopened after much necessary expenditure in repairs, alterations, and renewals of furniture. Towards the expense thus incurred, and the maintenance of the good work which is being done in and through the Institute, Mr. John Cory has promised £100 if three other persons will contribute a like amount. The challenge has, thus far, produced one other promise. This house, so well situated for its purpose, has been the centre of a very real spiritual, social, and temperance work, classes and meetings of various kinds being held in it. Many a young man entering the force has here started on the right path, in a Christian sense; whilst, at the same time, men of all shades of opinion are freely welcomed, and attendance at any religious gathering is purely voluntary.

The Police Seaside Home at Hove and the Provincial Police Orphanage at Redhill must be dismissed with mention of the significant fact that the police themselves have contributed very generously to the support of the Orphanage. During the year 1896-97 they furnished no less than two-thirds of the whole sum required for this branch of the work. But the Northern and North-Midland police and constabulary finding the journey to Brighton too long and expensive, have often expressed the desire for a home in the North. Such an institution was secured some months ago by the purchase upon mortgage of a building known as St. George's College, with its grounds, at Harrogate. It is intended to use this for the accommodation of both police convalescents and orphans—thirty adults and between thirty and forty children. When the numbers increase a new Home can be erected on a portion of the estate. The cost of this latest undertaking, including alterations, repairs, and furnishing, will be £11,000, of which some £6,000 have been given or promised. Then the general evangelistic fund of the Association now needs the provision of about £300, if the work is not to be greatly restricted; and, in the words of Miss Gurney, "there are so many open doors, both at home and abroad, that we need to extend rather than to retrench."

International Difficulties.—A correspondent suggests that, in view of the international difficulties between Great Britain, France, and Russia, which on several occasions have assumed a grave aspect, Christians everywhere would do well, both in their private and public devotions, to pray for the rulers of these three nations in particular, that they may be constrained by God to maintain peace; and that their disputes, especially those concerning China, may be amicably settled without the terrible calamity of war.

Answered Prayer.

"Se a watch, O Lord upon my mouth,
Keep the door of my lips.—Psalm cxli. 3."

MOST of us believe that God is "able to save," even "to the uttermost." (Heb. vii. 25.) Few of us realise that He is also "able to keep" (Jude xxiv.), and therefore faith fails to lay hold on his unfailing power for present needs. An incident lately brought to my notice may, perhaps, help some "much afraid" to take courage.

A delicate lady had been obliged to undergo an operation under ether, and when without the power of self-control or conscious speech uttered many words which were afterwards repeated to her, and caused her much pain. She had complained that "God was cruel to send such suffering, that she had not deserved it—it was unjust—unkind—why should it be?—how could God be loving and yet punish without reason—she could not believe it."

My friend's relations tried to comfort her by saying that she was not to blame, since she did not herself know what words she uttered, but she was convinced that rebellious feelings must have been at the root of those rebellious words, and searched her heart before God, grieving over the thought that the doctors had heard a professing Christian utter feelings so contrary to what should have been hers.

Two years passed, and again the same ordeal had to be undergone. My friend prayed most earnestly and definitely that her lips might be kept by God during the time when she had no knowledge of what they spoke. She asked this blessing for his glory, somewhat in the spirit of Elijah (1 Kings xviii. 36-37).

When consciousness returned after the second operation she asked the friend who was with her what she had said. "Not a word, except to ask whether it would last much longer," and 'Thank you,' replied the young lady. "You were perfectly quiet and passive, 'The best of patients,' the doctor said."

With humble thankfulness L... realised how near the Lord Himself had been, and how He had carried her in his bosom when unable of herself to take one step in the right way.

All said that the difference in her behaviour on the two occasions was "very curious," and a person who heard her simple explanation remarked that "certainly prayer quieted the nerves." L... acquiesced, but felt that there was a sweeter, deeper bond of loving faith henceforth between her and her Lord. C. Maud Battersby.

Birmingham.—The Wesleyans are engaged in making preparations for an important mission, which will extend from October 13 to October 30. About twenty ministers, including the President of the Conference and Professor Davison, have promised to take part in the meetings. Arrangements are also being made in the same city for the annual meetings of the Primitive Methodist Sunday School Union and the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union.

Anti-Ritualistic Legislation.—Members of Parliament who are interested in the anti-Ritualistic movement (says The Manchester Guardian) appear to be very sanguine of giving legislative effect to their views next session. One or two of the strong Protestant members of the House have declined to ballot for an Anti-Ritualistic Bill because they are pledged to give precedence to other measures. Still, it is said that a considerable array of members are prepared to ballot, and in any case there is to be an active agitation during the recess in the interests of the proposed measure. The Government will have a very difficult problem to solve when the matter comes up in the House of Commons, as the strongest anti-Ritualists are undoubtedly to be found on the Ministerial benches.

The "Churches of Christ Conference" was held in London last week, under the presidency of Mr. J. Marsden, of Wigan. It was reported that there had been a considerable increase in membership during the year. Satisfactory reports were presented by the Foreign Missionary Committee upon the work at Yeh, Burmah, and upon the outlook in South Africa. The Sunday School Committee presented statistics collected from 142 schools. The number of scholars was reported to be 12,817, and the number of teachers 1352. It was decided to hold the Conference next year at Newcastle-on-Tyne, and Mr. L. Oliver was elected to preside over it. In connection with the Conference several meetings were held at which temperance questions were discussed.

This year's Hospital Sunday Fund is £5000 below the amount received last year. The Hon. Sydney Holland has remarked that begging for hospitals—in addition to the business of managing them—was almost intolerable. He thinks there ought to be a voluntary rate.

Mr. Justice North has sanctioned a widening of the objects of Hereford County College. The education will, therefore, be no longer exclusively "in strict conformity with the principles and doctrines of the Church of England." The object now is defined as "good, sound, and useful education."

Canon Body says that a change has come over missions. "Edification has become very much more prominent as the object of a mission than conversion. The parish clergy use missions as a means of raising the church life of their people, rather than of gathering in the ungodly. Missions are tending to become internal rather than external. I contend that the old form of mission ought to be reproduced."

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Professor Robertson, of Aberdeen Free Church College, has been appointed Examiner in Divinity by the University Court.

The Free Church Sustentation Fund for the first two months of the current financial year shows an increase of fully £1700 over the contributions for the same period of last year.

Rev. John Patrick, D.D., has been appointed Regius Professor of Biblical Criticism and Biblical Antiquities in the University of Edinburgh, in the room of Rev. Dr. Charteris retired.

During July a tent for Gospel meetings was pitched at Ballochmyle, Ayrshire; Mr. John Ferguson was the evangelist. The meetings were very good; God has wrought some real marvels of grace.

The Bible-carriage in connection with the Ayrshire Christian Union is visiting the county during the summer months. The work is being carried on by two Bible Training Institute students from Glasgow.

Open-air meetings are being conducted at many of the Scottish seaside resorts. Very encouraging services have been held at Rothesay and North Berwick, large crowds gathering and evident signs following the Word preached.

Under the auspices of the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society, a missionary loan exhibition recently took place. There were very many interesting exhibits. Several missionaries and others gave talks each day, and lectures, illustrated by magic-lantern views, were given. Nearly all the missionary societies were represented. The attendance was very good.

For some years past, during the month of July, several missionaries of the Glasgow City Mission have worked among the showmen, who gather in large numbers on the show grounds during the holiday season. Each caravan is visited. Open-air meetings are held on Sabbath evenings, and much interest is shown. Evidence has been given of spiritual good resulting.

The Hope Trust is doing good work in Scotland. This society was founded by the late Mr. John Hope for the furtherance of religious, temperance, and anti-popery teaching. During the past year 274,678 persons have attended lectures on Protestant subjects. A large number of the meetings have been held in the country districts of Scotland, one interesting feature being the attendance of young people. 160,000 copies of Protestant magazines are distributed each month.

Y.M.C.A.

A new association has been formed in Lisbon, and has already upwards of fifty members.

The English National Council of the Y.M.C.A. has accepted the invitation of the British Commissioners to prepare an exhibit for the Social Science Department of the Paris Exhibition in 1900.

Rev. Hugh Black, M.A., of Free St. George's, Edinburgh, has written a stirring booklet, at the request of the Scottish National Council of Y.M.C.A.'s. It is based on 1 John ii. 14, and entitled "To the Strong!" Arrangements are in progress for a wide distribution of the booklet among the young men of Scotland.

A former member of Cowcaddens branch, Glasgow, writes: "We have started, with the aid of Mr. Halliwell, of the Nyassa Industrial Mission, a Christian Association at Mandala for the young men and all who wish to come on Sunday afternoons. At our first meeting we had a splendid attendance, and look for more next time when it gets better known."

The City of Dublin Association is still actively engaged in trying to reach the men of the Irish metropolis, and during the summer months various open-air meetings are held in the Phœnix Park, where hundreds of Roman Catholics hear the Gospel of God's grace from week to week. Many have testified to the power of the meetings. The committee are looking forward with much pleasure to the visit of the British Conference in June next year, when they hope to celebrate their jubilee, being the oldest Y.M.C.A. in Ireland.

Association work in Belgium promises to make great developments in the next few years. The six small associations in Brussels (where there are 600,000 Roman Catholic inhabitants) have been merged into one large central institution, with now a building in which to carry on its work, and a general secretary in the person of Mr. J. Hughes, formerly secretary at Lyons. A similar move forward has been made in Antwerp, where a distinguished Flemish young man, master of several European languages, has volunteered for the general secretaryship.

The Zurich Y.M.C.A., which has its own building and a membership roll of 450, carries on special work for commercial men, for artisans, for waiters, for bakers, and for hairdressers. The Association has likewise undertaken an important work in the organisation of a Rifle corps, which meets only on week-days for its exercises. The Swiss law demands a certain number of shooting exercises yearly from every man qualified for the military service, and there are so-called "shooting societies" which always have their compulsory exercises on Sunday. The Y.M.C.A. deserves merit for the organisation of such a "shooting society," which is becoming more and more known and appreciated.

The Canadian plébiscite on prohibition will be taken on September 29.

Further outrages are reported to have been inflicted on the Armenians, eight villages having been pillaged by Koords.

An important addition has just been made to the British Museum in the shape of a large and priceless collection of weapons and implements from the Congo Free State.

From Beyrout comes the intelligence that on the occasion of the Kaiser's visit the Sultan intends to cede to Germany a port, or even a large tract of land, on the coast of Syria.

The proposed New Guinea concession to a syndicate has been discussed at length by the Premier of Queensland, who urges that Mr. Chamberlain should advise the refusal of the Royal assent.

The Soudan.—Eleven hundred refugees from Kordofan have arrived at Korti, on the Nile, among them being certain sheikhs, who came as a deputation to pray the Sirdar to occupy the country.

China.—A statement has been made in Parliament by Lord Salisbury regarding the reported strenuous efforts made by other Powers to obtain the command of the Yangtse-Kiang Valley. He said Sir Claude Macdonald had been instructed "to inform the Chinese Government that Her Majesty's Government will support them in resisting any Power which commits an act of aggression on China on account of China granting concessions to make or support any railway or public work to a British subject." The opposition of Russia to the granting of railway concessions in China to the British is vexatious, and the position created is said to be critical. The present issue is likely to decide the whole question of China's future.—Russia is said to be in possession of New-chwang, and the "open door" in North China is closed.—The Shanghai-Woosung railway is completed.—Hostility is being shown to the French on the south coast of China. Reinforcements have been telegraphed for, and money to build fortifications.

The War.—It is satisfactory to know that Spain sees no other way out of her present troubles than by accepting the inevitable. Yet her reply to the American peace terms is most pathetic. She "only accepts them because they are imposed on her by force." Cuba and Porto Rico are to be surrendered. In the Philippines she loses all but her suzerainty. Certain ports and coaling stations are to be ceded. America demands no money indemnity. The speedy cessation of hostilities may therefore be expected. As an assurance of peace, it is significant that the value of the Spanish peseta has risen considerably. Meanwhile the United States army in Santiago is in a serious condition through rapid spread of fever. A cable message reports: "The army is incapable because of sickness of marching anywhere except to the transports. If it is ever to return to the United States, it must do so at once." Success is therefore won at a great cost of human suffering, as well as actual loss of life.—Aguinaldo and his followers are afraid that America intends to abandon the Philippines, and have been assured that America's honour and justice can be trusted.

The Manœuvres on Salisbury Plain.

Miss Perks, of the Winchester Soldiers' Home, and a band of earnest workers, are with the troops on Salisbury Plain. The evangelists are laying themselves out to bring in souls as the Lord enables them, and they are full of praise for blessing. The social comforts of the soldiers are also considered, and they freely visit the Gospel tent, and use the reading and writing tables, also the refreshment counter.

Both officers and men encourage us greatly by kind and appreciative words, and it is most cheering to hear how many speak of the Winchester Soldiers' Home as their spiritual birthplace. We have opportunities of greatly extending our work should the Lord put it into the hearts of his people to send us funds. Many soldiers will shortly be parting from us for Khartoum: May the precious seed be sown in their hearts. We have opened a branch reading-room in the pretty village of Bulford. Miss Perks gives Gospel addresses to the increasing numbers that attend. Several Christian soldiers help us, being always ready to sing a Gospel hymn, and their words of testimony are very helpful. C.E.

The Stirling Tract Enterprise.

In the August number of the British Messenger there is a biographical sketch by the editor (Rev. Dr. Andrew, formerly minister of the White Memorial Church, Glasgow) of the remarkable founder of this institution, Mr. Peter Drummond. In August, 1848, Mr. Drummond was led to publish a tract bearing on the sanctification of the Sabbath, which had such an enormous circulation that he was induced to issue others, to the number of several hundreds. Now there are upwards of 5000 in the catalogue (including booklets and other publications), while 462,000,000 have been issued in all; and still the work goes on with evident tokens of the Divine blessing resting on it. Many believe that one reason why so much success has followed the Stirling Tract Enterprise is that its founder honoured the Lord's day. There is a good engraving on the front page of the British Messenger, taken from a family portrait. It is intended to hold a jubilee meeting in Stirling on the evening of Tuesday, October 11, to be addressed by (among others) Lord Kinnaird, Sir John Neilson Cuthbertson, Rev. Dr. Elder Cumming, of Glasgow, and Rev. Dr. John Smith, of Edinburgh.

Clifton Conference.—This long-established meeting of Christians falls to be held this year on Oct. 4-6. The subject chosen for consideration by the convener, Rev. James Ormiston, is "Faith"—its nature, its operation in the Christian life, and the household of faith. The theme is important in these days of revived ceremonialism and sacerdotalism. All particulars can be had from the convener, 3, Berkeley-square, Clifton, Bristol.

Burial Law Reform.—The report of the committee has now been published, and its recommendations are eminently conciliatory. It has long been a standing disgrace that the law referring to this matter should be so chaotic. It has been the cause of painful scenes by the grave side, and has been fruitful of scandals in the community, making the relations between Church and Dissent bitter and uncharitable. The Government, it is said, intend next session to bring in a bill dealing with the subject on the lines laid down in the report. If this controversy can be settled in an amicable spirit, one of the main sources of religious friction will be removed, and the way prepared for better relations among Christian churches and people.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

The Bishop of Durham, who is suffering from the effects of over-work, will shortly leave on an extended holiday.

Dr. Sinclair preached on Douglas Head recently to a congregation of 20,000 in aid of the Lifeboat Institution.

The Bishop of Carlisle is gaining strength at Cortina, and hopes to start soon for England, travelling by easy stages.

The Church Missionary Society has accepted an offer to support a medical mission in Khartoum as soon as the way may be clear for it.

The Synod of the Province of South Africa has delegated the election of the Bishop of Grahamstown to the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of London, and the Bishop of Bath and Wells.

On Sunday last the Bishop of Newcastle returned thanks in his cathedral for recovery from an illness which seems to have been more serious than the public realised. He is yet to take complete rest for six or seven weeks.

The Bishop of Rochester has dedicated the memorial to the Duchess of Teck, which has been erected at St. John the Baptist's, Kingston Vale. The church is that in which her late Royal Highness worshipped for nearly twenty-five years.

Mr. Kensit is appealing for £10,000 annually to carry on the campaign against ritualism in the Church of England. He suggests that 10,000 Protestants should undertake to subscribe £1 annually so as to put the movement on a firm financial basis.

The Queen has approved the appointment of Rev. James Edward Cowell Welldon, head master of Harrow School, as Bishop of Calcutta and metropolitan bishop in India and the Island of Ceylon, in succession to Bishop Johnson, who has resigned for reasons of health.

The receipts of the East London Church Fund to July 26 were £10,010, that is to say £1565 in advance of last year's income to the same date. In the first six months of 1898 new grants have been voted to sixteen poor parishes, some of which have for years been patiently waiting for relief.

The Bishop of Mackenzie River is anxious to raise money for the stipends of four Church workers who can be stationed along the routes to Klondyke, and minister to miners and others on the road. The Bishop of Selkirk has been conducting services amongst the Klondyke miners this year.

The vicar of St. Peter's, London Docks, is one of the signatories to the document assuring the Bishop of London of the "dutiful and loyal compliance" of certain clergy with his lordship's directions as to the conduct of Divine service. Yet, as The Record points out, "the Holy Communion was celebrated in the style of the Mass, and, despite the rubric, there were no communicants."

Congregational.

During Dr. Parker's absence from the City Temple its pulpit is being occupied by Dr. Reuen Thomas, of Boston, U.S.A.

Principal Mitchell, of the Nottingham Institute, will preach at Carr's-lane, Birmingham, during the absence of the pastor, Rev. J. H. Jowett, on holiday.

Rev. Kenneth Mackenzie, of Tintwistle, near Manchester, is delivering a series of lecures bearing on Nonconformity in Tintwistle and the history of the chapel, dating back to 1688.

Trinity Church, Glasgow (Dr. Hunter), has purchased Ravenscraig Cottage, on the Inverkip-road, near Greenock, which they will utilise for a convalescent home for twelve children, with three adult attendants.

The fifty-first annual meeting of the Congregational Union of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick has been held. The new chairman of the Union is Rev. W. J. Minchin, St. John, and the next annual meeting is to be held at Sheffield, N.B.

Rev. W. C. Loosmore, pastor of New-road Church, Bury, who has accepted a call to Streatham Church, London, will commence his new duties on the first Sunday in October. It is proposed to build a new church at Streatham, and a site costing £4000 has been purchased.

Memorial-stones of a new chapel for the Carmel congregation, Morriston, have been laid. The building will seat 500, and the cost is estimated at £1500. Much of the preliminary work has been done voluntarily by members, who excavated the ground and assisted in quarrying the stone.

Rev. J. Morgan Gibbon, on leaving his church at Stamford Hill one Saturday evening, was surprised to find that an infidel lecturer had chosen the front of the building as a platform from which to enunciate his views. Mr. Gibbon challenged the accuracy of the man's statements. An animated discussion followed, resulting in the tables being turned, and an antagonistic crowd became a friendly one. On the following Sunday people were seen in Stamford Hill Church who had never been seen there before.

Baptist.

A new place of worship, to seat 350, is being erected in Stourbridge-road, Halesowen, at a cost of £1200.

£3100 has been received for the new Metropolitan Tabernacle in addition to the £22,000 from the insurance company.

During July seventeen baptisms took place at Rev. A. Streuli's church, Manchester, four of those baptized being deaconesses in training for foreign missionary work at the Star Hall, Ancoats.

The foundation-stone has been laid of a new church in Clarence-road, Grays (Rev. W. Winser). It will seat 300, and will cost between £800 and £900. At the rear will be a Sunday-school and vestries.

The congregation which has been meeting in the Forest-road Board School, Walthamstow, since October last have secured a freehold site in the Erskine-road, High-street, and a temporary iron chapel will be erected forthwith.

Beulah Chapel, Bexhill-on-Sea, "erected under the auspices of Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon, to the glory of God, and in memory of her beloved husband, C. H. Spurgeon," will be opened on Wednesday, Aug. 17. A meeting for prayer and praise at eleven; Pastor Thomas Spurgeon will preach at three, and Pastor Charles Spurgeon will preach at 6.30. On the following Lord's Day Pastor Charles Spurgeon will preach morning and evening.

Methodist.

The Bible Christian Conference has elected Rev. W. B. Lark president for the ensuing year.

The remarkable revival is still proceeding at Middlesbrough. Persons profess conversion at almost every service.

The oldest native Methodist preacher in China is Hu Bo Mi, who united with the Conference in 1860, and is still in the effective ranks.

Rev. R. S. Lee, of Donegal-square Circuit, has commenced a series of evangelistic services at Lagan View, a locality greatly resorted to in the long summer evenings.

The annual address of the Conference to the churches of Primitive Methodism states that, "after filling up the vacancies caused by deaths, resignations, and removals, we are able to report an increase of 1455. Our membership now stands at 195,727."

Mrs. H. Howard, a member of the Anglican Church, who has died in Blackpool, has bequeathed £1000 to the P.M. Missionary Society. She has made many gifts to the denomination, her sympathies having first been aroused by the consistent piety of her coachman.

"The Free Methodist College, Manchester," is the exact title at length given to the "Theological Institute," as it was formerly called. Rev. Thomas Sherwood was recently re-elected principal. Of the £20,000 raised for an endowment fund, £15,000 have been received, and £611 for interest.

The news of the safety of Rev. C. H. Goodman, of the Mendi, West African Mission (Free Methodist), has been confirmed. The telegrams, though meagre, indicate that he was actually stripped to be killed, but spared. He is the only male member of the mission who has escaped; all the others were butchered and thrown into a well.

Presbyterian.

Women students will henceforth be admitted into Carmarthen Presbyterian College.

In the Presbytery of Manchester the total amount raised for all purposes for the past year was £17,627, being an increase of £1600. A noteworthy feature is the very small amount of debt throughout the Presbytery.

Dr. Thain Davidson laid the memorial-stone of a hall which is being built for Presbyterian services at Wembley Park, London, by the generosity of Mr. T. J. Hamp, of Park House. The hall is expected to be opened before the end of the year. A church will be erected as soon as there is need for it.

THE BOOK WORLD.

A LONDON CHURCH.

Dr. Samuel Kinns has made a world-wide reputation by his works in defence of Holy Scripture. Important features of "Moses and Geology" and "Graven in the Rock" were their easy style and their wealth of engravings illustrative of the text. These qualities also belong to his new volume, Six Hundred Years: or Historical Sketches of Eminent Men and Women who have more or less come into contact with the Abbey and Church of Holy Trinity, Minories, from 1293 to 1893, and some account of the Incumbents, the Fabric, the Plate, etc." (Library edition 15s. Cassell & Co.) Now, Holy Trinity, Minories, was a short time ago spoken of in the papers as a "doomed" City church; and as Dr. Kinns is its vicar many inquiries were addressed to him, not only as to the fate but also as to the history of the building. Hence patient investigations, which disclosed deeply interesting facts regarding men and things; and the fruits of these disclosures are given in this handsome volume, dedicated to the Duchess of York. Only four chapters of the seventeen relate directly to the church; the remainder are, strictly speaking, narratives suggested by circumstances connected with the district, and for the most part of more than local importance. In a word, the historic church is made the text for several entertaining chapters on topics at once curious and instructive. Among the chapters may be mentioned one on Sir Isaac Newton as Master of the Mint, one on the romantic story of the Duke of Suffolk and Lady Jane Grey, and one on the title "Fidei Defensor," which is shown to be borne by Her Majesty, not as conferred on Henry VIII. by Pope Leo X., but by virtue of an Act of Parliament. That Act was passed in the thirty-fifth year of Henry's reign, in open defiance of the Pope's bull and excommunication; and Dr. Kinns gives us a copy thereof in all the quaint spelling and diction of the time. The numerous illustrations, which form a miniature portrait gallery, are for the most part highly finished reproductions by photography of engravings preserved in the print room of the British Museum.

Messrs. Marshall Bros. are continuing the cheap re-issue of The Keswick Library series. Hidden, yet Possessed (6d.), a little book of seventeen chapters, by Rev. Evans H. Hopkins, has now appeared.

The Official Handbook of the Presbyterian Church of England for 1898-9 has been issued from the Publishing Office, 14, Paternoster-square, E.C. It is packed with information such as cannot but interest Presbyterian ministers and office-bearers, and may, in a way, prove of service occasionally to other Christian workers.

The latest issue of The Animals' Friend is somewhat reduced in size, but its contents are full of charm to those who consider "our dumb brethren." Those who realise the great influence for good of this monthly, with its attractive Children's Supplement, will be concerned to see that the appeal of the conductors for financial support is not made in vain. (2d., monthly. G. Bell & Sons).

The Investment of Influence. By N. D. Hillis. (Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) These thoughtful and thought-compelling chapters are devoted to "a study of social sympathy and social service." Many aspects of this far-reaching theme are treated, and always with a wealth of suggestive force and apt illustration. The literary style is delightfully crisp, and there are many evidences of erudite study and research. A book eminently suited for dipping into in quiet hours.

IN WHAT DO WE OWE TO THE REFORMATION? Bishop Ryle asks a great question, and answers it like the true Protestant that he is. We trust the pamphlet will be distributed broadcast, for it is calculated to do much good at the present time. (1d., or 6s. per hundred. John Kensit.)

A striking booklet on a subject of great importance is OUR THEATRES, AND WHY CHRISTIAN PEOPLE CANNOT GO TO THEM, by J. Forbes Moncrieff, with introductory letter by Frederick N. Charrington. We welcome a third edition, and trust it will be widely circulated. (London, Dyer Brothers; Edinburgh, Andrew Stevenson & Co.)

Mr. C. J. Thynne has issued in pamphlet form the speeches on the Benefices Bill recently made in Parliament by Mr. Samuel Smith and Sir William Harcourt. We trust many will read these pages, the facts of which will, we are sure, come to many as veritable revelations as to the advance of Romish teachings and practices in our land (2d.)

Recent educational publications by Sir Isaac Pitman and Sons include: THE TOURIST'S VADE MECUM, or French Colloquial Conversation, with vocabularies, tables, etc., and the exact pronunciation of every word (1s.); THE POPULAR GERMAN READER, No. 1, containing a translation of "My Child-Wife" from Dickens's "David Copperfield", and HIER UND DA, a collection of wit, humour, and satire, with other interesting items in English and German (6d. each).

Notes and Comments.

THERE is no more important effort of an evangelistic kind at this season of the year than Gospel work among hop-pickers. The great majority of these lowly toilers come from our poorer city districts, where the religious influences brought to bear on them have much to contend against. In the country, away, from the seductions of the public-house, they are more open to approach, and many in past years have been the subject of deep impressions, if not of converting grace. We would invite our readers to show practical sympathy with this excellent movement, in which many earnest workers are now taking a part. We should be glad to distribute among those workers any sums entrusted to our care.

Despite ceaseless vigilance, and notwithstanding every precaution, errors will creep into printed matter. Through all the stages of type-setting and correction Dr. Pierson's Keswick address in our last issue was, at least, unimpeachable as to its opening sentences, in which Holy Scripture was quoted; but when the paper appeared we were dismayed to find confusion introduced into the memorable utterance of the great Apostle: "For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." The pain which the transposition of words caused to readers of the paper was, it is needless to say, our own in a poignant degree.

A paragraph appeared on this page in our issue of August 4 referring to the "weary pastors in country towns and villages who would greatly enjoy a visit to London as a holiday, and be set up for future work by making a round of its institutions and seeing something of its religious life." We suggested that Christian residents in London might facilitate such visits, and we are glad now to mention that a correspondent has written expressing the pleasure it will give her to act on that suggestion; she offers her house in Battersea, opposite the Park, and is willing to lend it to any well-recommended minister or other Christian worker, with small family, who will bring their own servant. Letters addressed "W., care of The Christian Office, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.," will be forwarded to the friend making this generous offer.

Another correspondent, Mr. J. C. Rogers, of the London City Mission, writes to say that he will at any time be exceedingly pleased to conduct such visitors to London over the East and Northern districts, with the Christian effort of which he has long been familiar. Mr. Rogers may be addressed 3, Pearl-road, Walthamstow.

Men of character, ecclesiastical or otherwise, ought not to lend their names to float companies or resuscitate businesses of which they know nothing. Inexperienced persons ought not to invest in any company or business without the advice of some disinterested and thoroughly reliable man who understands that about which he gives counsel.

Christians are to come out and be separate from the world. But they are not to be separate from one another. The Lord Jesus, in his last great intercession, prayed that they all may be one—"as Thou Father art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in Us." "In one Spirit are we all baptized into one body"—"the Church, which is his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all." "The Gentiles...fellow-heirs and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the Gospel."

Any attempt to gather together certain members of the body into a "league," or "union," within the Church, but separate from other members of the one body, on the ground of holiness or fulness of the Spirit, is a departure from the truth of the Gospel. The Apostle warns us of the possibility of building on the one foundation, either gold, silver, precious stones, or wood, hay, stubble. But he does not attempt to separate the one class from the other, nor encourage the former to differentiate themselves from the latter. He looks that "the day shall declare it; because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is." Judge nothing before the time. Those who think themselves or others to be virgin souls, who shall be an election out of the elect Church, may remember that the elect of the elect are they who "think others better than themselves."

An agnostic clergyman writes to the editor of Truth, asking for advice in what he calls "a dreadful dilemma." He feels that it is dishonourable to go on preaching what he does not believe, but he is in doubt whether he ought not to do so in order to support his wife and children! Apparently there is no Home for Doubting Priests, no Asylum for Agnostics, into which the pervert can be received. Leaving this, however, we cannot but admire the robustness of Truth in insisting that the revenues of the Church were not intended for the maintenance of agnostic clergymen, and especially in adding:—

> The early martyrs, whose blood was the seed of the Church, never seem to have shown any great anxiety as to what was going to become of their wives and families. I almost think that the teaching of Christianity itself forbids undue anxiety on that score.

The war between Spain and America is practically over, though the preliminaries of peace alone are signed. The issue was clear from the beginning. Spain's colonial empire has disappeared, and she is left with a brood of home problems to deal with that seem well-nigh insoluble. Seldom in the whole range of history has the glory of a great nation passed away more entirely within two or three centuries. It is a sad lesson of what corruption, vain-glory, and Roman Catholicism can do to bring a mighty people to the dust. Of nations, as well as individuals, is it true that "whatsoever" it "soweth, that shall" it "also reap." The saddest point of all is that the eclipse of Spain was the one hope of progress for her dependencies. Cuba, it is generally hoped and believed, will presently begin a new career of liberty and enlightenment under the ægis of the United States. The world will watch with solicitude at the way that nation will fulfil the responsibilities it has taken upon itself.

Now that the outlook of peace with America is so bright, we may look forward to advance in the growth of Evangelical Christianity in Spain. If only Protestantism in that priest-ridden land had a free hand its success would be assured. We must not suppose, however, that the light of Gospel truth is utterly extinguished. In the entire country to-day there are fifty-six Protestant pastors, thirty-five evangelists, and 116 places for public worship. The number of regular communicants is 3442, and regular attendants reach 9194. These may seem very small numbers for the whole of Spain. It is certainly a day of small things for Protestants as yet. But the seed is there—it only needs to be allowed to grow. The light is there if its shining be not hindered. Besides various forms of personal work, there are Protestant periodicals—El Cristiano, La Luz, El Evangelista, El Heraldo. There is also a review known as La Revista Cristiana, and a pictorial publication for children called El Amigo de la Infancia. All this is full of encouragement for the future. Only let the Gospel of the glory of Christ have free course, and Spain will again be heard of amongst the progressive nations of Europe.

The appointments of Dr. Welldon to be Bishop of Calcutta and of Mr. Curzon to be Viceroy of India have attracted a great deal of attention. Dr. Welldon's has been received with general satisfaction. He will be a great accession of strength to the religious world of India. Christianity there is in the midst of a great crisis, and is face to face with a great opportunity. In every Church there is a call for great leaders whose strength is tempered with wisdom, and whose zeal for the Gospel is matched by broad and firm statesmanship. The awakening of India, which is fast spreading, must be completed by its evangelisation. Our responsibility towards our vast dependency includes the duty of lending it the services of our finest intellects and most consecrated religious souls.

The appointment of Mr. Curzon is one of much importance. For so august a position the most qualified man England contains should ever be selected. Mr. Curzon seems to be more qualified for the Viceroyalty than some of his predecessors. He has been an observant traveller in India and Asia generally. He has written at least three books which display an intimate knowledge of Eastern affairs. To rule over three hundred million Asiatics is a splendid, but most difficult, position. Two great questions will especially tax Mr. Curzon's statesmanship and resolution—finance and militarism. India ought to be more economically governed, and the heaviest, the most unnecessary, and even dangerous of her burdens is her too great native army, which necessitates a great European one. Certainly Mr. Curzon will have the sympathy of the whole country with him, save, perhaps, a small faction, if he acts on the noble words he once spoke :—

I believe that the security of our frontier rests not upon the number of battalions we place there, but upon the individual character of the men whom we choose. It is a question not of cannon, but of character.

It matters nothing our holding India and the Far East unless we do so to be of some use to the millions of people who live there, and we can only serve them by means of good men.

The Church Times complains that Dr. Welldon has not delivered a very definite message at Harrow—that is to say, he has not been sufficiently "Catholic." But it hopes that he will change for the better.

In face of gigantic systems of error mere opinions disappear and theories vanish, and in the stress of the conflict with heathenism Catholic principles are developed in the most unlikely soils. And since Dr. Welldon makes many sacrifices in accepting an Indian bishopric, it is not unlikely that he will perforce go further, and develop the dogmatic principles without which Christianity is powerless to contend against the cultured heathenism of India.

Facing the evils of heathenism does not always lead missionaries to adopt a more pronounced "Catholic" creed, but just the opposite. The simplicity that is in Christ has been found on foreign shores by some who went forth as the apostles of a Church. So it was with Mr. R. Lecomte, who went to Africa and the East. His observation of the life and labours of Protestant missionaries, of the strict conscientiousness of Protestants with whom he came into contact, and, finally, his own study of the Bible, turned him away from the superstitions of his youth, and brought him into light and liberty. He says that it is impossible to remain a Catholic if one reads the Bible, and it is his present intention to return to Africa as an Evangelical missionary.

The activity, enterprise, and skill of the Roman Catholic Church in pushing its work is as remarkable in heathen lands as in old countries. It may leave to other men the dangerous work of first encountering the ferocity of savages, but once a footing has been gained by them it is not slow to come and use it. The case of New Guinea is one in point. Using the advantages gained by the labours of Evangelical believers, and sheltering itself under the British flag, it is now firmly established on the coast, having an archbishop and several fathers on its staff there, besides a large number of priests, brothers, and nuns. They will belie all their Church's past history if they do not devote attention to proselytising the converts made by other and earlier workers rather than to the evangelisation of the heathen.

The severest blow yet struck against the Stundists has been dealt by the new Russian Minister of Public Instruction, M. Bogoliestoff. He has decreed that their children will not be permitted to remain in the national schools if they do not regularly attend the religious instruction prescribed for "orthodox scholars." This will force their parents either to comply or to declare themselves as conscientiously opposed to the teachings of the Church. This is an unpleasant dilemma, and it is foreseen that the regulation will have far-reaching consequences on the future of Evangelical religion in the country. To oppose the orthodox faith being an act of heresy, Stundists who value their children's religious education too much to be silent under this imposition will be more than ever open to persecution. They will need all their heroism to meet this trying test of fidelity.

While we are occupied casting stones at Spain for her superstition and ignorance, we would do well not to overlook the recent revival of Romanist pilgrimages to the idolatrous shrines which yet remain in our midst. Hastings Castle has been made the scene of a second "doll's show," as an indignant, protesting onlooker described it, local Romanists and a contingent from London visiting in state the "Shrine of Our Lady" in the ruins on West Hill. This may attract the crowd, but it is well that we should see beforehand to what a level the Pope's religion can reduce enlightened Englishmen. And in Canning Town, on Sunday, a function took place in which a statue of the Virgin Mary was paraded through the streets by a group of girls dressed up as French peasants, escorted by thurifer, cross-bearer, acolytes, altar boys, brass bands, and local priests in cloth of gold vestments. But such is the length to which the Anglican Ritualists now go that, as the newspaper report does not say to which camp this display belonged, it is at first sight difficult to know whether to set it down as Romanist or nominally Anglican.

The crusade against Romanism is by no means inactive during the holiday season. Mr. Kensit's intention to make no further protests until the first Sunday in November places no restraint upon the Press. It is now the occasion of The Daily Graphic to help to swell the rising tide of indignation against the anti-English innovations of the High Church party. A series of illustrated articles will appear in the pages of this enterprising contemporary; one of them has dealt with the celebration of High Mass at St. Alban's, Holborn. The illustration itself is effective. There seems little or nothing in this portraiture to distinguish the procession from any which might be witnessed in a Roman Catholic country at any time. But the letterpress description goes into minute details :

At the eleven o'clock celebration—or High Mass—half a dozen candles on the altar are lit by an acolyte, and the clergy—a deacon, sub-deacon, and priest—on entering the church are preceded by a surpliced choir and by acolytes in scarlet cassocks, one of whom swings the incense. On reaching the altar the priest censes it, and the service proper then begins. The sign of the cross and genuflexions are of frequent occurrence, the latter being particularly noticeable at the words "and was incarnate by the Holy Ghost" in the Nicene Creed, on account of its pronounced nature. In the "General Confession" the beating of the breast takes place, as with Roman Catholics when the words "mea culpa, mea culpa, mea maxima culpa," are uttered.

This is quite enough to brand the service as Romish.

The progress of "Catholic" doctrine in the Church of England may be gauged from the following prayer used by the Bishop of Rochester at the dedication of the Duchess of Teck's memorial at Kingston Vale—a reredos and windows in the apse of St. John the Baptist's Church :

O Father, remember thy servants and handmaidens which have departed hence in the Lord, especially thy servant whom we remember this day. Give them eternal rest and peace in thy heavenly kingdom.

This departure from Scriptural usage in praying for the dead does not seem to have been noticed sufficiently in the newspapers to please the Church Review, which calls attention to the fact and seems to rejoice in the proof which it affords of the spread of Romanist views on the subject.

The following letter appeared in The Times last week, and tells its own tale :—

Sir,—I send you the enclosed letter in the hope that you may insert the following passage referring to an extraordinary agreement which seems to have been arrived at by the great railway companies in Christian England.

"With reference to the meeting at the Castle on July 30, my superintendent now writes :—

"'I have submitted this matter to our London people, and am instructed that, as the meeting is for religious purposes, we cannot agree to any reduction in fares.'"

"This is consequent on an agreement between all railway companies that no reduction is made to parties attending any conference or meeting."

The railway companies issue cheap tickets to parties attending wakes, revels, race-meetings, and such-like gatherings, and refuse them to people wishing quietly to attend meetings in furtherance of religion. And this is a Christian country!—Yours faithfully, A. Perowne,

We have called attention to this matter before. It is almost incredible that such a resolution should have been agreed to by the directors and managers of all the English railways. To expect special privileges for those who wish to attend religious gatherings may be, perhaps, unreasonable; but to debar them from such favours as are accorded to pleasure-seekers of every class and grade is an insult to the better nature of the British nation, and constitutes a shameful grievance. Cannot Christian shareholders move in the matter?

The Convention at Keswick.

THIS movement has continued for three-and-twenty years with increasing interest, from year to year clearing itself from dubious statement, and becoming a luminous exposition of the Gospel in its relation to the saint. It has therefore established its claim to represent a vital element in the Christian life of the nation.

While one portion of the Church of England is becoming more and more conformed to Rome, the portion represented at Keswick is becoming more and more Evangelical and evangelistic. The Low Church had fallen into a dead moderatism, but the revived energy which originated in the Oxford Convention has created a new Low Church, which tends more effectually than direct opposition to neutralise the sacerdotalism and sacramentarianism rampant among us.

But the Church of England element, though predominant at Keswick, is not exclusive. Several of the Nonconformist denominations are represented on its platforms here and elsewhere. It is a spiritual force which elevates and simplifies the conception of Christian life, and tends to do away with the false and paralysing distinction between Christians and Christian workers, and makes it to be understood that as a living fish swims against the stream, so a living Christian shows his faith by his works.

Christians, young and old, hungering and thirsting after righteousness, throng to this great gathering and to its many offshoots throughout the country. In other lands, also, the same spirit is seen. In France, Italy, Germany, Switzerland, similar meetings have come to stay. Missionaries at home on furlough find here deep enjoyment and spiritual food.

It would seem that pastors could not afford to remain in ignorance concerning a movement exercising so evident an influence on their flocks; nor does it appear desirable that secretaries and directors of missionary societies should fail to acquaint themselves with a movement which is quietly revolutionising the inner life of many on the mission field, and of more who are likely to become missionaries.

A general would certainly inquire into the cause of any effect produced upon the ways and habits of his soldiers; and those having the oversight of soldiers of the Cross ought to know much more about the conventions for the deepening of spiritual life than many of them appear to do.

Threefold Leprosy.

THE following thoughts on certain portions of Leviticus xiii. and xiv. are not, except in a somewhat wide sense, to be considered as expository. They are rather illustrations of the marvellous adaptability of Scriptural thought and language to the spiritual and social conditions of every time.

The leprosy against which the Divine law guarded Israel was threefold. Persons, garments, and houses were alike subject to its attacks. We to-day are plagued by the moral leprosy of sin in exactly corresponding spheres. There is leprosy in the individual soul, leprosy in the body, which is the garment of the soul, and leprosy in the social state.

For the leprosy of the body (ch. xiii. 1-46) the sufferer was to go to the priest. But he did not go for healing! The priest was to look on the plague, and if definite signs were present was to pronounce the man unclean at once. If the appearances were uncertain the unhappy suspect was to be shut up for a period of seven or fourteen days, and then finally pronounced clean or unclean. "The priest shall look on him and pronounce him unclean" (v. 3). The man would never forget the moment, the words that at one blow cut his life in twain and planted a deep gulf between him and the hopelessly longed-for past. Are there not those among us upon whom the law has "looked"? The law of truth, bright with the lightning of Sinai, has gazed upon us and pointed out our hidden leprosy to us, and as it seemed to the whole world. We had suspected it ourselves at times, and the suspicion had bred in us a vague uneasiness; but lo! as soon as we saw that the whole truth was known to God we could no longer disguise it from ourselves. It is well for those who, from a condemning law, turn to a healing Saviour and hear his voice say, "I will, be thou made clean" (Mark i. 41).

"The garment also that the plague of leprosy is in...shall be shewed unto the priest" (Lev. xiii. 47-49). There is but one court of justice, and only one judge sits there. The infected garment must be brought to the same judgment as the infected person. How

IMPARTIAL IS THIS DREAD DISEASE.

Not content with destroying the body, it seizes on the garment. The effects of sin are not confined to the soul. The soul's garment feels the plague, and shows many a visible sign of it. Therefore it, too, must be brought into judgment. There are but two ways of dealing with the infected garment. It must be washed, or, if that be not effectual, it must be burnt with fire. "Such were some of you," said Paul to the Corinthians; [ye were leprous in soul and body], "but ye are washed" (1 Cor. vi. 11). Also our Lord said, "Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you" (John xv. 3). The Word of God is the fountain of pure water. Oh, to know more of its sanctifying effects. For want of this many sleep, and many will suffer loss in the day of the Lord, being saved as by fire.

A third sort of leprosy is spoken of in ch. xiv. 33-53—leprosy in the walls of a house. Of many states, peoples, governments, and churches it must be said, "There seemeth to be as it were a plague in the house" (v. 35). You can find no fault with the architecture of the house; the constitution of the Church or State is admirable in theory, but "there seemeth to be as it were a plague in the house." Leprous states abound, and they are the plague-spots of modern civilisation. With most of them the stone-extracting and mortar-scraping process has been, or is being, tried.

An unpopular ruler is got rid of and a new favourite, fresh from the democratic quarry, put in his place; and men gaze at the patched up edifice as though they thought it would last. Mortar, in the shape of some old abuse, festering badly enough probably, is scraped off by bucketfuls. Men are nearly choked with the dust, but still they cheer. Yet the plague spreads; it is the fretting leprosy of unforsaken sin. What a solemn warning is v. 45 of the ultimate doom of leprous states: "He shall break down the house, the stones of it, and the timber thereof, and all the mortar of the house; and he shall carry them forth out of the city into an unclean place."

There are spots in all our houses, in individual life and heart as well as in Church and State. Oh, to have these not only diagnosed but cleansed. Let us bring them to the light, and having judged them, turn to Him who alone can work a cure, who "Himself took our infirmities and bare our sicknesses" (Matt. viii. 17). H. D. V.

Honey out of the Rock.

By Rev. T. L. CUYLER, D.D.

THE traveller through the wildest regions of ancient Palestine was sometimes surprised by coming upon a thrifty olive tree growing on the scanty earth that covers the flinty rocks. Or in the clefts of the rocks he would find a busy colony of bees; and the comb would be dripping with the delicious outflow of wild honey! All the more welcome to him would be this liquid sweetness because found in an unexpected place. Bare, bald, bleak rocks may furnish a perch for eagles or a nestling-place for wild conies; but golden wheat never waves over them, nor does the vine mantle their rough cheeks with purple clusters. Yet out of these very rocks came the luscious honey-comb; and out of their crevices grew the fruitful olive-tree! To these facts the song of Moses refers—in the book of Deuteronomy—when he says that the Lord's people shall "suck honey out of the rock, and oil out of the flinty rock."

Beautifully does this fact in natural history illustrate how the Christian often finds rich blessings in unexpected quarters. No season may be so honey-yielding and oil producing as the flinty days of adversity. At such times his religion is more prized, and the things of earth lose their lustre. When earthly cisterns dry up, and earthly treasures vanish, the soul finds in Jesus a truer possession and a sweeter satisfaction. The honey-comb does not fail. All precious graces—the godly contentment—the sense of assurance in the Beloved—fellowship with the Comforter—hopes of Heaven—all these flow forth from the inward union with Him who is the fount-head of the life everlasting. A believer, with the Bible in his hand and the Saviour in his heart, can, even in the seasons of sharpest trial, draw "honey from the rock."

How wonderfully God discovers to his people their perennial comforts and consolations in the flinty places of sore troubles and bereavements! Do we lose our property? Then we go up to our Divine treasure-keeper, and inquire after our soul's investments and find that they are all safe. Do our fair-weather friends drop away in the dark days of adversity? Then we draw up closer to Him who saith, "I will never forsake thee." Do we bury up under the turf the darling of our crib, or the sweet-voiced wife that filled home with heart melodies, or the dear old mother whose arm-chair was next in sacredness to our family altar? Then our thoughts fasten more closely on that Homestead beyond the clouds into which the spoiler never enters. The unseen things become visible. Christ becomes nearer and infinitely dearer. Prayer takes stronger hold on the promises. Faith has a clearer vision; and life becomes more disentangled from the harassing worries and absorptions of worldliness. Probably we were very loth to be driven away into these

ROCK REGIONS OF TRIAL.

We prayed to be kept out of them; for there is not a living Christian—even the best of them—who covets affliction. But when we were forced into the flinty places of adversity or bereavement, how delicious was the honey which faith drew out of the rocks!

What a happy thing it is for us that we cannot choose our own lot! What awful blunders we make when we think that the most desirable places are the rich alluvials of abounding prosperity—and the best days are the cloudless days, and the best air is the soft vernal air of worldly success and popularity! Do we ever ask God for a hurricane? Yet many a hurricane of trial has driven a sinner to Calvary, and many a backsliding Christian back to his forsaken post of duty. Do we thank God for a deluge? Yet stubborn hearts have been softened and barren lives have been made fruitful by such downpours. Very much of the choicest, purest, deepest, and strongest portions of a Christian's character has been engendered in those seasons when worldly friends were pitying him or condoling with him. If angels could speak they would congratulate him.

He who orders our pathway into regions of trial conceals the honey-comb for us in the rock, and makes the oil olive to grow out of the flinty clefts. My fellow pilgrim, instead of listening to the murmurs of unbelief, listen to the music of the promises; instead of complaining at a hard lot, seek for the honey that lies hidden within it. Selfishness chooses velvet paths and flowery meads; but where Jesus puts you He goes there with you. He can make desert-places blossom with roses. This life will look very different when you study its geography from another world. As you look back upon it from the realms of glory, no portion of your earthly pilgrimage will appear to have yielded such unexpected mercies and benefits as those days of trial when you drew honey out of the rock, and oil out of the flinty rock.

Medical Mission Work in Ceylon.—In a letter from Manepy, Jaffna, Dr. T. B. Scott relates the serious illness and recovery of his little boy. He continues: "All the churches made his illness a special matter of prayer. We are told that even in the heathen temple at Manepy, and also at Nellore, the priests offered prayer to 'Swami.' This shows that, whatever their attitude to Christianity, their antipathy does not extend to the medical missionary. From both of these families of priests we have had patients." The work of 1897 was considerably larger than that of 1896, and noticeably so in the number of hospital patients.

Paris Exhibition, 1900.—In view of this fixture an interesting society is being organised by Mlle. Irène de Bouimistroff, of Riasan (Russia). It has for its object the formation of an ethical section, in which an endeavour will be made to illustrate the influence of Christianity upon the arts and sciences. The society will publish what may be called a reasoned catalogue of operations in the spirit of Christianity, and as it will give biographical notices of persons who have been distinguished for their good works it will furnish materials for a universal history of moral progress. Communications to Mlle. Bouimistroff may be addressed to the care of the Society of Women Workers, 59, Berners-street, Oxford-street, London, W.

*Something—Nothing.

By PREBENDARY WEBB-PEPLOE.

EVEN in the hope that we may be endued with power, and be conscious thereof, we uprear a barrier, an obstacle between ourselves and blessing, and interfere with the current of grace so that it cannot flow into us. To be conscious of power means satisfaction; and as a starting point for blessing we are driven back to the truth expressed by the Apostle in Gal. vi. 3: "If a man think himself to be something, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself." This is a truth so self-evident, so far as the words are concerned, that one is almost tempted to smile at the very idea of the Apostle giving expression to it.

Of course, it stands to reason, as we say, if a man is really nothing and thinks himself to be something, he must inevitably be deceiving himself. No man who ever thought himself something would believe that he is nothing; and it is because men are believing themselves to be something that the Apostle has given expression to this remarkable truism, in order to bring confutation and conviction to the souls of those who imagine themselves to be something. The questions that meet us are—(1) Who is nothing even while he thinks himself to be something? and (2) How is it possible that a living man should be nothing?

To begin with, let us remember what is meant by the doctrine of substitution. The Gospel is a revelation of substitution; and because that Gospel approaches us as sinners, every man, when he realises anything of the doctrine of substitution, commences by accepting before God, his substitute in the eyes of the law and in regard to the penal consequences of sin, in the acceptance which God gives to the sinner in the Beloved. All this brings peace and rest to the soul, when a man apprehends that he is indeed a lost sinner and Christ Jesus has taken his place in regard to punishment, and gives the sinner his own place in regard to acceptance. And herein we see a real satisfaction, a real assurance of peace, and provision for ever in regard to our soul's eternal wants. But these point to the past and the future rather than the present.

We thank God that Christ Jesus has taken the place of the sinner, that the law has been satisfied, and God can be well pleased with the guilty; and we joyously look on to the future with its eternal heaven, because Christ Jesus is at God's right hand, and in Him we are supplied with endless glory. But there is the intermediate space of the life that now is, and the question is—How shall men behave to-day as saints of God? And the question arises whether substitution does not really mean something more than that One has taken my place in punishment and given me his place in the glory of God; and I humbly believe that until we see that substitution involves Christ taking my place now, we have not understood the doctrine. That is to say, the Lord Jesus gives me his place in heaven, and takes what I have vainly attempted to call my place on earth. In the one case there is reality in the condition, for I am a ruined sinner, and there is actual gain—a new condition of things; substitution is literal and true, because I throw away my own attempts in order to accept the Christ position in heaven. But when we come to the other side of the subject, that Christ should take my place, there is no real substitution, but only as we imagine, for there is nothing for Christ to be substituted for, and I have to learn that what I fancied was at all, and must be got rid of as an impression altogether; that Christ must in reality come, not in substitution for myself, but in order to fill that which is first emptied. I have been putting up something at the door posts or at the entrance of my soul, which prevented Christ from coming in and filling the emptiness that there existed. And what is to be done is to get rid of the obstacle and let the Christ in. Thank God, the inner qualities of man's being cannot be satisfied with vanities; upon these the saints of God have been trying to satisfy themselves, and have been disappointed.

How shall we learn the truth that man is nothing? The subject seems to present obstacles that are insuperable; no human language can do justice to the idea which the Holy Ghost presents to us in the Apostle's words. Yet how completely men are determined to assert themselves something! Read the two Epistles to the Corinthians—and the Corinthian people flattered themselves that they were wise, learned, great, and civilised. Observe how the Apostle perpetually recurs to the subject of self-confidence, self-trust, self-admiration, and so forth. In the full sense of the word, the Corinthians were self-assertive; hence they were told to have no glorying, but if they glory it must be "in the Lord." Again, they were not to rely on the wisdom of men; indeed, if they would have the wisdom of God, they must get rid of human wisdom.

In the third chapter of the First Epistle, St. Paul says they have no longer any power to think of good works of their own; only the Lord's work will reckon as anything to them, and they will be nothing, as Christ is to be all. The Apostle seems, all through, to be arguing against men who fancy themselves to be great or accomplishments or performances. Ten times in the First Epistle he says that men must be nothing, and are nothing, in the fullest sense of the word. Look at particular passages—1 Cor. i. 19, "I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent"; verse 2, "The things which are despised hath God chosen, yea, and things that are not, to bring to nought things that are"; chap. iii. 7, "Neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth"; iv. 4, 5, "I know nothing by myself...judge nothing before the time."

In chap. vii. 19 the Apostle tells us what are the nothings. "Circumcision is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing." In viii. 2, "If any man think that he knoweth anything, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know"; in ix. 16, "Though I preach the Gospel, I have nothing to glory of"; in xiii. 2, 3, "Though I have all faith...and have not charity, I am nothing. Though I give my body to be burned and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing." What assertions of nothingness could be stronger than these? Then in the Second Epistle (chap. xii. 11) St. Paul says: "I ought to have been commended of you; for in nothing am I behind the very chiefest apostles, though I am nothing." Here is an Apostle doing more work perhaps than any other man that had perhaps been known upon earth, and yet he is driven to the conclusion that he is absolutely nothing. This word "nothing" is repeated again and again, always to show that human beings are utterly nothing in themselves.

After studying this subject carefully, I found a certain impossibility to realise what this expression could mean for any one of us. To say before God "I am nothing," when all the time we are perfectly conscious that we exist and have certain powers and possessions, seems to be unreal. After weighing the matter and praying over it, I could come to no definite conclusion until with the words on my lips: "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus, who emptied Himself." This is an expression which has been much discussed of late as the kenosis of Christ. At once the truth of the matter of our being nothing flashed across my soul. He who was the Lord of all, the absolute Master as well as the Maker of all things that exist, He who has for his own everything that is to be found in the length and breadth of the universe—Christ the Son of God, one with the Father—"emptied Himself." That was the word that broke in upon me in the night. When we are emptied, what is left? Nothing!

So I discovered this solemn truth that the Christ of God of his own free will did what we think we cannot do, but what we have never been asked to do, for there is no reason for us to do it, as in our case it is a fact already. In Christ's case, however, it had to be accomplished, and of his free will He emptied Himself, made Himself such that nothing was left in Him. Of course I am not speaking of material flesh, but of the spiritual and moral aspect of the Gospel, and I suppose our Lord to have taught us the meaning of things when He says: John vi. 63—"The flesh profiteth nothing." I am not dealing with flesh, for it is nothing, and God deals with it as if it were nothing. The whole idea of man in his beauty and power, as a flesh and blood creature, is dealt with in Psalm xxxix. 5, 6: "Every man at his best state is altogether vanity. Every man walketh in a vain show. Surely every man is vanity." This simply means emptiness, utter, absolute emptiness, that nothing is to be found in man.

So long as we are dealing with flesh, we are dealing with vanity, emptiness, nothingness. Now we turn to the Lord Jesus Christ, and learn that for us men and our salvation, having chosen to come into the same relation that we occupied before God, He emptied Himself until there was nothing. And then God created a body for Him, made that body, instinct with the Holy Ghost, to become the absolute possessor of that Son, formed in human flesh for our sakes; and from that moment, throughout his career, Christ reiterates the idea that he was for every thought, and word, and token of power, and for all He was He hung upon the Father, and accepted from Him as a gift that which, of course, as God He inherently possessed. He emptied Himself that He might be filled by God. John the Baptist described himself as "a voice," and nothing more empty can be conceived, and yet in John iii. 27 he was inspired to say, "A man can receive nothing, except it be given him from heaven." Again, observe John v. 19, "The Son can do nothing of Himself but what He seeth the Father do; for what things soever He doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise." Then notice verse 30, "'I can of mine own self do nothing; as I hear, I judge, and my judgment is just." Also, in chapter viii., Christ says the same (verse 28). "I do nothing of myself; as my Father hath taught me I speak these things." The same thought is repeated over and over again, and even a plain man of the world could say, "If this man were not of God, he could do nothing" (ix. 33). Has it never struck you that we are lacking altogether the spiritual instinct of that blind man when his eyes were opened? He saw that men without God are nothing; and yet men flatter themselves that they are something, and live lives altogether for themselves. Christ emptied Himself; we cannot do that, for we are empty to begin with. But as an empty vessel, which has had its orifice obstructed by sin and wickedness, we can let the Christ of God come into us and fill us with his fulness.

Until we apprehend the fact that man is nothing, while he thinks himself something, we are but self-deceivers, and shall find it impossible to bring forth fruit to the glory of God. Only when space is made for Him can God enter. I believe it to be true that if Jesus Christ of his own free will had not made Himself so empty that God could fill his humanity, He could never have been the Saviour of mankind, nor have been what He will be for all eternity. "God has chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty...the things which are not to bring to nought things that are." We have to learn that God can take the "are nots," and by them bring to nought the things that are. Is it not a marvellous thought that Christ was willing to become that the Son of God should condescend to a condition of absolute nothingness that you and I might receive the Godhead? The Christ who emptied Himself can fill us, and we "can do all things through Christ that strengtheneth us."

Notice, further, that in Galatians the Apostle is drawing a conclusion regarding life in the Spirit, and he says if a man does really live and walk in the Spirit, and is led by the Spirit, he will not fulfil the lusts of the flesh. But what will he do? First of all, he says, we shall never be "desirous of vain-glory, provoking one another, and envying one another." It is because a man thinks himself something that he seeks vain-glory; in that belief also we sing, "Oh, to be nothing!" but in reality we say, "But mind, I am something!"

Who would like to be told that he was nothing at all? Hence we pass through the world nominally living in the Spirit and walking in the Spirit, but all the time conscious of vain-glory, self-seeking, and being jealous one of another. If a man is unwilling to forgive his brother, to lift up the fallen and go after the outcast, it is because he thinks something of himself, and says, "Stand apart; I am holier than thou." Hence the Apostle writes: "Bear ye one another's burdens." How can a man refuse to pick up the burden of his brother, if it is not that he is thinking of himself and not of his fellow. Let this mind be in us; and instead of crushing at railway stations in order to get the best positions on the train, and hurtling forward in crowds to secure one's own rights, we shall learn the Gospel doctrine of how to win the race for the prize in heaven by forgetfulness of self and remembrance of others.

St. Paul says, "Though I be the chiefest of the Apostles, I am nothing"; but he immediately brings forward the blessed truth that the Lord Jesus said, "My grace is sufficient for thee...My strength is made perfect in weakness," in vanity or nothingness. Oh, that the Lord would take possession of us all, we being nothing and Christ everything! If that doctrine of the Gospel is carried out in our daily life, we shall have no fear of exerting an influence with men. We shall be empty vessels for the Master to fill, that God may be all in all.

Echoes from Keswick.

THE WAY OF HOLINESS.

HOW may we be brought into a holy condition of soul? First of all, cease to seek it as an attainment—Christ has been made unto us holiness; and if we have the Giver we may enjoy the gift. If we receive Christ by faith, then it is not by struggling, or striving, or working, whether in regard to justification or sanctification. Our hearts should not only be cities with Christ as king, but temples in which He is worshipped, and through which He is manifested to the world.—Rev. Evan H. Hopkins.

THE COLD SHOULDER.

If there is one thing that is destroying more than another the power of the Spirit of God, it is divisions in the churches and the want of brotherhood and thorough sympathy among true believing Christians. I would rather have a man do, as one did, spit in my face, than have the cold shoulder of a brother; and I have had that many a time in my life. Oh, that such want of brotherhood and unity might be for ever put away!—Rev. Charles Fox.

CHRIST AND THE HOLY SPIRIT.

Christ had to be glorified before the Holy Spirit could be shed forth. There must be an Ascension of Christ before there could be a Pentecost. What was true in the macrocosm is true in the microcosm. There must be an ascension of Christ in our hearts before there can be a filling with the Holy Ghost. Until Christ is enthroned and glorified, the Spirit cannot be enjoyed. When within His disciple, Christ fulfils His promise: "He that believeth on Me, out of him shall flow rivers of living water." On this the Scripture adds: "This spake He of the Spirit which they that believe on Him should receive" (John vii. 37-39).—Rev. F. B. Meyer.

THE CHRISTIAN—A TEMPLE.

It has been well said that a temple is a place where God manifests himself to man, and where man sacrifices himself to God. The great need of many a Christian to-day is expressed in the words of the hymn, "Lord Jesus, make Thyself to me a living bright reality." It is a manifested presence that we want; and we shall never lead the life that Christ wants us to lead unless we know that presence. A temple is a habitation of God, and holiness is "the law of the house." If our hearts are the scene of strife, it is because we have not realised what a temple should be. It should be a house of prayer. In fact, prayer becomes a new experience when Christ is in his temple.—Rev. E. W. Moore.

A PRESENT DUTY.

If we are devoted to the Lord Jesus, we must do as the people of Israel did when Joash was brought forth—we must seek out the Athaliahs and put them to death (2 Kings xi.). Moreover, we shall have to demolish the house of Baal, and break in pieces the altars and images. Note that the servants of the Lord did not say, "This is a beautiful cross," "This is a fine candlestick," but they took them and "brake them in pieces thoroughly." Having put the king's son on the throne, and made a covenant with the Lord, "the people of the land rejoiced and the city was quiet" (v. 20). If we make Jesus king, and not only slay the usurping Athaliahs but rid our hearts of idols, we also shall have glory and joy.—Rev. R. Middleton.

"NOW THEN DO IT!"

Do you know what it is to be fully saved "out of the hands of the Philistines and out of the hand of all your enemies"? (2 Sam. iii. 17, 18). From your temper the love of money, from pride and everything that is unlike Jesus Christ? There are many Philistines, big and small, having seats in churches, and thought to be quite proper. The Lord wants to save you out of their hands, and He can only do it by the hand of David—that is, by Jesus, who is to have all the glory. When you make Him king, He will do it. You will be under your own shadow until you get under the shadow of Jesus Christ. You can only forget self by remembering Jesus. Self will cease to reign when Jesus is enthroned.—Rev. F. S. Webster.

"EXCEEDING."

The Apostle Paul writes not merely of the exceeding greatness of God's power to us-ward who believe (Eph. i. 19), but of the exceeding riches of God's grace (ii. 7), and of the Father being able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think (iii. 20). Again, he prays (verse 19) that we "may know the love of Christ, which passeth (exceedeth) knowledge." So there is exceeding grace —that explains how we can be God's people; there is exceeding love—that tells us how all these glories can be ours, for He chose to love us; and then there is exceeding power, the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe. That is the thing we want, and we get it in this order. Come near to the Lord, yield yourselves to Him, recognise what He wants you for, and then put yourselves where it flows.—Rev. Hubert Brooke.

ALPHA AND OMEGA.

What are the two characteristics of what is enclosed by Alpha and Omega? These: All-needed and all-sufficient. The Bible opens with a book of beginnings, and its last book is a book of endings; they enclose a revelation, all-needed and all-sufficient. We cannot do without a page of it, or it would not have been here. The practical thing is this: Do not put anything before Alpha, and do not put anything after Omega. I have a righteous indignation against prefaces to the Gospel of Christ, and an equally righteous indignation as to any supplement or appendix to that Gospel. Christ is the Alpha and Christ is the Omega, and I do not want to put anything before Him; and if I am to live the Christian life I dare not put anything after Him. All-needed and all-sufficient!—Rev. George Wilson.

POVERTY OF SPIRIT.

Our position is one of absolute poverty and dependence on God. It is He who keeps my body from fever and disease, and heals it when disease has invaded it; it is He who keeps my memory in power, and my brain from insanity; it is He who gives me power to partake of food. "In Him we live, and move, and have our being." I must be poor in spirit when I remember that if it were not for God I should drop down dead, or be gnawed with disease, or be castigated, or tormented by the enemy every day of my life, or be a lunatic. We are dependent creatures, we must be poor in spirit, and we must remember above everything the position that Jesus took up when He said, "Learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly in heart."—Rev. H. B. Macartney.

CONDITIONS OF BLESSING.

The first thing the Spirit of God does when He comes to cleanse us is to reveal to us how terribly we need to be cleansed. This revealing work is awful, and utterly ruins self-complacency; indeed, it is almost fitted to reduce us to despair, as it shows us sins and shortcomings innumerable. As "the refiner's fire," the Spirit not only reveals impurity, but takes it away; farther, like "fullers' soap," it removes the stain. Being thus brought back from our backsliding, we shall not have to sing of the "peaceful hours we once enjoyed," but shall be ready for service, and able to enter into all the privileges and power of the priesthood which is ours as the people of the Lord. Many want the blessing of Divine fulness without first undergoing the emptying and cleansing; but this cannot be. Let us ask God for such a sense of our unworthiness that the grace of broken-hearted contrition may be poured out upon us. The Lord bring us low, that He may in due time lift us up and make us meet for his use.—Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor.

Mr. Moody as Preacher.

IN the August issue of The Homiletic Review Professor Cleaver Wilkinson, of the University of Chicago, has a deeply interesting article on "Dwight L. Moody as Preacher." At the outset he notices a newspaper inquiry as to whether Mr. Moody is not a preacher of yesterday rather than to-day. He writes:—

"Where the doubt was first raised it seemed to be resolved in a sense unfavourable to Mr. Moody's continuing hold on public attention. But is it true that this great preacher, at sixty years of age and more, has already done his work and declined from the meridian of his power? An incident in my own recent personal experience settled that point for me, and settled it in a sense decisively opposed to those conclusions of the newspaper Press to which allusion has been made.

"Mr. Moody is, I fully believe, still among us in a degree of ability to affect the public mind no whit diminished from what it was in the prime vigour of his manhood. Is there any other preacher living, on either side of the Atlantic, who could, by the mere announcement that at a given mid-day hour of a given business day he was to speak on a given religious subject, call out a multitude of people numerous enough to fill—to overfill and overflow—the most spacious auditorium in the city of Chicago? But that not long ago happened under my own observation in the case of Mr. Moody.

"Of course, it was not mere curiosity to see and hear for once a celebrated man that drew those throngs of eager people together. Mr. Moody had been for many years a familiar figure in Chicago. Beyond doubt, the great majority of his immense congregation had seen and heard Mr. Moody before. It was because they had seen and heard him before that they wished now to see him and hear him again—this, far rather than because they were intent on gratifying an idle curiosity.

"A public speaker of whom this can be said has assuredly not yet lost his command of the popular ear, has not yet lost his power over the popular heart. It is in the most real sense a topic of living interest to study and to try to understand the phenomenon presented to us in the character and career of this noble herald of the Gospel. In the case of Mr. Moody the keeping is perfect between the man as he appears in his printed books and the man as he appears in the pulpit. In whichever of these two aspects he presents himself to your notice, an ample, a sturdy, an unaffected, a sincere, an earnest, an aggressive, a quite indomitable, even a somewhat domineering, personality confronts you. Impression of personality is by no means wholly due to personal appearance, though in this matter personal appearance counts for much...

"You read or you listen, and you unconsciously say to yourself, 'Here is a man that practises no arts. He only speaks right on.' You are at once and completely thrown off guard if you had come to his audience, whether in the book or on the platform, bringing with you any disposition to subject him to criticism and to judge him by rules. He does not challenge admiration; and you are not drawn aside from his purpose to consider whether or not he be worthy of admiration. He has grappled you unawares. I set it down, therefore, as the most characteristic and the most salient trait of Mr. Moody's preaching, and the main merely natural secret of his power, that he puts no barrier of charm between himself and his audience."

Professor Wilkinson enlarges upon Mr. Moody's singleness of purpose and his intimate knowledge of the Bible; also finds in his preaching the fruit of "first hand, face to face, heart to heart acquaintance with religious human nature," such as is gained in the inquiry-room, and cannot but be of enormous advantage for pulpit or platform influence.

"The Rescue of the Waif" means "Dr. Barnardo's work." Quite naturally many Christians want to know a little of this large undertaking, and at length a compendious statement from the sympathetic pen of the founder and director has been issued. In the course of a booklet of twenty-four pages, beautifully printed and illustrated, Dr. Barnardo gives deeply interesting notes of his life-work; and a perusal of the sketch cannot but impress philanthropists and others with the benevolent purpose and practical wisdom of the work, with its many branches and far-reaching operations. OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, August 21.

"He is able to keep my deposit....The good deposit, keep."—2 Tim. i. 12-14 (R.V. marg.).

THERE is a double deposit here, and the comparison comes out clear and marked in the Greek. When we give our most precious treasure into the custodianship of Jesus, He turns to honour us by entrusting his own treasure to our care. Oh, that we might be as eager to keep that which He entrusts to us as He is that which we entrust to Him, so that He might be able to say of us, "I know them in whom I have trusted, and am persuaded that they will never fail to do, at whatsoever cost to themselves, whatever needs to be done for my honour and glory."

Our deposit with Christ.—What is the true policy of life? How can I best spend these few years to the best advantage? What is there beyond, and beyond? Such questions come to all earnest souls, and greatly trouble them, till they entrust the keeping of their souls and the direction of their lives into the hands of the faithful Saviour. At first there is something of a venture—we trust Him; next, there is the knowledge which comes from experience—we know Him; lastly, there is strong confidence—we are persuaded that He is able to keep.

Christ's deposit with us.—And what is this? 1 Tim. vi. 20, 14, iv. 16, suggests the answer. To every believer Jesus hands the custody of his honour, his Gospel, his Father's glory, his holy day, of the ordinances which he bequeathed to the Church. As Ezra charged the priests to bear safely through the desert march the sacred vessels, so our Captain charges us, and throughout the whole Bible rings the injunction: "Be ye clean, ye that bear the vessels of the Lord."

MONDAY, August 22.

"Meet for the Master's use."—2 Tim. ii. 21.

This I would be, O Lord, clay though I am. Be Thou my potter. Make of me what Thou canst and by what process Thou wilt, only let me be what Thou canst use.

Art thou able to drink the cup that I drink of, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with?

By thy grace I am able. Let me die with Thee, lie in the grave of obscurity and neglect, be counted as the off-scouring of all things, be broken on the edge of thy wheel, pass through the fire of thy hottest kiln, only let me be one whom Thou choosest and usest, constantly in thy hand; dipped down often into the brimming well, and back to thy dear lips, or to the lips of whom Thou lovest.

The spirit is willing, my child, but the flesh is weak.

I know it, Lord. But is not thy grace sufficient? Is not thy strength perfected in weakness? Perfect that which concerneth me. Only make me a vessel that Thou canst use.

He that would be great, let him be as he that doth serve.

I understand thee, Master. Thou would'st winnow my heart, and rid me of all that is proud and selfish. It is true that in the time past I have sought great things for myself: but that is gone now: I am but a weaned babe: my only desire is for Thee, for Thy glory, for the magnifying of thy name: my one cry to be often, always, in thy hand—one whom Thou usest, though the pattern be plain and the office lowly.

TUESDAY, August 23.

"All Scripture is given by inspiration of God." 2 Tim. iii. 16.

Literally the words stand, "All Scripture God-breathed and profitable." It is a remarkable expression, reminding of the early record, "God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and he became a living soul." The breath of God has entered these holy words, and they live. Scripture is God-breathed.

This makes it fragrant.—I write these words beneath the leafy shadow of an oak tree, on a ridge of hill commanding the Weald of Kent. The summer breeze is hurrying past. Since it left the southern sea it has passed over miles of fragrant country, imbibing the sweet scents of flower gardens, of fields of sweet peas, orchards, and hop gardens; and as it breathes around me it is laden with perfume. Ah! fragrant breeze, thou remindst me of those holy thoughts which are wafted to me from the orchards of Paradise, whensoever I open the sacred Word!

This makes it refreshing.—On this hot summer day the heat would be overpowering but for this delightful breeze, which fans the cheek and cools the atmosphere. The current is always changing, hence the refreshment. And the Word of God is always fresh and interesting because the Spirit of God is perpetually passing into and through it, bringing His own life to us, and through us to the world.

This makes it beautiful.—The effect of the wind, in the music of the leaves above, the swaying of the grasses at my feet, the rustling of yonder golden corn across the beaten footpath, in the sound of going through the copse, adds an element of incomparable delight. So it is only as the Divine Spirit breathes through Apostles, Prophets, that they become resonant with heavenly music.

WEDNESDAY, August 24.

"The Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing."—2 Tim. iv. 1.

Professor Rendel Harris reminds us that an early piece of Christian literature, called the Second Epistle of Clement, opens with these words: "Brethren, we ought to think of Jesus Christ as God, as the Judge of quick and dead. And we ought not to think meanly of our salvation; for when we think meanly of Him, meanly also do we expect to receive." In the view of this holy soul there was a very deep and necessary connection between creed and character; between what we believe about Christ, and what we receive from Him.

Large thoughts of Christ are necessary to holiness.—Unless we think of Christ as the Ideal Man, in whom there was no flaw or stain, how can we make Him the model of our daily life? Unless we think of Him as the Son of God, able to subdue all things to Himself, how can we hope that we shall become like Him?

Large thoughts of Christ are necessary to prayer.—He that cometh to God must believe what He is, and that is a Rewarder. Bethink thee well, before thou openest thy lips in the first entreaty, who He is whom thou addressest, and forthwith great and far-reaching petitions will naturally form themselves within thy heart.

Large thoughts of Christ are necessary for Christian work.—The belief that the Father has given to the Son the kingdom over all the world is absolutely necessary before there can be any enthusiastic effort on our part to make Jesus King, and secure for Him actually the kingdom, the power, and the glory.

THURSDAY, August 25.

"According to the faith of God's elect, and knowledge of the truth which is according to godliness."—Tit. i. 1 (R.V.)

These seem to have been the two guiding stars of the Apostle's life—faith and knowledge. Some are afraid of the conjunction. The men of faith are afraid of science, and the men of science often despise faith. But they are not antagonistic.

Faith.—The faith that inspires all elect souls is one and the same. In some there may be more, in others less, but its attitude towards God and its phases of experience, trial, and triumph, are the same in all who believe. In addition to this, the general facts and truths on which our faith lays hold, and from which it extracts its nourishment, are the same: and it is a comfort to know that these have been passed on from age to age from the earliest days, and that we are called to believe in them, and hold them fast.

Knowledge of the Truth.—We need not fear or shun knowledge, which is simply the exploring and discovery of the ways and thoughts of God. "Let knowledge grow from more to more." Only let her always concern herself with the great facts and methods of God's universe, rather than with human speculation and fancy. There is a distinction between knowledge and wisdom. The one may be only intellectual, the other is always moral. Those who pretend to know are not always wise; but the wise always know. "Wisdom is the principal thing."

Godliness.—True knowledge will make you godly, reverent, devout, filling you with the Spirit of God within, and with likeness to God without. It is only as you are godly, that you will really be wise and know things that are hidden from the wise and prudent. True knowledge leads to godliness, and godliness back to knowledge.

FRIDAY, August 26.

"Who gave Himself for us, that He might redeem us from all iniquity."—Tit. ii. 14.

After all that we have professed and learnt, how hard it is to believe that God intends just what he says. When the Holy Spirit says all, He clearly means all. And we are, therefore, taught that the death of Jesus was intended, not for our forgiveness and justification merely, but for our sanctification, and our deliverance from the power of all our besetting sins. The text does not promise freedom from temptation, but from all yielding to habits, dispositions, and tempers of soul which have ruthlessly tyrannised over us as Egypt over Israel.

Jesus died for thee, O child of God, that having been set free from the bondage of all iniquity thou mightest live soberly as regards the use of the world, righteously towards thy fellows, and godly towards the Almighty, and "looking for that blessed hope." The grace of God has appeared, his glory will appear. There has been an Epiphany of the one, there shall be as certainly an Epiphany of the other. Many awaited the first, more shall await the second. The one was in humiliation, the other shall be in glory; the one was as a babe, the other shall be in the glory of the Divine man. But till then we are called to wait with garments unspotted from the world, and hearts delivered from the love and power of human sin.

Let us teach the world that God has something tangible and practicable to give—not for the next life only, but for this.

SATURDAY, August 27.

"The kindness and love of God our Saviour toward man appeared."—Titus iii. 4.

The emphasis must surely rest on appeared. Kindness and love towards man were always in the heart of God, but they were not clearly revealed. They might have been perceived in the order of nature and human life, but there are stormy winds as well as zephyrs in the one, and in the other deaths as well as births, knells of hope as well as marriage peals. But in Jesus the true heart of God towards man was manifested. It is thus in human life.

At first God blessed us anonymously.—In Cowper's memoirs we read how Theodora, his cousin, pursued him throughout his sad life with her gifts; but they always came without indication of their source. As the poet unwrapped his new-come treasure, he would say, "Dear Anonymous has come again, God bless him." So, through years of thoughtless childhood, and afterwards in opening youth, we were the recipients of myriads of gifts, contrived with the most exquisite skill to give us pleasure, but we did not trace them to their source. We kissed the hands of the postmen and messengers that brought them to our doors, but we forgot Him.

Since then his grace and loving-kindness have appeared.—We have had eyes to see, and hearts to understand. The Anonymous Benefactor is now recognised as our Father and Friend. We no longer praise our earthly loves for our cornfields and vineyards, but our Heavenly Spouse (Hosea. ii.) In the breaking of the bread we have recognised the Son of God, and we know now who it was that walked with us along the path of life, and why our hearts burned.

A Clever Little Rascal.

A REMINISCENCE BY DR. BARNARDO.

I HAD had a bad half-hour, although it was on a lovely but broiling hot Sunday in July. Surrounded by a little band of earnest colleagues, I had been holding open-air services, as was my manner on Sundays, at the corners of many of the mean streets and dingy lanes of Limehouse Fields. But the opposition was out in force! A hooting, yelling mob was round us, and it was with difficulty we preserved our cohesion and avoided absolute conflict. When we were struck we never struck back. The missiles aimed at us more often missed their aim than not; but whether they hit or missed they were just as disastrous in diverting attention.

On this Sunday things had gone particularly badly. For at the corner of Eastfield-street, where we made our first stop and had begun our opening hymn, cold water was very literally thrown upon the proceedings by an elderly lady, as she would call herself, who dexterously emptied a large can upon us from the window of a tenement against which we had sought shelter. The hilarious crowd hailed the incident with shrieks of laughter. It was in their eyes a good practical joke, which made these religious people look supremely ridiculous! I have no doubt we were miserable objects. We moved on, and shook ourselves like water-dogs, while in neighbourly fashion we rubbed each other down with pocket handkerchiefs. This, however, could never restore the lost shine to the Sunday hat, or the ruined brightness to the ribbons of the girls from our Sunday-school, who had bravely kept us company to help us sing the hymns. But we were young and ardent, and we sang aloud—

Let us never mind the scoffs and the frowns of the world,
For we all have a cross to bear.

And we meant it all, right down in our hearts, and we felt we were at that very moment carrying a very heavy cross. At this juncture a clever little rascal in the crowd felt that the time had arrived to distinguish himself. A good deal of the water had fallen on the dusty pavement and gutter. This he had industriously scooped up with his hands, kneading into it as much of the summer dust and street sweepings as could be conveniently gathered, while we, in ignorance of what was in store for us, sang our ditty.

By-and-by, with closed eyes and heads reverently bared, we besought our Father's blessing upon the gathering crowd. But our closed eyes gave the young marksman the opportunity he wanted. He had now gathered of well-kneaded mud and street refuse, each somewhat about the size of a small egg, and he thereupon proceeded, with wonderfully accurate aim, to mark us down with these projectiles. He generally contrived to throw it into a mouth, if it happened to be open, or failing that, just between the two eyes! Of course we did not see each other's danger or our own, for we kept our eyes devoutly closed, and so the marksman was able to take us one after the other. Me he took nearly last of all. With my hat in my hands I had just opened my mouth in prayer, when, lo and behold! it was neatly and tightly plugged, so forcibly distended with the mass of stuff that had been skilfully thrown, that I could neither shut my mouth nor eject the missile! Of course I instantly opened my eyes, and found everyone around me convulsed with laughter! The boy was gone. Someone fetched me a glass of water, but it was only after not a little ineffectual rinsing that I at length got my mouth quite clear of the stuff and could articulate distinctly again. My first words were, "Where is Charlie Jackson?" to which the cool rejoinder was, "He has gone home." But nobody could tell me where Charlie Jackson lived. One big fellow said, "I will bring him round to-night, sir." And I could only hope that he would not change his mind. I confess that if I had had Charlie Jackson at that moment in a quiet corner I felt I could have given him a bit of my mind, which might or might not have been accompanied by more persuasive arguments.

Suffice it to say that I forthwith hurried home, as did also the others. We could not go on, for every face of those who had accompanied me bore some mark of Charlie Jackson's successful bombardment.

Oh, how delicious a cup of tea was that evening

How tired we all were, and how gloomily we asked each other: Was there any use in holding these open-air meetings? But I had not time for discouragement. In an hour I had to meet my great class of rough lads, many of them costermongers, at Hope-place, World's End, Stepney. I duly met my class. Nothing special occurred during the proceedings except that my heart was warmed and comforted by the enthusiasm and earnestness of my hearers. Some of the older lads told me how sorry they were that they could not have been by my side to help me in the afternoon. The class was dismissed, when I noticed lingering behind a lad somewhat smaller than the rest and rather more raggedly dressed. In a sheep-faced kind of way he sidled up to where I stood. He was a stranger to me, and evidently quite a new-comer, but before I could ask him a question he blurted out, "I wouldn't 'a done it, sir, if I'd a know'd it was you." "What have you done?" I asked. "Well, sir, it were a fine lark; but I'm glad you ain't hurt." It dawned upon me that perhaps this was the young hero of the afternoon's discomfiture. "What!" I said, sternly, "are you Charlie Jackson?" "Lor,' sir!" and he started back,

"HOW DID YER KNOW IT WAS ME?"

This was the beginning of a more intimate acquaintance. It was continued for many months, until at length I got to know all the circumstances or Charlie's life. These were, spite of his merriment and mischief, sad enough. However, it all ended in this, that my old assailant finally became an inmate of the Home, then in its infancy, at Stepney Causeway. Time fails me to tell all his history there, which, though uneventful in outward incident, was full of fruitful years. Suffice it to say that Charlie, when about sixteen years of age, became a very true-hearted and earnest follower of Christ. He became possessed, too, of a consuming zeal for the conversion of others. His enthusiasm was simply contagious; it could not be resisted. He became a leading evangelist among his fellows. I think I had at one time in the Home as many as fifty boys, every one of whom, I venture to say, was a truly converted lad, who knew the power of the regenerating Spirit, and all of whom had been brought to a knowledge of Christ through the influence of Charlie Jackson's life and work among them!

I ultimately placed Charlie out as an errand boy. He did his work faithfully and well, but longed more and more for a higher task. Eventually he was taken up by a lady who supported two City missionaries in the East End. Charlie was congenially employed at last. His work lay about the Docks, and his task was to lay hold of sailor-lads and other young fellows who were seeking work, to bring them to a coffee-house that was open there, where Christian influences and a sympathetic home life was offered to the most necessitous and tempted. Here Charlie came across a most intelligent German Christian, a man who had been a missionary among his fellows for years—a Moravian, I think—who exhibited a splendid spirit of devotion. The two became bosom friends. The influence upon Charlie of his new friend was very marked. He grew daily in the Christian life. I do not think I have ever been asked such interesting, intelligent, discerning questions about the truths of Holy Scripture by anyone as by Charlie. When we met he always had some fresh Scriptural problem or inquiry, and always had some keen, intelligent reason to give for what had led up to the inquiry. He verily "hungered and thirsted" for a knowledge of the truth. It was his constant desire to go abroad as a missionary.

How to accomplish this end I knew not, for at that time there was much less facility than at present for placing out comparatively uneducated men in the mission-field. Now, through the splendid work of Dr. Grattan Guinness, men from even the humblest ranks of life who have zeal and devotion can obtain an admirable and efficient training, and are sympathetically helped to enter the field of Christian missions, if found worthy. But at last I succeeded in getting Charlie a situation as personal servant to a Christian officer, who took him to India. That officer was not on ordinary regimental duty, and lived almost wholly in the Madras Presidency. There he, being himself a very sincere and large-spirited man, lost no opportunity of bringing the Gospel before all whom he met, whether they were natives or English people of his own rank in life.

Under such a master and such auspices Charlie Jackson's usefulness increased more and more. His life really was that of to the humbler class, such missionaries as there are now many of, but who were then few and far between. I have some of the young fellow's letters by me to this day, and no one who reads them could doubt but that the Spirit of the Master Himself breathed through their pages. I am sorry to say, however, that poor Charlie Jackson's usefulness was cut short after about five years' residence in India through typhoid fever. I was not surprised to find that his employer mourned for him as for a brother in Christ and a fellow labourer. Never, said he, had he met a more consistent, upright, unswerving Christian. In fact, he regarded him as almost a perfect character, from the point of view of one wholly given up to his Lord's service.

That pellet of mud had an aim and effected a result which neither my assailant nor myself contemplated on that Sunday afternoon of my humiliation and disappointment! How many of my boys and girls, from that eventful day to this, have become missionaries, the companions of missionaries, or without any such official position have become devoted, self-sacrificing servants of Christ, only the Great Day will declare.

Resurrection.

(1 Thess. iv. 13-18.)

From the throne of the Father, uprising in might,
He shall come!
To gather his saints in the glory and light,
He shall come!
With the trumpet of God and the archangel's voice,
To waken his loved ones and bid them rejoice,
He shall come!
From the caverns and waves of the fathomless deep,
They shall rise!
From the graves of the earth, where they peacefully sleep,
They shall rise!
And the living be changed with a glorious surprise,
As in numberless numbers they mount through the skies.
They shall rise!
And for ever with God and with Christ shall they live,
They shall live!
In unspeakable glory, which God shall then give,
They shall live!
And increasingly more of his love shall they know,
As the ages pass on in their rapturous flow,
They shall live!
Take comfort, bereaved ones, for sure is the word,
"I will come!"
And the Faithful and True One, your glorified Lord,
He will come!
And not one shall be lost, who has clung to his name,
In this day of rejection, and suffering, and shame,
He will come!

Students' Summer Conference.

AN ARRAY OF FACTS.

[From Our Special Representative.]

THE addresses by Mr. J. R. Mott were a leading feature of the late Students' Conference at Ripon. His varied experiences of work for students in different parts of the world, and his wonderful power of marshalling facts and figures, constitute him an able and impressive exponent and advocate of the movement. On the Friday morning of the Conference Mr. Mott surveyed the work of the and a marvellous story of progress it was. We are here (he said) to speak of recent history. Just four years ago I attended the conference of British students at Keswick. In contrasting that time with the present, let me give you ten great facts as to progress made within the last four years. First of all, take the number of Christian associations or unions among students, simply counting those within the Federation. Up to the present summer these have increased from 580 to 880, an increase of 300. That is certainly a fact of large meaning, as showing what God has wrought. A second fact is this: the number of university men giving their time as secretaries to develop the student movement throughout the world has increased in these four years from twenty-nine to sixty-six. Pause on that fact a moment. Sixty-six specialists, who are making a comparative and extended study of the problems of organised Christian work among students—does it not mean that we are going to have the best quality of brain put into this work; the application of the scientific method to this most inviting field, with such large possibilities of promise? There are some who have questioned the need of travelling secretaries. Why, nineteen-twentieths of the Christian Unions formed within the last four years are the result of the work of travelling secretaries. Every national movement in existence is due to travelling secretaries; who have also made some of the best contributions to the solving of student problems, because of the hours they have spent upon them.

Note a third point. Four years ago there were not more than forty pamphlets bearing upon this work; now there are a hundred and something over, some of them considerable works. At the former period there were five periodicals published in the interests of the work; now there are fourteen. This fact proves, among other things, that the work has assumed such large development that it has experiences to be recorded and crystallised in print. Take a fourth fact of great significance. When we met at Keswick four years ago there were eight annual student conferences, attended by 2500 students. Within the past year there have been at least thirty conferences, attended by 5500 students. Think what this convention is meaning to you now, and you will see the importance of the fact of so many more men and women being trained as volunteer leaders in this great work. For in the last analysis the strength of the student movement lies not in the paid officials, however necessary, but in the volunteer leadership and in the training of those who meet in conference to take up the burden of responsibility, in working out the principles and methods advanced.

A fifth fact. The Christward tendency among students is taking the world as a whole. Last year in the United States and Canada alone no less than 3000 students were led by the Young Men's Christian Associations to become disciples of Jesus Christ. We learn that in Germany, the most difficult students' field in Europe, there were far more students reached for Christ last year than in any year of their history. In India, where Henry Martyn said he would sooner expect to see a dead body raised than to see a Brahmin become a real Christian, there are now scores of Brahmins who are real Christians. That means more than many thousands in Germany. So we find that from these student centres in the North and the South, the East and the West, they are coming to sit down in the kingdom of God. Is not that a fact that should drive out all pessimism and strengthen our faith in God as to this work?

Here is a sixth fact. There has been no period to be compared with the past four years in the deepening of the spiritual life of all these movements and of the world movement as a whole. We see this in attending a conference like your own; in observing the literature which has appeared recently in different parts of the world. For this movement speaks now through eight different languages; whereas four years ago it spoke only through two. We notice it in conversations with officials; in a greater concern than ever about the hidden springs and fountains of the work.

A seventh fact pertains to the Bible study developed. Four years ago there were 8000 students in voluntary Bible classes; now we have at least 15,000 students in these classes in the World's Federation alone. And the statistics of the present year are much better authenticated than those about the 8000. I have noticed an improvement in the quality of the Bible work as well as in the numbers. This is due to the introduction of more uniform courses of study, and to better leadership as the result of these summer conferences. This increased Bible study means the enlarged opening of the channel through which God has always been pleased to communicate his light and power to men.

An eighth fact. The student missionary uprising has continued

TO ADVANCE BY LEAPS AND BOUNDS,

notably within the past four years. We have had Liverpool—the greatest student Convention ever held in Europe. We have had Cleveland—the largest student missionary gathering ever held, with its 2300 students, professors, missionaries, and missionary secretaries. The educational department of our two movements has been called into being. There were less than thirty classes for missionary study four years ago; last year we had three hundred classes. The number of such students has increased from under 200 to 2000. During last year the student volunteer movement extended to Germany, to the French-speaking student world of Europe, to Scandinavia, to Australasia, to India, and to China. It is within the past four years that the movement has adopted its great watchword, "The evangelisation of the world in this generation," and this watchword has taken hold of the convictions of an ever-increasing number of Church leaders at home and abroad. More students have sailed within the last four years than during the preceding eight years. That is true of the American movement also.

A ninth great fact is found in the extension of this movement to the mission lands within the past four years. At least sixty-five missions have been formed at the student centres in the Orient. Four national student movements have been organised in mission lands, and there are to-day ten university men from Britain and America giving their whole time to developing these movements in India, Ceylon, China, and Japan. We ought to praise God that we are living at a time when He is making history. Surely there is little ground left for scepticism. The most spiritual of the Christian students in the Orient are joining hands with us in the Occident for the evangelisation of their own people.

Now we come to the tenth and possibly the greatest single fact of these four years, the formation of the WORLD'S STUDENTS' CHRISTIAN FEDERATION.

Three years ago this present month—my heart burns as I think of it—the leaders of the five student movements then in existence came together at an old castle in Sweden, placed at our disposal by the Swedish Government. We thought if it was a good thing for students in any one university to unite in order the better to promote the work of Christ in that university—if it was a good thing for the unions of one country to unite, would it not be a good thing for these national unions to unite with a world-wide organisation? We spent three days in earnest discussion of the question, and it culminated in the formation of this World's Students' Christian Federation. There were then the British, the North American, the German, the Scandinavian, and one of scattered associations in mission lands, making five in all. Since then the Federation has been joined by the student movements in India and Ceylon (6), Australasia (7), South Africa (8), China (9), Japan (10). It is difficult to bring this recital right up to date, for the other day, when we were at Eisenach, the committee of the Federation admitted the eleventh student group—the united movements in Holland, France, Switzerland, and the Netherlands. All these are connected with the Reformed Church in Europe. It was a blessed sight to see the fellowship among them; the Spirit of God taught them to sink their little differences so as to unite and make one strong union, rather than several weak ones. Another thing that happened at Eisenach was the decision to have the college Young Men's Christian Associations of South America affiliated with the North American movement, thus bringing in 12,000 young men at one stroke.

The Federation now numbers not less than one thousand student centres, embracing at least 55,000 students and professors who are members. It is a marvellous brotherhood. If anybody had said ten years ago that we should live to see the day when there would be a number of student movements all over the world, of all nations and races, comprising more than 50,000 members, none would have believed it within the range of possibility. To-day it is an accomplished fact.

THE PURPOSE OF THE FEDERATION

is to lead the whole student world to become disciples of Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour, to build them up in Christ, and send them out into the world to work for Him. National, racial, denominational, and theological differences are sunk, so as to unite on this simple comprehensive platform. There has not been a ripple of disagreement among all the members of this great brotherhood. Every decision of the Federation has been reached by unanimous vote. And remember that this committee is composed of persons of strong convictions, and of widely differing views as to method. I know of nothing like it; it is an evidence of the presence of the Spirit of God.

The ambition of the Federation is not to govern, but to serve. It works largely through the different national movements. It does not crush any national movement into any one mould. What has been accomplished? It has made the different movements acquainted with each other, and also with the extent of the needs of the student world. It has made it possible to influence certain important universities and institutions that our national movements could not reach. It has established a practical means of communication between different countries, placing the leaders in touch with one another, so that the movements act and re-act on each other. It has broken down national barriers and brought the different peoples into mutual sympathy and co-operation; not simply the Anglo-Saxon races, but the Teutonic and Latin peoples, and those of Eastern lands. It is emphatically a world's federation.

It has also broadened the scope and improved the methods of development. The Spirit of God works in divers ways and through divers channels, and in this Federation one nation can profit by what has been worked out in the experience of another. Then it enables the strong to help the weak; while in turn the weak help the strong by affording scope for the exercise of their strength. Besides it has that all his followers may be one. We are all animated by the one Spirit and working for one great object. All this is giving to the world a great demonstration of the Divinity of our Lord. Lastly, it is placing before the student world, and before the Church, one grand objective—nothing less than the evangelisation of the world in our generation, and the ultimate complete establishment of the Messiah's reign.

Let us care for one another. Let us not be self-centred. Let us not cease to pray for the 120,000 students of Papal Europe, and in these seven countries—Belgium, France, Portugal, Spain, Austria, Hungary, Italy. Let us pray for that vast student field in connection with the Greek Church. Let us not forget the great Mohammedan university at Cairo, with its thousands of students. Let us remember the 100,000 students in the universities and high-class preparatory schools of India and Ceylon; and the 40,000 students in the Government colleges of Japan. Let us bear in mind, too, the awful needs of South America; and of China, where every year there go up to the first degree examinations 500,000 men, and to those of the second degree in provincial capitals 150,000 men. We look down the student generation and we see by faith the helpful ministry and influence of this Federation extended to every country in the world. We see the great tides of worldliness, materialism, rationalism turned back, the demons of impurity, intemperance, and agnosticism driven out. We see a generation of Christian scholars raised up, and as Christian professors becoming mighty pillars in the temple of the Christian faith. We see the reign of Christ established in our universities, and rivers of righteousness running down through the world. We see a devoted and consecrated ministry going out to lead the forces of the Church of Christ. We see Christian students going out as laymen to carry out the principles and the spirit of Christ into every relationship of human life and society. We see a great host of student missionaries going out from the student centres in the Occident and the Orient in the united and triumphant effort to make Jesus King. Inspired by this vision and by the vision of our ascended Lord, with whom rests all power in heaven and on earth, let us go forth on our knees.

At the close of this splendid survey of recent progress some interesting impressions were given by British delegates to the recent in connection with the World's Federation. The speakers were Messrs. Moule, Spencer, and Fraser. The leading points on which they dwelt were the manifestations of unity seen in the proceedings of the Conference, and the wonderful possibilities for the future that lie within such a movement. Another strong impression received was that of the fidelity of solitary workers who are toiling patiently and untiringly as the only Christian in their great centres. Mention was made of one delegate from Spain, who stands alone among his fellow students as a witness for Christ, but who has spoken to a thousand men about the claims of the Saviour. For these and for others similarly situated, as well as for the great unoccupied student fields alluded to by Mr. Mott, earnest intercessory prayer was made before the deeply impressive gathering broke up.

THE HOME MOVEMENTS, of course, received their due meed of attention. The latest reports of the B.C.C.U. and of the S.V.M.U. were read to interested auditors at successive meetings in the large tent. It is not possible here to go into details of the year's work of these two organisations now amalgamated. In the report of the B.C.C.U. special reference is made to the work in the theological colleges of Great Britain, and the successful conference held in Birmingham last April. The supreme claims of London colleges were dwelt upon, and the fact was noted that during the year a Christian Union has been formed in connection with the art schools of the metropolis. Mr. Oldham has been appointed as travelling secretary for London for the coming year, in co-operation with the Medical Prayer Union, which has been for some time at work. The meetings for students held by Prof. George Adam Smith in Edinburgh, and by Mr. Mott in Oxford and Cambridge, were thankfully recorded, as well as other notable events of the year. We may give here the names of the newly appointed secretaries as stated in the report:—

General Secretary (in conjunction with the S.V.M.U.) (1) Mr. Tissington Tatlow, of Trinity College, Dublin; (2) Travelling Secretaries (for Secular Colleges), Mr. S. F. Hawkes, of Wadham College, Oxford; and (3) Miss A. B. Glass, of Newnham College, Cambridge (re-appointed); (4 and 5) (for Theological Colleges), Mr. W. H. T. Gairdner, of Trinity College, Oxford, and another not yet appointed; (6) London Secretary (in conjunction with the Medical Prayer Union), Mr. H. W. Oldham, of Central Technical College, London.

It is in contemplation to initiate suitable work, as bearing on the interests and objects of the student movement, in our large public schools. This will be a most important step if it can be adequately accomplished.

The report of the S.V.M.U. stated that the chief features of the year's work had been the approach to the Churches for the enforcement of the Volunteer watchword and the development of the educational scheme. Memorials sent to different Church bodies were well received, and it is believed that good results will follow. Since the conference at Curbar ninety men and thirty-six women students have signed the voluntary declaration promising to go to the foreign field if God should make the way plain. The report remarked on the fact that some have slipped away from their declared purpose to become foreign missionaries, either through having signed the declaration too hastily, or through having grown cold from lack of missionary study. The text-book for the last year was on Africa, and, as already noted, that for the current year is on China. There was special reference to the tour made last autumn by Miss Mary Cooke among South African colleges en route to her field of service in India. Many tokens have come to light of the fruitfulness and blessing of these visits.

STUDENTS AS GIVERS.

The work of the B.C.C.U. for the next year was considered in a short session that immediately followed. Mr. H. C. Duncan, the outgoing general secretary, made a short, impressive statement as to the claims of the two Unions and the necessity of vigorously sustaining the movement. There was a deficit of some £50 to wipe off from the past year's accounts of the B.C.C.U., besides the amount needed for the current year's operations, which was estimated at £750. The S.V.M.U., being a missionary Union, naturally looks for more support from the outside public, but with so many other calls it is in danger of being overlooked. Its pecuniary needs for the next year will be £800, and these needs are bound to grow. These and other facts having been pressed home on the assembled students, promise papers were distributed among them, and they were asked in a brief season of quiet meditation and prayer to decide on what they could give to these funds. The papers were in due course collected, and after some of the amounts promised had been read out (no donors' names being divulged) it was seen that a considerable sum would be realised, and the meeting was closed by the singing of the Doxology. It was afterwards stated that the students had between them contributed some £350—a very considerable amount in view of the fact that many of the students are poor in this world's goods. It was deeply instructive to note how in the Conference throughout the duty and privilege of giving freely of one's substance to God for his work was placed on the same high platform as that of personal consecration and holy living. At a meeting in the tent on Saturday morning, when the financial working of B.C.C.U. branches was deliberated on, this was especially evident; and no small holy inenuity was displayed by the leader of the meeting and the speakers as to how the giving of the necessary funds could be made to keep pace with the necessities of the work.

THE VOLUNTEER DECLARATION was the subject considered at a large and deeply interesting meeting on Friday evening, when addresses were given by Mr. Alvarez, of Sierra Leone, and Miss Gollock. It was faithfully pointed out by the speakers that the declaration of purpose to become a foreign missionary, "if God permit," should not be hastily or lightly made, but once signed after a review of all the circumstances it should not be lightly departed from. Miss Gollock related some very interesting cases of those who had been unable, in God's providence, to carry out their cherished purpose in their own persons, but who had seen it fulfilled in their descendants.

On Saturday forenoon some encouraging accounts were given by students of work undertaken by various methods in different parts of the country, so as to interest the Churches in the work of foreign missions. Mr. Newton, of Edinburgh, told of the summer caravan tours undertaken for this purpose by Scotch students. Mr. Roberts, of Bala College, described the endeavours made there to awaken missionary interest. Miss Glass rehearsed a ten days' tour she had made in the North of England among Christians in different towns with excellent results. Mr. Gillespie spoke of lantern and deputation work in and around Belfast; and Miss Wilson, from the United States, gave a lively account of similar efforts in Wisconsin.

STUDENT CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOURERS.

A sectional gathering, likely to have far-reaching effect, was held towards the close of the Conference, when those students who are members of Christian Endeavour societies assembled to compare notes and take counsel together with regard to the promotion of a strong missionary interest among Endeavourers throughout the United Kingdom.

It was disappointing to learn that the replies received to a letter of inquiry addressed to over a hundred Endeavour societies went to show that not more than one in ten of these makes regular definite prayer on behalf of the unevangelised millions of the heathen and Mohammedan world, and that no systematic missionary study is being pursued by any one of them. At the same time, most of the societies communicated with reported collections on behalf of foreign missionary work. On the other hand, encouraging accounts were given of Endeavour Societies represented in the meeting in which a deep spiritual interest in the world-wide spread of Christ's Kingdom has moved the members to daily prayer for missions, to painstaking study of missionary literature alongside of devout study of the Bible, and to self-denying giving for the spread of the Gospel in "the regions beyond." There was instanced the case of a society with twenty active members, chiefly mill-workers, which wholly supports an evangelist in China, and another society was mentioned which has had the privilege of providing nine volunteers for foreign missionary work. All present felt greatly stimulated to increased effort to make the Y.P.S.C.E. everywhere, what it is in so many places, pronouncedly and enthusiastically missionary.

IMPRESSIVE TESTIMONY MEETING.

Perhaps the most memorable meeting of the whole Conference was that held on the evening of Saturday, August 6. After a series of brief earnest missionary calls had been addressed to the students by some from among themselves who have already begun work—one among the Jews, one in West Africa, a third in China, and another (whose appeal came by letter) in India—the General Secretary spoke very simply but with great feeling of the danger of people going from such conferences disappointed because they had not undergone any exceptional stirring of the emotions, whereas what God desired and required was that the will, the life, should be absolutely yielded to Him in Christ Jesus, and that by faith. Then there followed for an hour and a quarter an unbroken stream of spontaneous testimony, given for the most part in a few brief sentences, as to definite blessing received by grateful hearts during the Conference. It was felt that the word with which the Lord met the students in their first meeting a week before, "Lo, I am with you," had never been more convincingly verified than it was just then. A minister was heard to remark at the close that it was the most profoundly solemn meeting he had ever attended.

The Love that Bound Christ to the Cross.

John xviii. 4.

Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

THE Cedron was never more than a mountain brook, and it is now dry. Its stony bed alone shows where it used to flow through the valley that separated Mount Zion from the Mount of Olives. The main road which led from the city gate, over the Mount of Olives to Bethany and Jericho, crossed it by an ancient bridge, from which, on this especial night, a fair scene must have presented itself.

Above the Passover moon was shining in full-orbed splendour, turning night into day. Beneath the little stream was brawling down the valley, catching the moonlight on its wavelets. On the one slope dark, thick woods, above which rose the ancient walls and gates of the city; on the other the swelling slopes of Olivet. Presently the Lord emerged out of the shadow, engaged in earnest converse with the Apostles; crossed the bridge, but, instead of pursuing the path as it wound upwards towards Bethany and Bethphage, they all turned into a large enclosure, well-known as the garden of the oil-press, and which we know best as Gethsemane. Somewhere, no doubt, within its inclosure stood the rock-hewn trough in which the rich juicy olives were trodden by naked feet. "When Jesus had spoken these words, He went forth with his disciples over the brook Cedron, where was a garden, into which He entered with his disciples."

The sequel was so fully narrated by the other Evangelists that there was no need for the writer of this narrative to tell of the awful anguish, the broken cries, the bloody sweat, the running to and fro to the disciples, the sleep of the chosen three, the strengthening angel. He confines himself almost entirely to the circumstances of the Lord's arrest.

Two hours only had passed since Judas left the supper-table; but they had given him all the time needed for the completion of his plans. Hastening to the authorities, he had told them that the favourable moment had arrived for his Master's arrest; that he knew the lonely spot to which He was wont to resort for meditation and prayer; and that he had need of an armed band to overpower all possible resistance on the part of himself or his followers. This they were able to supply from the guards and custodians of the Temple. They were going against One who was deserted and defenceless; yet the soldiers were armed with sticks and staves. They were about to arrest One who would make no attempt at flight or concealment, and the moon was full; yet, lest he should make his escape to some limestone grotto, or amid the deep shadows, they carried torches and lanterns.

The Lord had just awoke his disciples for the third and last time, when probably his ear detected the tread of hurrying feet, the muffled clank of swords, the stifled murmur of an advancing crowd; perhaps He saw also the glancing lights, as they advanced through the garden shrubs, and began to encircle the place where He had prayed. But beyond all outward signs, and by the inner intimation of the Holy Spirit, He knew all things that should come upon Him, and without waiting for his enemies to reach him, with calm and dignified composure He went forth to meet the rabble band, stepping out into the moonlight and saluting them with the inquiry, "Whom seek ye?"

There are some deep and memorable suggestions here as to the

VOLUNTARINESS OF CHRIST'S DEATH.

In order to his death having any value it must be free. If it could be shown that He had no choice than to die, because his own purpose was overmastered by the irresistible force of circumstances, his death could not have met the claims of a broken law, or inaugurated a new code of morals to his Church. But there are several points in this narrative which make it clear that He laid down his life of Himself, that none took it from Him, that He had power to lay it down, and power to take it again.

(1) When Jesus asked them the question, "Whom seek ye?" there were, no doubt, many in the band who knew him well enough, and that He was the object of their midnight raid; but not one of them had the courage to answer, "Thee." A paralysing awe had already commenced to cast its spell over their spirits. Those who knew Him shrank from identifying Him, and were content to answer generally, "Jesus of Nazareth." But when He answered, "I am He," what was it that so suddenly affected them? Did some stray beams of concealed glory burst forth from their confinement to indicate his majesty? Did they dread the putting forth of that power which had been so often exerted to save and bless? Or, was there a direct miracle of Divine power which secured their discomfiture? We cannot tell. But, whatever the cause, the crowd suddenly fell back in confusion, and were flung to the ground.

Here, for a moment, the would-be captors lay, as though pinioned to the dust by some unseen hand. The spell was soon withdrawn, and they were again on their feet, cursing themselves for their needless panic. But—and this is the point—the power that sent that rough hireling band reeling backwards to the ground could easily have held them there, or plunged them as Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, into living graves. "One flash came forth to tell of the sleeping lightning which He would not use"; and then, having revealed the might which could have delivered Him from their puny arms, He returned to his attitude of willing self-surrender. Who, then, shall say that our Saviour's death was not

HIS OWN ACT AND DEED?

(2) When that rabble crew were again on their feet, confronting Jesus, He asked them a second time, Whom seek ye? Again they replied, "Jesus of Nazareth." Jesus answered, "I have told you that I am He; if, therefore, ye seek Me, let these go their way." And, forthwith, He put forth such a power over his own as secured their freedom from arrest.

It is evident that it was no part of his foes' purpose beforehand to let them go; for, on their way back they arrested a young man, probably Mark himself, whom curiosity had drawn from his bed, and whom they took for one of his disciples. He escaped with great difficulty from their hands. It is hardly doubtful that if some special power had not been exerted over them, they would have treated the whole of the followers of Jesus as they sought to treat him. Is it not evident, then, that the power which secured the safety of his disciples could have secured that of the Master Himself; or that He might have passed away through the midst of them, as He did through the infuriated crowd which proposed to cast Him headlong over the precipice near Nazareth at the commencement of his ministry? Every arm might have been struck nerveless, every foot paralysed with lameness. Who, then, shall deny that Christ's death was his own act?

(3) But again, when Jesus had spoken thus there seemed some wavering among his captors, perhaps a hesitation as to who should first lay hand on Him. At this juncture, when the whole enterprise threatened to miscarry, Judas felt that he must, at all hazards, show how safe it was to touch the person of his Master; so, though the bold challenge of Jesus had made the preconcerted signal needless, he resolved still to give it, that the spell of that presence might be broken. The traitor, therefore, stepped up and kissed the Lord.

Encouraged by this sacrilegious act, his myrmidons now laid hands on Jesus, grasping his sacred person as they might have done Barabbas or some other member of his gang. They then proceeded to bind Him after the merciless Roman fashion. Peter could not bear to see this. He sprang forth from the covert of the shadow, drew his sword, and cut at the nearest assailant's head. But the blade, glancing off the helmet, cut off the ear.

It was an unwelcome interference with the behaviour of the meek and gentle Lord, whose hand was already bound. It could not be permitted. "Suffer ye thus far," He said to the rude soldier who was binding Him, and with his own finger touched the ear, stanched the flowing blood, and healed it. It has been remarked that this was the only act of healing wrought on one for whom it was not asked of Him, and who had no faith in his beneficent power. But, surely, the hand that could work that miracle could have broken from the bonds that held it as easily as Samson from the two new cords which burnt as flax in the flame. The power with which Jesus saved others

MIGHT HAVE SAVED HIMSELF.

Who, then, shall say that his death was not his own free act? Listen, moreover, to his own words. Then said Jesus unto Peter, "Put up thy sword into the sheath; the cup which my Father hath given Me, shall I not drink it?" "Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, and He shall presently give Me more than twelve legions of angels; but how then shall the Scripture be fulfilled that thus it must be?"

As, then, we view the death of the Cross we must ever remember the voluntariness of that supreme act, which is all the more conspicuous as the agony of the Garden reminds us how greatly the Lord's spirit dreaded the awful pressure of the world's sin, which made Him cry: "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" How greatly He must have loved us! It was love, and only love, that kept Him standing at the bar of Pilate, bending beneath the scourge of the soldiers, hanging in apparent helplessness on the cross. Not the iron hand of relentless fate; not the overpowering numbers or closely woven plots of his foes; not the nails that pierced his quivering flesh. No, it was none of these. It was not even the compulsion of the Divine purpose. It was his own choice, because of a love that would bear all things if only it might achieve redemption for those whom He loved more than Himself. "He loved me, and gave Himself for me."

Surely we may trust that love. If it moved Him to endure the cross and despise the shame, is there anything that it will withhold, anything that it will not do? His love is stronger than death, and mightier than the grave. Strong waters cannot quench it, floods cannot drown it. It silences all praise, and beggars all recompense. To believe and accept it is eternal life. To dwell within its embrace is the foretaste of everlasting joy. To be filled by it is to be transfigured into the image of God Himself.

What Jesus is to Me.

What the hand is to the lute,
What the breath is to the flute,
What is fragrance to the smell,
What the spring is to the well,
What the flower is to the bee,
That is Jesus Christ to me.

What the mother's to the child,
What the guide in pathless wild,
What is oil to troubled wave,
What is ransom to a slave,
What is water to the sea,
That is Jesus Christ to me.

FROM OTHER LANDS.

Bible Work in S. America.

NOW that many missionary agencies are being set on foot and directing attention to this great continent, some facts relating to the work of the American Bible Society and showing the actual condition of some of these countries as they have come under our own observation, may be interesting and helpful to any who contemplate work here.

From contiguity and many other existing relations, South America's first claim must be on her great northern sister, whose system of government and education most of her republics have adopted. Nor has North America been slow to acknowledge the claim. The American Bible Society, since its organisation in 1816, has not ceased to watch for and seize every opportunity of sending her the Scriptures; within the first ten years of its existence it had sent consignments of books into all the chief seaports of South America.

While this agency of the American Bible Society embraces Uruguay, Paraguay, Chili, Bolivia, Peru, and Ecuador, and while Bibles have been and are being circulated in all of these republics, we shall in this article confine ourselves to Argentina, which next to Brazil is the largest, and in point of resources and rapid development the most important. There is perfect toleration, although it often happens that in the provinces to the far north ignorant and fanatical officials interfere to hinder the sale of Scriptures.

Tent work has proved successful and encouraging in some places, and a weekly open-air preaching service has been well maintained in one of the public squares of Buenos Ayres for several months. Such agencies might be multiplied indefinitely.

Argentina comprises fourteen provinces. Every capital city, as well as all the chief towns in all of these, have been repeatedly visited by our colporteurs and canvassed from door to door, so that the work now being done is simply one of re-supply. Thousands of people have thus been furnished with the Bible who never knew it before, and still there are thousands in that sad condition. Groups of converts have been formed, and some churches organised as the result of the labours of these devoted men; but such centres of light are few indeed, compared to the great need and vast extent of available territory.

We write from Buenos Ayres, which has been the centre of our work for ten years. It is the federal capital, and the largest city on the continent, having a population of three-quarters of a million. It is cosmopolitan, and has Protestant churches—German, Scotch, American Methodist, and Anglican—and connected with most of these there are also smaller meeting-places.

There is a fine new Methodist Episcopal Church for Spanish work, and this mission has also many meeting-places and Sunday-schools throughout the city and suburbs. There are also various centres of thriving work carried on by different sections of the brethren.

The Missionary Alliance has recently come into this field, and has some very devoted workers. About a month ago we said good-bye to one of them, who, with his wife, was leaving for Cuyaba, the capital of Matto Groso, in the very centre of the continent. It is now a quarter of a century since we first canvassed it from door to door, and it has been twice visited by our colporteurs since then. This year has also seen the commencement of Spanish work by the South American Missionary Society.

All of these are in touch with the American Bible Society, and are reaping the fruit of its wide distribution, which now approaches half a million copies from this agency alone. Several colporteurs are constantly at work in the city. Such a shifting population requires steady supply.

Some interesting work has been done in conventillos—large tenement houses, where scores of families of the working classes reside. For this work a woman has special facilities. To support such a worker, who would give all her time to it, would require £4 to £5 per month. This is a much needed and inviting work. Should any church or individual feel called upon to undertake such support, the writer would be pleased to superintend and send stated information concerning it. A Bible Woman's Mission to the conventillos would do untold good, and there are scores of such places in this great city.

Work in Buenos Ayres.

IN a letter dated Palermo, Buenos Ayres, June 29, Rev. W. C. Morris writes:—

"Our work has continued to develop; quite a number of new children have joined the English and Spanish Sunday-schools; several strangers have been added to our native congregation during the last two months, and altogether the influence of the work is fast spreading. On July 1 we hope to open our first mission day-school for boys. I have secured a most commodious and well located house, and have obtained the services of two experienced young Christian men (Spaniards) as teachers. After the first month all the current expenses of the school will be defrayed by local contributions. Thus, excepting the cost of the furniture, and the initial expenses of the first month, I believe it will not be necessary to draw upon the home funds for this school."

After reciting two incidents connected with the work, Mr. Morris says:—"On the one hand we have the priests destroying the Word of God; on the other, we are collecting rosaries and crucifixes, and are constantly finding new doors open, and new people ready to give a thoughtful hearing to the Gospel of the Grace of God."

Archdeacon Shimeild writes from Fray Bentos, Uruguay:—"I have visited Buenos Ayres and Rosario. At Palermo Mr. Morris's work is very successful. His Spanish services are crowded, and the room is too small for the congregation. I went down last week to sign the title deeds of the land which he has bought for the Society, upon which he intends to build a large mission hall. He seems hopeful that he will be able to raise the necessary funds for this locally. It is a matter of deep thankfulness to me that the Society has taken the Spanish work in hand and that it is prospering."

Mission Homes in Paris.

IN its report of the work of Mrs. Travers Lewis's Homes, the Paris Council say: At the mother institution, 77, Avenue Wagram, life and activity have been abundant. The reports of the various agencies, such as the free registry for governesses and servants, the mothers' meeting, the infant school, etc., are deeply interesting. Personal testimony has been given by a gentleman of official rank in Paris to the valuable aid afforded at the Home in cases of distress and difficulty constantly occurring among young English girls. The religious tone of the Home is carefully cultivated by conversation and example, as well as by religious services. Nor has the intellectual life of the inmates been neglected.

At Washington House the dominant aim is to afford in the very centre of Paris a really Christian home. Miss Ayerst stands truly in loco parentis, and families in England who have girls in Paris as art students, governesses, etc., cannot be too thankful for her presence and work. The Home is largely used by English and American families and individuals passing through Paris. Miss Ayerst will always be glad to answer inquiries and give advice to intending visitors.

The report from the Orphanage is bright and encouraging. The Council earnestly commend the whole work to their fellow Christians.

The Spezia Mission.

THE good ship Morocco in the year 1866 brought from Liverpool to Leghorn the three pioneers of the Spezia Mission. Enormous difficulties had to be coped with both at the beginning and in the continuance of the work, and many felt the enterprise contemplated most hopeless of accomplishment. Enemies determined and unrestingly aimed at its utter extirpation, and indeed the young sapling was actually torn up. But most carefully and prayerfully it was again planted, and, striking its roots deep in the soil of Italy, it has now for years not only put forth leaves and flowers of promise but has become a vigorous and fruit-bearing tree. The progress of the Bible day-schools of the Mission, with their upwards of 900 scholars, is one of the most magnificent examples to be found in any Roman Catholic country of the blessing God surely gives to such a work. The value of these schools is seen when it is stated that they are open five days a week instead of one, and that during the whole week they are in their aim and tendencies Sunday-schools, while they supply the Sunday-schools proper with the greater part of their scholars.

Near La Spezia a friendly beacon light sends its warming and directing beams over the purple waters of the Mediterranean, guiding to safety; and we are aiming by sound teaching and the early inculcation of the principles of holiness to lead the children safely from their spiritual perils, from the dangerous currents of infidelity and agnosticism, and from the maelström of Roman Catholicism. In this work we are being much encouraged and blessed; the present is one of the most hopeful opportunities we have had, and we long to avail ourselves of it to teach to eagerly willing hearts the truths which vivify, sanctify, and save.

Who will help in this enterprise? Rev. F. B. Meyer has said of this work: "These children talk in their homes of what they hear in the Bible schools, and thus the knowledge of the Lord Jesus is swiftly penetrating many households otherwise unreached."

Soon earth's opportunities for this holy service will be over. We would that every child of God who shall peruse these words would feel now constrained to prayer and prompt help.

The Outlook in Armenia.

FROM Aintab, Asia Minor, a very striking communication was received by Rev. W. A. Essery, the hon. sec. of the Bible Lands Mission Aid Society (office, 7, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.). The letter says: "In places not visited by massacre religious life seems less active than it was, but the change is great in places that lay in the track of that destructive march. The patience shown under long-continued suffering and insult is as fine as the spirit of martyrdom. Even more striking is eagerness to hear the Gospel. It is supremely the time to multiply preachers, teachers, and Biblewomen everywhere."

At Oorfa, before the massacre, average Protestant congregations numbered 840 attendants, now they are more than 1600; Sunday-schools had 650 scholars, now there are 1650; and there are under instruction 1666 persons. Mr. Macullum, of Marash, asks: "What can be done to meet the urgent calls, especially from Gregorians, for more teachers? The prayers of many years are ready to be answered, but we are not able, for lack of funds, to enter these open doors."

Not only has the Society had a share in the merciful work of succouring Armenian orphans, but much valuable aid has been rendered to missionary operations in Persia, Syria, Palestine, and Egypt.

Miss de Broen's Work.—A London lady who recently visited Paris writes that it was to her great comfort that she found Miss de Broen's refreshment room in the Rue St. Honoré. She adds:—"At one of the windows there is always a large French Bible open which has attracted the attention of many hundreds of passers by. God's precious Word has there been read and blessed to many a thoughtless and unconverted soul. All the Christian world knows of the splendid work of Miss de Broen's mission. She is in great need of funds."

The Outlook in Spain.

THE following notes of mission work in Spanish towns were written by Sr. Blanco, an agent of the Spanish Evangelisation Society.

"The War! Of it, and only of it, do they talk everywhere. But most of all in the rural towns, from which come the greater part of the young fellows who make up the battalions. Arms snatched away from the productive labours of the fields, where there remains hardly anyone except old men. Desolate homes, in which mothers weep over the absence, the peril, or the loss of their sons, and the fathers blaspheme and curse. Anger, which increases as they see how those who are favoured by fortune free their sons from military service for a handful of money, whilst the poor bow down to the duties which equally belong to every citizen. Such are the sounds by which our ears are wounded in Villafranca, El Carpio, and Montoro, towns which we visit regularly, and in which we have little groups of faithful souls, who, from their faith and hope in Jesus Christ, form a notable contrast to the despairing people round them.

"To our meetings come many of these despairing ones, in the hope that if the means employed by the Romish Church do not save their sons or brothers, at least the intercessory prayers of the Protestants and their reading of the Gospel may do so—a mixture of faith and superstition not strange in a people who discuss, almost to the point of coming to blows about it, the capacity of this or that virgin or saint in working miracles.

"A poor mother, who has one son in the Cuban war and another in the Philippines, said to me, weeping, 'Surely God does not like me at all, because day and night I keep a light kindled before the Virgin of the Carmen, and I recite prayers to her, so keeping in with her; and then I come here and pray with you to keep in with the Son. In spite of this I never receive news of my sons. I don't know if they are alive or dead.' 'It isn't strange,' I replied; 'no one can serve two masters. But tell me, which gives you more comfort, telling your beads or hearing the Gospel?' 'I will tell you the truth. Much faith have I in the Virgin of the Carmen. I believe that she is more miraculous (powerful to work miracles) than any other, but I cannot hide the fact that when I hear the words of Jesus which you read in that book of yours, and when you beg of God for the love of Jesus that peace come, and that He dry the tears of those that mourn, then the rosary seems to me a thing insipid. I almost forget the Virgin of the Carmen, and I think it useless to spend money on oil to burn a light before her; I think that God listens to you more than to me, and I cry no more.'

"Another mother, who is in the same case as the foregoing, had her feet ruined through having climbed unshod to the Calvary Chapel to intercede for her son. 'How could you do that?' I said. 'You who have sometimes heard the Gospel?' 'Ah! but I did it in desperation, and for the chance. But it has done me no good. My son is dead!' And she burst into tears. The misfortune of the war which oppresses us makes evident the soul-sickness which the semi-pagan Romanism has caused—the cause as it is of so much moral and spiritual evil!

"But, thanks to God, all is not gloom! Amidst this confusion there are souls who, on hearing of the love of God in Christ, come out of the scoria of sin in which they have lain, and shine out in the rays of the Sun of righteousness like precious stones—hearts regenerated, whose testimony rejoices one's spirit in this work. Such are to be found in Villafranca, El Carpio, and Montoro.

Communications regarding the work may be addressed to Miss R. G. Peddie, secretary and treasurer of the Spanish Evangelisation Society, 44, Viewforth-terrace, Edinburgh.

The Far West.—Mrs. Davidson (who left Brandon, Manitoba, last year), writing from 127, Edmonton-street, Winnipeg, requests those who desire literature to be distributed in the country near Brandon to address their parcels to the secretary of the Y.M.C.A., Brandon, Manitoba. A good work is going on there, in which much wholesome literature is in great demand, and the Y.M.C.A. faithfully distribute all that is sent to them. Mrs. Davidson will still be glad to distribute in many quarters all hat is sent to her at her Winnipeg address.

Lebanon Hospital for the Insane.

EFFORTS on behalf of the suffering insane in Syria have so far prospered that an eligible site has been secured for the institution.

On the arrival of Mr. Theophilus Waldmeier in March, after two years' absence, the executive committee, which also constitutes the board of trustees of the hospital, received with deep interest and thanksgiving to God his report of visits to Switzerland, Germany, Holland, Great Britain, the United States, and Canada, and the fact that a sum of about £5000 had been already contributed, and is in the hands of the local treasurers in these countries. Osfuriyeh, on the Damascus carriage-road, at an elevation of 400 feet above the sea, was found to be the only site which combines all the features required, namely, proximity to Beirut, political jurisdiction of the Christian government of Mount Lebanon, a large tract of land, salubrity and freedom from malaria, an abundant supply of pure water, a cheerful outlook, the land to be capable of cultivation and improvement, and likely to produce an income. Negotiations for the purchase are now completed.

The land contains a valuable building erected by Hishmet Beg, the recent owner, valued at about £500, and has two farmhouses. An expenditure of about £400 more will make it sufficient for the central administration building, and Mr. and Mrs. Waldmeier, with the doctor and the trained European nurses and attendants, may be able to occupy it within a few months. There are orchards of olive, mulberry, and fig trees, and vineyards, from all of which there will be a regular annual income. There are avenues of shade trees and an expanse of arable land on which the new cottages can be erected at once. There are inexhaustible quarries of the indurated cretaceous limestone of Lebanon, ample for all future buildings. Two cottages must be erected at once, each for twenty patients, at a cost of about £900 each. Friends of poor insane sufferers in Syria should send their contributions to Sir Richard Tangye, treasurer, 35, Queen Victoria-street, London.

French Priests Free.

INTEREST in the movement among French priests is no new thing with our readers. For years we have given accounts of the work of Professor Bertrand, which has been greatly owned of God in the emancipation of priests who had some spiritual life or desires yet remaining. The newer agitation, directed by ex-priests, and penetrating the innermost recesses of the Church of Rome in France, we have also followed from the first, calling attention to its remarkable expansion and spiritual development. Hardly a week passes without some priest stepping from bondage to liberty, from darkness to light.

In the latest issue of Le Chrétien Français, M. Bourrier, himself an ex-priest, gives more letters of dismission to superiors by priests leaving the Roman Church. One of these is Professor Patel, of the Order of Oblates, who says: "If I have abandoned my Oblate cross, I have also cast aside my priest's cassock. The cross on my breast would be a vain plaything; and the cassock is too much a symbol of slavery and hypocrisy....My place is among the 'escaped.' If it is thus that men designate enlightened priests who have changed a religion of dogmas and formalities for a free Christianity, may not the same glorious name be given to those who tear themselves from monastic prisons?"

Another letter is from an ex-vicar, Abbé Perrin, who wrote to his bishop:—"For a long time I have not held the Catholic faith. I am absolutely convinced that the greater part of the dogmas taught by the Church are purely human inventions and superstitions, a product of the ignorance of past ages. Hence beliefs unworthy of human reason and of a spirit that is enlightened and free from prejudice...To-day, right gladly and of my own will, I free myself from the clerical yoke, and hold myself as henceforth discharged from all the obligations which, years ago, the Church imposed upon me in my days of youth and inexperience."

It is gratifying to note that with the wreck of belief in papal dogmas, faith in Christ did not go down in these cases.

Mission to Foreign Navvies.

THOSE who are interested in the work of the English Navvy Mission can hardly help extending their sympathies to the foreigners who toil, generally in circumstances of poverty, hardship, and danger, to make the roads and railways which open up to us some of the greatest beauties of the world.

Spain and Italy are just now occupying our thoughts, and through the humble instrumentality of the Gospel Mission to Foreign Navvies there does seem to be a way of bringing light and hope into those dark lands.

About 7,000 men, chiefly of these nationalties, are now making the Government docks at Gibraltar. A missionary, one who has proved himself suitable in every way, is maintained among them.

The Simplon Tunnel, so long delayed, is now beginning. Mr. Piggott, of Rome, can supply an evangelist of some experience to be supervised by Pastor Cavazutti, who is on the spot. Thousands of men will be located there for years. £70 a year would provide for this evangelist.

Two ladies have been working for some time at Höchstetten, Canton Berne, among the men there, assisted by a young evangelist. They have had good meetings. They are voluntary workers, gladly giving their time and strength, but there are necessary expenses connected with the mission.

Should this work commend itself to those able to help they are invited to communicate with me.

(Miss) G. M. Maynard.

The Pandita Ramabai.

OWING to the holiday season and the absence of many workers, the final arrangements for the Council which the Pandita Ramabai so earnestly desires to see formed in order to represent and assist her work amongst high-caste Hindoo widows has been delayed. The urgent needs of this work obliged the Pandita to leave for India on July 28, after little more than a fortnight in this country. Disappointment will, it is feared, be caused to many kind friends and helpers who had hoped to see her, and to hear from this honoured servant of God herself of what the Lord has done through her, so marvellously, for her oppressed and neglected sister-widows of India.

But her departure was imperatively required, and will not, we trust, in any way arrest the tide of prayerful and practical help which the support and training of the 300 widows rescued from the late famine demand. £2400 a year will be needed on the lowest computation for this work alone. It would gladden our sister if the Lord should lay it on the hearts of any to follow the example of one or two friends and to undertake the support of a widow (£8 a year), making her a special subject of their prayers and interest.

Missionary Advances.

IN the course of a day's reading, the writer came on the following paragraphs relating to the missions of three societies in widely different parts of the world:—

New Guinea.—Rev. J. W. Lawes, in speaking of progress, says: "After twenty-two years, although much still remains of heathenism, a great and manifest change is apparent. From East Cape to the Fly River in the west, covering a distance of 700 miles, are many centres from which light is being diffused, while ninety churches are dotted like lighthouses along the coast. The appearance of the people has changed. The wild look of suspicion has gone. The Sabbath is observed even in many heathen villages, while 1350 men and women are professed followers of Christ."

In the Fiji Islands there was not a Christian at the beginning of the Queen's reign, now there are 11 missionaries, 67 native ministers, 2050 local preachers, 4,520 class readers, 35,000 members or on trial, 33,590 Sunday-school scholars, 96,000 attendants on public worship.

Tinnevelly has thus advanced:—

The Gospel at Aligarh.

IN the beginning of 1893 we were sent here by the American Methodist Mission to develop the work. A native preacher lived in Aligarh city, with four or five untrained helpers. There was not even one out-station. There were said to be about 500 Christians on the register, but we were not able to find many of them. They had been neglected—many had moved away. The few we found were very ignorant. The brother who had been in charge was transferred at his own request. The helpers we found to be incompetent men, so there was a bad foundation to be cleared away before we could do much building up. It took months of patient toil.

A girls' boarding-school was begun. For two years we all lived in a rented house. The beginning of the third year found us on our splendid property of twelve acres, with good substantial house, school-house, and dormitories for the girls—all the gift of one consecrated woman in America. Out-stations were opened up, and trustworthy men put in charge. For two years all the women's work fell to myself. It was too heavy a burden, so the committee was kind enough to send a lady to take charge of the girls' boarding-school. A year later another missionary lady was sent to take the district work for the women, thus leaving us free for general and evangelistic work.

All last year my time and that of some of the others was given up to the famine, which resulted in a boys' and a girls' orphanage with about two hundred in each, besides a widows' home where a small number of famine widows are cared for. We buried over 125 during the year. This year God gave us nineteen acres near by for the Boys' Orphanage. They are now in their new home, comfortable and happy; and we are working out the industrial problem, our intention being to teach every boy a trade as well as give him an ordinary education. We desire that every boy may be able to read his Bible well.

The girls' school-house, which we thought very big when we built it, is no longer big enough for our congregations. By crowding it we can seat 400, but the boys' school-house, which is now building, will seat 600; and in a year or two this will be too small, when our outside workers come in, as they do once a month. The new building is a very plain, simple building, but it will be a great boon. Bishop Thoburn's Famine Committee gave us the land, and a grant for the boys' buildings. We have been collecting money for several years for a church; now we have church and school-house combined in one.

Aligarh District has been put under the care of my husband as presiding elder. It now includes over 1½ millions of people. The district is divided up into ten circuits, with a good native preacher in charge of each. Under them are sub-circuits with pastor-teachers in charge. At the beginning of the year there were sixteen pastor-teachers for whom there was no support. We asked the Lord for help. One lady sent money for ten men for the whole year. We are now expecting help for the other six. £5 will support one for a year. To meet the need for new stations we have begun our training-school again, so that we may soon have men ready to go to the needy places. We have not a penny for this training-school, but already twelve men have come in from various villages, and want to be trained for the Lord's work. Others are coming. We shall take twenty men, and probably six of them will have wives. We believe the Lord will send us the help. £5 will support a man and his wife for one year, and about £3 10s. a man alone. We trust some who read this report will be led of the Lord to help us. We are to push forward and open up new fields.

African Miners and Liquor.—The Johannesburg Star gives emphatic testimony to the havoc that liquor plays among the natives when it says: "Until the sale of liquor was prohibited by law the black labourers on the Rand gold mines were aptly described as coming to Johannesburg in the form of savages, and returning home as devils. A considerable improvement in this respect is noticeable since the advent of 1897, in spite of the amount of drink smuggling that goes on daily under the very eyes of a detective force more phlegmatic than energetic in its mode of operations."

Zambesi Industrial Mission.

IT is just upon six years since the Zambesi Industrial Mission was begun. The most recent circular letter shows that, although the beginning was small, the progress had been very marked. At present work is being carried on at ten different centres by some thirty European missionaries—not merely industrial, but also medical, educational, and spiritual work.

It is deeply interesting to learn that there are eleven schools with nearly a thousand children enrolled; also that the two hospitals are warmly appreciated by the natives. The industrial operations are full of promise. It seems that there are 750 acres of land planted with coffee, of which 460 will, it is anticipated, yield a crop during the present season, making a total of from thirty-five to forty tons. This should bring in about £4000 in aid of the expenses of the Mission for the year.

As the work grows it brings its own anxieties. Its importance is beyond question, and it cannot but be interesting to those who study missionary questions. Such friends are recommended to secure copies of the circular from the office of the Mission, 1, Gresham-street, London, E.C.

North India School of Medicine.

READERS of THE CHRISTIAN are acquainted with the work of this School, whose special object is to train Christian native assistants for the lady medical missionaries. Their staff of workers is partly supplied by the various missionary societies, who lend for a year the medical ladies who come out under their auspices. During this year these ladies gain a knowledge of the people and their ways, as well as of the language, and they at the same time give lectures in English; so that both the teacher and the college are helped by this arrangement. At present there is a great need of helpers to fill the vacancies in the college staff. We quote from a letter of Miss Greenfield's, dated July 9 last:—

"We are hoping much that the Edinburgh Committee will either procure us a loan of some lady who is coming out, or find us a permanent member for the staff. The Government recognition depends very much on a sufficient teaching staff; this is one of the points on which they insist. Besides this, I don't see how three ladies are possibly going to do the work of five during the winter session. Miss Brown is simply overwhelmed with work, having to do all her own writing since Miss Lloyd left, in addition to looking after all the minor details of everything. They really need a capable woman as housekeeper and matron, to whom the students would look up, and to whom they might go daily on little matters that girls need advice about. The new hospital wing is at last nearly finished, and when they begin taking in patients it will add much to their work."

Two doctors are wanted for the coming session—one on loan and one permanent—a nurse, and a lady chemist. Anyone willing to go out and assist in this great work may have further information on the subject by writing to the president of the Edinburgh Committee, Mrs. Greenfield, 7, Heriot-row, Edinburgh.

United States Missionary Societies.—Our contemporary The Mission World publishes some deeply interesting statistics on United States missions. It gives a list of thirty-three boards, unions, societies, and churches, with their income for the past year. Ranging in amount from upwards of £200,000 down to £600, these bodies raised an aggregate of £1,031,538. This sum is about one-twelfth of the aggregate raised for all purposes by the five largest Protestant denominations of the United States.

Eurasian Girls in Hong Kong.—An appeal is made to Christian friends to enable a much-needed work to be carried on amongst Eurasian girls in Hong Kong, for whom no provision is made by the missionary societies. Miss Johnstone, of the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East, "Fairlea," Hong Kong, has for some years received a number of these girls into her Chinese school, thereby fitting them to earn their living in whatever position may be allotted to them. It is now proposed to start a separate establishment and so extend the usefulness of this most important work. It is desired to raise a sufficient sum to defray the expenses of travelling and the support of a lady worker for a year or so, until this proposed school is actually started by local interest in Hong Kong. For this purpose a sum of £100 is needed. Help will be thankfully received by Miss H. S. Fletcher, Swallow Cottage, Burbage, Hinckley.

Persecution of the Stundists.

THE Odessa correspondent of the Daily News writes that since M. Pobiedonostzeff last year obtained for the Holy Synod increased legal powers for the suppression of sectarianism, the unfortunate Stundists, the most virtuous and exemplary body of Nonconformists in the empire, are mercilessly pursued and prosecuted wherever they are found, publicly or clandestinely, performing their religious services. A few days ago seven members of the Stundist sect, all prosperous agriculturists at Trubtschevsk, in the Government of Orel, were charged before the local tribunal with heretical proselytism. The case was heard, of course, with closed doors, and after sitting for nine consecutive hours the Court sentenced the accused to the deprivation of all civil rights and to deportation to Transcaucasia. The wives and children of the déportés have appealed to the Court for permission to follow their husbands and fathers into banishment. This prayer may or may not be granted; it rests with the discretion of the Court.

The place of deportation for these religious offences depends on the part of the empire in which the sectarian is tried and convicted. If the convict reside in European Russia, he shall be deported to Transcaucasia; if he be living in any of the Caucasian or Transcaucasian Governments he shall be transported to Siberia; and if he be resident in Siberia, he shall be banished to one of the most remote settlements of that country. The more cruel part of such a sentence is the deprivation of all civil rights. A person so deprived becomes in the eye of the law and in the estimation of his fellows a mere cypher. He has no redress or legal protection, or appeal against any jury put upon him by an ill-disposed neighbour or a Court enemy. He may be harried, abused, robbed, or maltreated to the death with perfect impunity to his aggressors.

Mormonism in Canada.—Mormonism is said to be spreading in the province of Western Ontario, where a good deal of alarm has been created by the active propaganda of the Latter Day Saints. They have recently been holding open-air baptismal services, and so great has been their success that there are now said to be 2500 Mormons in the province, the only one in which any sustained Mormon missionary effort has been made, or in which any organised churches exist. There are altogether about 100 congregations in the province, the head of the church in Canada being Elder R. C. Evans, one of the twelve apostles constituting the governing body of the sect.

Mexico.—Mr. John Mercer, Harburg, Fallowfield, Manchester, sends us the latest circular regarding the work of Mr. Eglon Harris, from which we make the following extract:—"Though the Romish priests, as such, will ever remain enemies to the Gospel and the Word of God, yet their power to oppose is well nigh annulled in Mexico, owing to the favour shown by the political party towards Protestantism. The result of this is that in any place where you can persuade the owner to let you a room, you may use it for Gospel preaching, provided you make no outside show. The mayor and the police know it as their duty to protect the missionary and his property. On the streets you may distribute tracts and sell Bibles, but street preaching comes under the same heading as a Romish procession and is forbidden. Very rarely are we denied entrance to a prison, hospital, or barracks on the contrary, we usually get a most hearty welcome."

The Dukhobortsi.—An appeal is made for funds to enable the Dukhobortsi, a people corresponding very nearly to the Friends of this country, to leave their homes in the Caucasus, where the Government insists on their performing military service, a condition abhorrent to their conviction. The number of those who specially need to emigrate is 3,500, and the sum required is £10,000. The Committee of Emigration in England has received towards this sum £3000 odd, and the persecuted people themselves have reserved out of their former means £4700, but it is thought wise to allow this latter sum to remain intact if possible, in order to provide a small grant wherewith each family may start in a new land. We ask those who sympathise with this sorely tried people to send practical help in order to remove them from the scene of their pain to a kinder and more hospitable shore. Subscriptions will be thankfully received by Mr. Isaac Sharp, 12, Bishopsgate Without, London, E.C.

At the Seaside.

By Rev. JOHN MITCHELL.

CHILDREN with their spades and buckets are all around me. The sand, with its houses and castles built by busy little hands, seems like a city in Fairyland. Plenty of big people are doing nothing, while girls and boys are as active as bees in the country. They look happy, as God means they should be, but I wonder how many of them know the Saviour who gave his life to make them happy for ever! He loves them, and it is a pity they should not love Him!

What a shrill voice behind me! I must look round and see what is going on. Well, now, there are two girls and a boy trying to count the grains of sand on the beach. One clever little girl has counted a hundred, another has counted fifty, and they think that a great many; but there are a great many more to be counted. I do not wonder at the boy saying he does not think it worth while to begin now as they can't finish before tea. There are some things the cleverest scholars cannot count, and the sand is one of them. Another, we are told, is God's thoughts to us. If God did not constantly think of us, we should not have life, health, food, clothing, and many other mercies. If He thought as seldom of us as we think of Him, our lot would be sad indeed! Let us thank God for his kind and loving thoughts of us! Then no one can count his sins. But why should we sin against one who loves us and to whom we owe all the good things we enjoy? It is very bad of us to be so ungrateful. God is kind, and offers to pardon our sins and to cleanse us from all evil if we give ourselves to Him. He has promised his Holy Spirit to teach us how to live a happy Christian life.

The tide is coming in and has washed the polish off my boots. They have lost their shine. So the tide of sin washes the polish of purity from us; and one sin indulged in by the Christian will cause him to lose his shine in the world. "Jesus bids us shine," so we must be careful not to go where we may be likely to get the shine washed off! I must get out of the way and sit higher up. I might have told the waters to go back; but if I had, people would only have laughed at me and called me foolish. How wonderful God is, that the seas obey him! and if He says, "Go back," they go; if He says, "Come hither," they come, and if He bids them divide they do so. How astonished we should have been if we had been in the boat with Christ, and seen Him stand up and tell the winds to cease and the sea to be quiet. Those who belong to Jesus can look up and say, "That God of power is my heavenly Father; that wonderful Christ is my Saviour and Friend. He stilled the storm of evil passions in my heart and made a great calm rest there."

The waters are coming nearer me, and—there, now! they have cast a house at my feet. "Not a dwelling-house," do you say? Yes, a real dwelling-house, but you call it a shell. Perhaps the little animal whose house it is would call your house a shell if it could speak. What a lovely shape! And made exactly to fit the owner! We get our clothes to fit us if we can, but not our houses. Where did the wisdom come from which planned and built the house so beautifully? From God, who is good to all his creatures, and has not forgotten the needs of the smallest of them. The shell is a house not made with hands. Christians are told of a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens—which will be theirs when the old house of the body gives way. Surely, Christians ought to be happy people! "Yea, happy is the people whose God is the Lord."

How generous the sea is! It has placed a live crab at my feet. It has brought life to me; and Christ brought his life to my heart and made me a Christian. I look at the crab and say, "You are only a crab, and yet you have been where I have never been; you have seen what I have never seen: you have lived where I could not live; but I do not envy you at all. God has seen fit to make you a crab and me a man, and his will is best for both of us." And God's will for all of us—men and women, boys and girls—is that we should turn from every sinful way, that we should dedicate ourselves to Him, and that we should walk in the light of Christ, when our path will be that of the just, "which shineth more and more unto the perfect day."

Star Texts and Sermonettes.

HOW much I should like to invite you all to an open-air meeting! Where? Somewhere far away in the country—a highland glen preferred. When? In early spring, or late autumn. At what o'clock? Ah, now we come to the queer part of it—at 10 p.m.! What would the fathers and mothers say to that? Of course it would have to be in lovely weather, and we would rather not have the moon! What is this all about? It is about the stars! Now I have made up a plan which I think you will all approve, and to which the big people will not object. It is that we pretend to have these open-air meetings. I shall fancy that you all sing and pray with me, and that I talk to you a little about star texts.

Let us seek that, as we gaze on the glorious night-sky, our souls may be lifted up unto God in the heavens.

First Night.

Let us sing a hymn about the stars. Now, shall we close our eyes and pray that the Holy Spirit, who moved on the face of the waters at the Creation, may move over our hearts, and give us understanding of the glory of God in his wondrous works for Jesus' sake.

Our first text is Genesis i. 16: "He made the stars also."

I am fancying that we are all looking up at "the spangled heavens," and that each young heart is feeling "How splendid! how glorious!" Even baby lips may be lisping "Twinkle, twinkle, little star, how I wonder what you are."

I think men have wondered this all through the ages. Astronomers have learned many things about the stars, but I do not know whether one of them could give a simple answer to baby's question, so we will not try! I remember reading in one of their books a pretty fancy about Adam. Did you ever think how astonished he must have been that first evening when the sun sank in the west? How, perhaps, he stood on some grassy knoll, and watched it sinking, sinking to the horizon, and then half was gone, and then only a quarter left, and at last it vanished. Adam could not know that ever he would see it again, and as he turns wondering, lo! star after star appears, and the moon is rising. We can easily picture Adam, sinless as he then was, bending his head in worship, and exclaiming, "The heavens declare the glory of God," etc. (Ps. xix. 1). He made the stars. Who made them? The very youngest answers softly, "God."

Have any of you a grown-up friend, who on a starry night has said, "Come out and see the stars"? I hope you have. Many young people first want to have their interest awakened, to be asked to look, to consider the heavens, the lilies, etc.

There was one person in the Bible specially called "God's friend," and God took him out one night to see the stars (Genesis xv. 5).

Oh! children, I do like to think of the Lord Jesus being with his Father and the Holy Spirit at the creation of all these wondrous worlds. I like to fancy that He spoke what you can read in Proverbs viii. 22 to 36. How strange it must have seemed to Him, when a boy in Nazareth, to gaze up at the starry sky! One can easily understand something of the feeling with which He prayed, "Glorify Thou me with thine own self, with the glory which I had with Thee before the world was." But He did not want to be back in the glory alone (see John xvii. 24). Names have been given to nearly all the visible stars and constellations, and some of these occur in Bible texts, which you might search for; and remember that God "nameth and claimeth both thee and me."

Cripples at the Seaside.

Christian children, blithe and merry,
Glad in youth's bright happy day,
Ye who gather bloom and berry,
Or with sun-kissed wavelets play.

Children with God's blessings laden,
You have often heard—'tis true,
Many a gentle boy and maiden
Cannot run and play like you.

Fair child-forms and brows are throbbing
On their little cots of pain;
Tiny voices, faint, are sobbing
For release, alas! in vain.

Let me tell you—will you listen?
How you may God's angels be;
Bid these tear-dimmed eyes to glisten
With the light of health and glee.

Where the sungilt waves are gleaming,
Silver-crowned with spray and foam,
Songsters sing and flowers are beaming,
Love has built a happy home.*

Where these suffering children weary,
Healthy grow and glad and strong,
Fondly loved, are bright and cheery,
Tears exchanged for smiles and song.

Best of all, they each are learning
Of our Jesus day by day,
Readily unto Him turning,
Early find the narrow way.

Precious children, his own treasures,
Would you please Him, like Him be?
Seek with such to share your pleasures,
He will say, "'Twas done to Me."

Spiritual Photography.

ONE of the most interesting branches of science and art of the present day is that of photography. The process is simple, but the results are marvellous. A real, perfect, life-like likeness taken in a few moments by the power of light is one of the wonders of this age.

Without pretending to explain the philosophy of photography, we may wisely use it to illustrate spiritual truths.

There are four things spiritual photography does. It reveals, it restores, it renews, and it reflects.

I. It reveals. The first thing spiritual photography does is to reveal our true character before God. The glass of the Word reveals all the spots, marks, and shades of the character and life, the heart, the throat, the tongue, the mouth, the feet, the eyes, etc. (Matt. xv. 19; Ro. iii. 10-23; Jer. xvii. 9). This is a faithful picture, revealed by heaven's light, and the only light that will reveal it (Eph. v. 13; John i. 9).

Some are afraid of the light.

II. It restores. It restores us to the image of Christ. Now this shows spiritual photography to be superior to the ordinary science. The one can produce a true life-like likeness, but cannot alter it if it is not beautiful, but this Divine art does. It can change us into new creatures.

God has a way of removing all spots, straightening all wrinkles, and making us beautiful for ever, so that by-and-by we shall appear "without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing" (Eph. v. 27).

The third chapter of Romans will give us the clue to this wonderful blessing.

The description of our natural photo is completed in the twenty-third verse; then follows the remedy.

Saved freely by his grace—Loved.
Redeemed wholly by his blood—Redeemed.
Pardoned fully by his love—Pardoned.
Clothed entirely by his righteousness—Clothed.
Restored completely by his power—Beautified all in Christ.

Now we have. A new image,
A new life,
A new character, and
A new destiny, for we have

"put on the new man" (Eph. iv. 24; Col. iii. 10).

III. It renews from glory to glory into the more perfect image of Christ by the power of the Holy Spirit (2 Cor. iii. 18).

Now, note; there are seven things here:—
The open face—The unveiled heart.
The earnest look—The action of faith.
The revealing glass—The Word of God.
The glorious image—The Lord Jesus.
The renewing process—The transformation.
The mighty power—The Holy Spirit.
The progressive life—From glory to glory.

IV. It reflects the glory, and thus prepares the soul to see his face. "As we have borne the image of the earthly, we shall bear the image of the Heavenly" (1 Cor. xv. 49).

There are three great changes for the Christian:—
The change from darkness to light—Conversion.
The change into the perfect image of Christ—Sanctification.
The change in a moment at the Lord's coming—Glorification.

"We shall all see Him"—Perfect sight (Rev. i. 7).
"We shall be like Him"—Perfect capacity (1 John iii. 2; Phil. iii. 21).
"We shall see his face"—Perfect delight (Rev. xxii. 4).

Personal.

I have been very much pleased with the interesting letters I have received from prize and certificate winners. It is very gratifying to learn how much the rewards have been appreciated, and what pleasure they have given, and I desire to thank all my young friends for their kind wishes, and regret that, owing to their number, I am unable to answer them personally as I should like to do. I hope next competition will be a larger one than ever before, and that those who have not been successful hitherto will be then.

Many thanks for flowers and shells received.

Personalia.

Dr. H. L. Lunn has for the present retired from active and regular participation in the Christian work carried on at the Regent-street Polytechnic, in order to assist Rev. H. Price-Hughes in the work of the West London Mission during Mr. Hughes' year of office as President of the Wesleyan Conference.

Mr. J. F. Shorey, well known in connection with work in London among crippled children, has recently made arrangements which will enable him to give his whole time to work of this description, combined with temperance effort. He has transferred his business as a manufacturing chemist to a leading firm in the City, who will act as agents and hand the profits over to the Ragged School Union to be expended in work for cripples. In addition to this generous benefaction Mr. Shorey hopes to give his personal attention to labour for these afflicted children in the East End. It may be remembered that for some years he was superintendent of the McAuley Mission, Water-street, New York.

Hereford and Worcester Hop-pickers.—Mr. John Jones and I are hoping to go once more among the hop-pickers of Hereford and Worcester, and should be glad of any help sent by your readers. Last year we visited 170 yards, preaching and distributing books and tracts. Parcels should be sent to Mr. P. Clissell, Stanley-hill, Ledbury; or to Mr. Turner, Woodlands, Eardiston, Tenbury. If parcels are sent by rail to Mr. Turner they should be addressed to Newnham-bridge station, Worcester.

The British Chautauqua.—The fourth annual summer school is now in session at Edinburgh, the meeting being held in the Oddfellows' Hall, Forrest-road. Amongst those who are taking part in the proceedings are Dr. J. Monro Gibson (London), Rev. J. G. Cunningham (Edinburgh), Dr. John Smith (Edinburgh), Dr. G. C. Lormer (Boston, U.S.A.), Rev. C. A. Scott (London), Dr. Agar Beet (London), Rev. Geo. Jackson, Edinburgh), Prof. Marcus Dods (Edinburgh), Rev. C. H. Kelly (London), etc. Several attractive excursions will be made to places in the vicinity of Edinburgh while the school is in progress. The utmost interest is being manifested in the gathering.

"Elisha at Dothan."—2 Kings vi. 8-18.

Golden Text.—"The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them."—Psa. xxxiv. 7.

In verses 1-7 story told of another act of graceful kindness performed by Elisha. Lesson of it for us is that God helps us in the smallest trouble of our daily lives.

Oh, what needless pains we bear!
All because we do not carry
Everything to God in prayer.

Elisha's Warning (9, 10).

Some neglected town should be garrisoned. Plans were laid by the Syrians, but each time frustrated by the king acting upon the warning of the prophet.

Warnings of good men should not be neglected. Warnings of father and mother may seem old-fashioned and too careful, but blessed is the child who accepts the warning gratefully.

Syrian King Troubled (11-13).

Some of those who had been in the train of Naaman may now be with the king; hence the knowledge of Elisha.

Wonder the king did not conclude that, as Elisha had forestalled him in taking the towns, he might also forestall him in the attempt upon his own life.

Benhadad thought it all rested with man, as Naaman had thought. They left out of account the real Worker in these matters. So thousands live to-day as though God did not exist, and even Christians worry about their work as though there were no God.

At Dothan (14).

They were determined to get the prophet if human foresight and strength could do it. They came in great force and by night. Elisha's attempt to comfort his servant (who was probably one of the students in Elisha's college) was twofold—

(1) By his own faith—"They that be with us are more than they that be with them."

(2) By a vision of "them that be with us."

What the young man saw, really, we cannot tell, but it was some symbol of the infinite spiritual power that was on the side of the prophet, prepared to protect him. There are "ministering spirits" whose duty it is to protect and guide the steps of those who trust in God. They save us in the time of temptation and spiritual peril, by influencing us for the right and making us hate the wrong.

Illustrations.—The angel that came to Elijah under the juniper tree. The angels that ministered to Christ after his victory in the wilderness.

The Defenders of the Righteous.

Good men do not always see these great spiritual powers. God

Hides himself so wondrously
As though there were no God.
He is least seen when all the powers
Of ill are most abroad.

The eye of faith is needed to be aware of his presence.

Illustration.—"Once when Felix of Nola was flying from his enemies, he took refuge in a cave, and had scarcely entered it before a spider began to spin its web over the fissure. The pursuer passing by saw the spider's web, and did not look into the cave, and the saint as he came out into safety remarked: 'Where God is, a spider's web is a wall; where God is not, a wall is a spider's web.'"

Two Ways of Deliverance.

God does not confine himself to one method of answering prayer for the protection of his people. He may—

(1) Deliver by putting our enemies of pain, trouble, temptation to the rout.

(2) Deliver by giving us strength to bear with these things patiently. "My grace is sufficient."

The Great Need.

"Open eyes."—The forces had been there all the time, but the young man could not see them.

Some people are colour-blind; some are deaf to musical sound. Many never hear the voice of God or see his power. We may be sure that the Syrian host did not see what Elisha saw.

Teacher should impress upon class the need for keeping the sense of God's presence vivid. They hear his voice now in conscience and other ways.

City Noon Prayer Meeting.

THE noon meeting at Aldersgate-street maintains its interest though so many friends are away from London. Last Monday Mr. W. R. Lane gave the address, basing his remarks on David "sitting in the house of the Lord." He urged the necessity of our making time to wait upon God in prayer before going out to meet the rush and whirl of business, and by illustration and simile pressed the need of preparation of heart in order to fruitful service.

The "Welsh Prize Choir" from the Rhondda Valley, who are singing in Hyde Park this week, delighted the audience by their inspiriting rendering of "All hail the power of Jesu's name" and "The Destruction of Gaza."

Mr. Taylor, of Aylesbury, spoke on the work of the Gospel van in the villages of Bucks, where the preaching of Christ continues nightly, with evident tokens of blessing. Mr. Isaac, of the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway, told of the work at Zanzibar, and said a lady had promised to support two missionaries, and now the needs had been supplied they were looking to God to send the right men. He spoke of the need of workers in Ratcliff Highway, where the foreign element is strongly represented by the sailors from many lands, but where the power of the devil is awfully seen.

Mr. Lane affirmed the willingness of the people to listen to the Gospel, and demonstrated it by mentioning that at Dalston Baptist Chapel last Sunday the building was crowded, despite the heat; at the after meeting three-fourths of the congregation stayed behind, and fifteen came into the vestry and sought and confessed Christ.

The Open-air Mission.

WORK IN THE VILLAGES.

DEAR Sir,—Many of your readers will be interested to hear that the Open-air Mission has again undertaken the summer tours originated last year. Monmouth, and Brockenhurst in the New Forest, with the villages surrounding them, have already been visited by companies of our evangelists this summer. Another party is now at Great Yarmouth, and other workers later on will tour and preach in the Isle of Man.

One of the workers at Monmouth wrote: "In the town squares, on the hillside slope, beneath the trees, in country lanes, on large commons, in village streets, upon the squire's lawn, and on the tops of rocks with the valley below, we have sung and preached the old, old story. It was wonderful to see the people coming together from scattered districts, and with spellbound attention listening to the Gospel as though they heard it for the first time. In one district a person said, 'We have been here seventeen years, and never heard an open-air preacher before.' Another said, 'No one ever comes to visit us here.'"

Another worker wrote from the same place: "The town missionary said he never remembered a mission that had so stirred the people as yours has; rich and poor came to the meetings, three vicars of the neighbourhood being present at one. As we left we were constantly asked, 'When will you come again?' The children were not forgotten, and special hymns were sung for them. We had a glorious time."

From Brockenhurst one correspondent wrote of a visit to a village where Ritualism prevails:—"One woman said she had never seen an open-air service before in her life." Another wrote of a morning visit to a small village or hamlet, that when he was giving notice of an open-air meeting at another village about two miles distant, a woman said to him, "Why not come here? The men will be home from work in the evening, and we need it so much." They determined to have a meeting there, and had a most happy time with some 130 attending. They learned that the woman, at whose house they had called in the morning, had been herself or had sent to every house for a mile round to tell of the meeting.

I spent a couple of days with the party at Brockenhurst, visiting villages around. At Milton-on-Sea, opposite the Needles, after house-to-house visitation we had a good hearing in the evening, though the weather was stormy with driving mist. We had much pleasure in meeting a visitor who regularly conducts an open-air service every Sunday afternoon during his stay each year. What a happy service it is for the Lord's servants to take advantage of their holidays to carry the Gospel to the neglected villages and out-of-the-way corners of our land!

We have had much to thank the Lord for in considerable increase of work and added blessing on this mission during the past eighteen months; and we are looking for more and more in the future.—Very faithfully yours,

GEORGE MACKINLAY, Major,
Hon. Sec. Open-air Mission.

Friendless and Fallen.

THE work of the five Homes and the Open-all-Night Refuge continues in full operation. Up to the present time 515 applications for admission have been received this year, and in accordance with the instructions of the committee given at the first meeting in January last every suitable case has been received, irrespective of the state of the funds.

The efforts to rescue and save friendless and betrayed young women and girls have been conducted as a work of faith, and there have been many occasions when, with the homes nearly full and applicants seeking admission, there has not been a penny in the treasury to meet expenses. But the Lord has hitherto mercifully provided, and from one small house fitted up in 1857 for sixteen inmates only, the operations have been extended until one hundred and eighty young women and girls can now be received. The primary object of seeking the salvation of all who are admitted is never lost sight of, and there have been many trophies of God's grace.

A booklet is now in the press, giving a brief account of several marvellous instances of rescue. A copy may be obtained post free upon application to Mr. W. N. J. Taylor, at the office of the Institution, 200, Euston-road, London, N.W.

Sailors at Ratcliff.

THE Sailors' Rest appears like an oasis in the wilderness of Ratcliff Highway on Bank Holiday. Relieving and refreshing indeed was the sound of a hymn tune that reached our ears amidst the sad sights of public-houses crowded with drunken men and women. On approaching the street-corner words of Life, which acted upon us like a breeze of pure mountain-air, were spoken to a crowd of attentive listeners. The Rest was soon filled with about 150 sailors of different nationalities, all taking a cheerful tea, while friends of the mission sang the Gospel to them. Mr. and Mrs. Isaac spoke to the sailors in their own homely fashion, pressing upon them the truth of our oneness in Christ Jesus.

While the hall was being cleared for the evening gathering another open-air meeting was held close to the building. Testimonies in English, Swedish, and German were given to the wonderful work wrought by grace in many a heart. Men with careworn, sunburnt faces reverently listened to the old and yet ever new story. The curly heads of children in soiled frocks peeped over the hymn-books, trying to raise their little voices to the homely tune. For the evening meeting there was a larger attendance than before.

The Sailors' Rest in its twenty-one years of existence has been a home to many a young man who otherwise would not have known where to lay his head, and many perishing ones have been saved under the softening influence of Christian brotherhood and sympathy.

The Scripture Gift Union and Crystal Palace Bible Stand is an admirable work, the story of which should continually secure new friends and supporters. The report for 1897-8 is an attractive booklet, not only for the information it contains but also because of its beautiful engravings given as specimens of those employed in the Illustrated Gospels which are produced by the Mission, and put into circulation in many lands through established missionary channels. We are glad to note that the income of the work is advancing; and we do not doubt but this will continue to keep pace with ever-growing operations designed to disseminate the Word of God among sinful and needy men. Copies of the report and other information may be had from Mr. W. Walters, 84, St. Paul's-churchyard, E.C.

Letters to the Editor.

"The Truth-Seeker."

THE DISPENSATIONS.

SIR,—The question raised by "M." in your paper on July 14 is a very important one and is generally misunderstood by most Christians. The difficulty is apparent in the sentence, "A theory which would limit the application of Divine principles, and which leads men to qualify God's words, cannot be a safe guide, either in Bible study or testimony for Christ."

This leads one to say that it is of the first importance that everyone should be taught the difference between the interpretation of Scripture and the application of Scripture. The prophecies of the Bible relate to three great classes of persons, viz., Gentiles, Jews, and the Church, with whom God is dealing at the present time, on different principles. Unless a person is able to interpret Scripture most strictly in this manner, he is liable to run on the rocks or come into collision, for as far as the interpretation is concerned every Scripture does not belong to everyone, but is limited to one of the three classes, as the context plainly indicates. Furthermore, these classes do not supersede one another, and the dispensations often referred to as doing so are not recognised by prophecy.

But the application of Scripture is a very different thing, and relates to salvation and the spiritual life, and in this sense all Scripture is available.

This, therefore, gives a double use of Scripture, and it is to be regretted that most people persist in using Scripture in only one of these ways, and limit them either prophetically or spiritually.

We should learn to use both, when the whole Bible becomes what God intended it to be to us, viz., eminently interesting, and a light shining in a dark place, as to God's purposes; and highly profitable, and food indeed for the inner man, as to salvation and the spiritual life.—Yours truly, F. S.

"The Breaking of Bread."

A PERSONAL EXPERIENCE.

SIR,—I am extremely interested in the correspondence on the "Breaking of Bread," and would like to say a few words on Discipline, being, as I consider, the victim of exclusivism. One of your correspondents this week takes up this point, and observes that the immoral or wicked person should be put out of fellowship or excommunicated. He thought every Church would be agreed on this view of the case being Scriptural; but I am one of a company who were cut off wholesale, because their leader or teacher had a conscientious difficulty on the subject of Mr. Darby's Tract on the "Sufferings of Christ." I had studied the paper myself, but failed to see its teaching, as being widely different from Mr. Newton's; but I little thought that would be a sufficient ground for refusing me fellowship at the Lord's table.

To give all the particulars would take up too much time and space. Suffice it to say that the action of the brethren at that time—1869—broke every Christian link, and sent me adrift. My little barque has passed through many a stormy sea since then. Having lost confidence in my leaders, the ground of fellowship was shaken under my feet. I have wandered through the churches; met with loving Christian sympathy in the midst of much confusion of thought and feeling everywhere; and after being sometimes received and sometimes rejected, I have come to the conclusion that the bond of fellowship which obtains in meeting "in the Name of Jesus" (as a sect) is no more real than that which obtains among other Christians. "Saved by the blood of the Lamb," "a child of God through faith in Jesus Christ," I am on my way to glory, and count it my happy privilege to know as many as possible of the Redeemed, and specially those who have been pioneers in the salvation of souls. I should be happy to correspond with anyone who desires to have more details.—Respectfully yours,

Aberdare. P. E. JAYNE.

What am I but a bundle of bad habits? And Satan is wont to take out of that bundle now a staff, now a rod, with which to beat his slave.—J. B. Figgis.

Obituary.

MR. GEORGE ALLAN, CHIOLE, AFRICA.

By the death of Mr. George Allan the Zambesi Industrial Mission has lost one of its best workers. Recently, after spending a short furlough in Scotland, Mr. and Mrs. Allan returned to their much-loved work, leaving their young children to the care of grandparents.

In the words of the latest circular of the Mission: — "Mr. Allan seemed so full of life, and so glad to get back to his work, that no one ever suspected that he would be so soon and so suddenly called to higher service. When he and Mrs. Allan arrived in Africa they were met, more than a hundred miles from their station, by bands of Christians welcoming them back to Chiole, where God had in past years so marvellously blessed their work. As soon as they reached their station, Mr. Allan set himself, with the zeal that was characteristic of him, to build a new hospital, for which Sir Brampton Gurdon had provided the funds."

Mr. Allan's work at Chiole was full of encouragement. His sorrowing widow writes:—"Everything spoke of the Lord's hand being on it. Fresh tongues were loosened in Sunday-school and sewing class. All the men stationed with us had come asking to be baptized." Thus the loss is mysterious as well as saddening to the workers of the mission.

MISS MARY WYNESS.

The Rescue Society has lost a faithful and devoted matron, and a large circle of girls and women a true, self-denying friend and "mother," in the falling asleep of Miss Mary Wyness. Brought to God and received into fellowship with his people at the Metropolitan Tabernacle in October, 1872, she six years later gave herself to work amongst the poor and degraded of her own sex. With strong determination and deep personal feelings she was not thwarted by difficulties nor turned aside by the unpleasantness of her task in rescuing the lost. In later years she has had charge of the maternity work of the society, and the manner in which she threw herself into it, never sparing herself, has been marked by the singular success which has accompanied her efforts. Many, too, owe their conversion under God to her earnest, prayerful pleading. A long and painful illness was ended on the 6th inst. by a peaceful passing away into her Saviour's presence, and a large and sorrowful company testified to their affection and esteem at the funeral. The vacancy thus created will not be easy to fill. At Stratford, too, where her home was, she will be much missed, having found time amidst her labours to help in various Christian and temperance projects. C. S. T.

REV. DR. ANDREW, STIRLING.

We regret to announce the death, from heart disease, of Rev. Dr. Alexander Andrew, editor of The British Messenger and other publications of the Stirling Tract Enterprise. It occurred suddenly at his home in Stirling last Friday morning. The previous evening Dr. Andrew had been conducting the usual weekly meeting of the Railway Mission, of which he was president, when he became ill, and was compelled to cut the sermon short. On reaching home he was put to bed and medical aid summoned. He got relief, and rallied for some time, but at half-past five he had another attack, when he remarked to his wife that he thought this was death, and becoming unconscious he died within a quarter of an hour.

Dr. Andrew was born in Paisley about sixty years ago, being the son of a man who was a very zealous worker in the mission field. He began life as a clerk in a merchant's office in Glasgow, but about this period he came under the ministrations of the late Dr. Somerville, which changed the bent of his life-work. In 1858, after his first session at college, he got an appointment in the Stirling Tract Depôt, and there worked for three successive summers. The experience gained at this time in the home mission was of great advantage to him. After a brilliant college career, he was in 1865 ordained as Free Church minister of Busby. He held several successive pastorates, everywhere with fruitful results. On the death of Rev. A. Carter in 1893 the trustees of Drummond's Tract Enterprise in Stirling requested Dr. Andrew to undertake the editorship of their publications, and he acceded to their request. In Stirling he was as successful as elsewhere, and was a ready helper of all good work in the town. His death is the more to be regretted in view of the approaching jubilee of the society with which he was connected.

Oxford Letter.

[By Our Own Correspondent.]

NOT even the slums in East London can present sadder pictures of homes blighted by the drink-curse than can some of the poorer parts of Oxford. How thankful we ought to be for the vigilance of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. It is the innocent ones who suffer in the drunkard's home. On Tuesday a father was sentenced to three months' hard labour for gross neglect of his family; the children, when found, were in a pitiable condition. This in a city of churches—not hidden away amid a labyrinth of rookeries, but under the very shadow of our colleges. We notice the extension of licensed houses, and the efforts that are being made to make them more attractive. With our police-court records before us, and our coroners' inquests (for the latter of which Oxford is becoming sadly noted) it is hard to resist raising the cry of blood-money, and of feeling that the stone in the wall cries out, and the very timber answers it, that the "trade" flourishes in a gruesome manner.

An interesting meeting in connection with the movement to establish a mission to the deaf and dumb in the Diocese of Oxford was held in New College Hall on Saturday afternoon. The Bishop of Reading presided. He said they were there to accept the responsibility which God had put upon them to supervise, sympathise with, and help all classes. Doubtless they had not been alive to the needs of the deaf and dumb in their midst, and he hoped a missioner would be appointed who should travel up and down the diocese ministering to these afflicted people. We should remember the isolation and loneliness of those who are deaf and dumb—an isolation felt all the more keenly when they return to their homes after receiving the instruction ordained by the law. During that time they enjoy the society of those similarly afflicted, and are under the superintendence of persons able in a greater degree than other people to enter into their needs. What wonder, then, that their return home is sometimes a return to despondency, if not to absolute recklessness! The movement will, we hope, be followed by the prayers of many readers of The Christian.

Professor Sayce's new book on "Early Hebrew History" will be read with interest by all lovers of the Bible. It deals with cuneiform tablets lately found, in which men and events dismissed by the critics into the region of myth come back to take their places on firm historic ground. For example, it had been decided that Chedorlaomer, King of Elam, and Melchizedek, King of Salem, were mythical personages. The Professor shows that both belong to sober history.

The War.

THE protocol for the cessation of hostilities and the establishment of peace between the United States and Spain has been signed. No other step could have been taken by the Spanish Government. The actual publication of the terms in Madrid has produced an impression of painful resignation. The termination of the war is regarded as calamitous. One Republican journal which appeared with black borders has been suspended.

Much of this deepening of the wound is due to the clause relating to the Philippines, where it was hoped Spain would manage to save her sovereignty intact.

The American Secretary of State, Mr. Day, is to be one of the United States Peace Commissioners, but nothing is so far certainly known of the Spanish members of the Commission. Up to the present time the war has cost the United States 150,000,000 dols. President McKinley has charged the French Ambassador to thank his Government for having lent its good offices to facilitate a rapprochement between the two nations at war and thus put an end to the conflict.

We have now to await the signing of the definitive treaty of peace in Paris. The services of peace are rapidly being resumed. It is already announced from Washington that the merchantmen of the world are free to enter and leave Cuban and Puerto Rican ports. Preparations are being made in New York to give the victorious army and fleet a great reception

The Evangelistic Field.

Sergeant Pullinger has been conducting meetings on the beach at Great Yarmouth with much encouragement. From August 23 to September 1 he will be working at Douglas, Isle of Man.

A religious awakening is going on at Summerhill, co. Meath, in connection with the Presbyterian Church, of which Rev. Samuel Craig is the minister. Many have shown by a change of life that they have decided for Christ.

The directors of the Anglo-Indian Society have appointed Rev. Patrick R. McKay, Free Church minister, Prestonpans, to go to India for the purpose of doing evangelistic work in connection with the Society, to observe the various regions occupied by Europeans in India, the numbers settled in them, the provision made for their spiritual wants by other religious agencies, and the definite field to be occupied by the Society. It is expected that this work will occupy three years.

A special Gospel mission, conducted by Mr. William Nobbs, has been held in the Corn Exchange, Hereford. There has been an encouraging attendance at the evening services, especially on Sunday night, when a large number were present to listen to the evangelist's earnest and solemn appeals. One of the addresses was based on 2 Corinthians v., in which he dealt with (1) "Christ's work as the Substitute," (2) "A New Creation," (3) "The life after conversion," (4) "The Christian's work in the light of the judgment seat of Christ," (5) "Assurance of the Home before us." A special feature of the services was the singing conducted by Mr. J. W. Nobbs, of Holyoke, Mass., U.S.A., assisted by a choir.

The Rhondda Valley Welsh Prize Choir sang in Hyde Park to an audience numbering at least 5000 on Sunday last, and subsequently in Hyde Park Hall, where a collection was taken for the wives and children of those suffering from the coal strike. £5 was gathered. On Monday night Mr. Charles Cook gave the first part of his lecture on "The Prisons of the World" in the Park, the Welsh Choir singing for the first half-hour. The meeting was continued in Hyde Park Hall, where Mr. Lloyd Jones, M.P., spoke on behalf of those suffering from the strike. A collection was again taken on behalf of the Welsh fund. The choir were advertised to sing at the Hall on Tuesday, and in Hyde Park on Wednesday and Friday evenings, when the second half of the lecture on "The Prisons of the World" will be given. The choir, which is certainly remarkable for power and precision, are open for engagements. Address, Mr. Joseph Hanans, Myddleton's Temperance Hotel, 80, Clerkenwell-road, E.C.

A correspondent, writing as to the meetings for Scotch fishermen held by Mr. Josiah Nix, says:—"You were quite right when you said in your notes that Mr. Nix's style would take with the Scotch fishermen. He commenced his work at a large gathering in the open air at Fraserburgh, with representatives of the U.P. Church, Free Baptist Church, and others) Dr. Pope had taken the largest hall in the town for Sunday services—one with seating accommodation for 1,000. The open-air address soon took with the people, and the evangelist's adaptability to the fishermen won a large congregation in the morning, while in the evening the hall was crowded; 90 per cent. were men. There has been quite an awakening and a deepening of the spiritual life. There have been some conversions, and others have signed the pledge. Many fishermen declare they have seen nothing like it before, and are sure the fire will spread in the towns and villages from which they come."

While an Association at Rangoon has done excellent work for several years past it has long been apparent that there could be no great advance made, either in Rangoon or any other Burmese cities, until a competent worker was found who could take the lead in its fuller development and organisation. THE AUTHORITY OF CHRIST.

Everything we believe as doctrine, everything we do as duty, and everything we observe as worship, must have this authority—"The Master saith it." All tampering with Scripture as the sole and sufficient rule of faith and practice, and all tampering with conscience as bound by that rule, is a guilty resistance of the authority of Christ, and a perilous thing to our own welfare.—John Angell James (1785-1859).

COMMUNION WITH GOD.

In waiting upon God we must often speak to Him, must take all occasions to speak to Him; and when we have not opportunity for a solemn address to Him, He will accept of a sudden address if it comes from an honest heart. In these David waited on God all day: "Unto Thee, O Lord, do I lift up my soul;" to Thee do I dart it, and all its gracious breathings after Thee. We should, in a holy ejaculation, ask pardon for this sin, strength against this corruption, victory over this temptation, and it shall not be in vain. This is to pray always, and without ceasing.—Matthew Henry (1662-1714).

NO SUBSTITUTE FOR THE GOSPEL.

This "Gospel of the Kingdom" must be preached in all the world, "for a witness unto all nations"; and then, and not till then, shall "the end come." The Gospel must be preached, in its simplicity and purity, in its fulness and sufficiency, unaccompanied by human systems, uncontaminated by earthly lore. Moral essays, and metaphysical disquisitions, and philosophical discussions, and political harangues, will never convert the world; but the Gospel, unmingled, unmutilated, unsophisticated, unabridged—the simple declaration, "God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life"—the "faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation," worthy of all acceptation because it is so important, and because it is so true, "that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners," ay, even "the chief"—nothing but the simple story of redeeming love will ever suffice. Everything else has been employed; but men have been compelled to abandon everything else, and return to this.—Dr. Thomas Raffles (1788-1863).

HOW TO DEAL WITH THOUGHTS.

Poisons may be made medicinal. Let the thoughts of old sins stir up a commotion of anger and hatred.

Let Satan's fiery darts inflame your love rather than your lust, and, like a skilful pilot, make use of the violence of the winds and raging of the sea to further you in your spiritual voyage.

When a holy thought lights suddenly upon you, which hath no connection with any antecedent business in your mind, receive it as a messenger from heaven, and the rather because it is a stranger. You know not but you may entertain an angel—yea, even the Holy Ghost.

As God turns his thoughts of us into promises, so let us turn our thoughts of Him into prayers; and since his regards for us are darted in beams upon us, let them be reflected back upon Him in thankfulness for the gift, and earnestness both for the continuance and increase of such impressions.

When the Spirit renews in our minds a Gospel truth, let us turn it into a present plea, and be God's remembrancer of his own promises, as the Spirit is our remembrancer of Divine truths. We need not doubt some rich fruit of the application at such a season.—Charnock (1628-1680).

The Bishop of Liverpool has addressed a pastoral letter to the clergy of his diocese, with reference to "lawlessness" in the conduct of public worship. By increasing "lawlessness" the Bishop means that things are commonly reported to be said and done in many churches at this time which cannot be reconciled with the Book of Common Prayer. He believes, however, that this lawlessness is not to be found in a great majority of the clergy of his diocese, and even where it exists he is willing to believe that it arises from excess of zeal, and not from any deliberate intention to injure the Church of England. Nevertheless, the Bishop reminds his clergy of some things which have been declared illegal, and mentions others which are objectionable and dangerous. From all such things he requests that they will loyally abstain.

THE PRAYER.

1. ITS INDIVIDUALITY—"ME":—
   - a. Abraham asked for himself before he asked for Sodom. (Gen. xv. 2.)
   - b. This principle is in the New Testament. (See John xv. 7, 19.)
2. THE CRY FOR ENLARGEMENT:—
   - a. There is the enlargement of wisdom. (1 Kings iv. 29.)
   - b. There is the enlargement of place. (Ps. xviii. 19.)
   - c. There is the enlargement of heart. (Ps. cxix. 32.)
   - d. There is the enlargement of spirit. (2 Cor. vi. 11-13.)
3. THE CRY FOR JEHOVAH'S HAND:—
   - a. Salvation by the hand. (Isa. lix. 1.)
   - b. His protection by the hand. (Ex. xxxiii. 22.)
   - c. The power of his hand. (Isa. xl. 12.)
   - d. The glorious future of his hand. (Ps. xvi. 11.)
   - e. The security of his hand. (John x. 28.)
   - f. The blessed service of his hand. (Ezek. xxxvii. 1.)
   - g. The abiding rest of his hand. (Cant. xi. 6.)
4. THE CRY FOR KEEPING:—
   - a. Keep me, David asked. (Ps. xvii. 8.)
   - b. He will keep in the promise. (1 Sam. ii. 9.)
   - c. His last desire was for this. (John xvii. 11.)
   - d. The peace of God keeps. (Phil. iv. 7.)
   - e. He is able to keep from stumbling. (Jude xxiv. R.V.)
5. THE ANSWER CAME:—
   "God granted him that which he requested."

NOTE.—It was to the God of Israel he called, that is, God of Covenant. In all this we perhaps see why he was "more honourable than his brethren." The word honourable has this meaning amongst others, "Accepted in countenance or gracious." This was said of Naaman before his cleansing: what would be said after? (2 Kings v. 1.) The honourable are at the head. (Isa. ix. 15.) Shall we who pray in secret be lacking in what the world calls manliness because we spend time in prayer? Then have we the promise. He will bestow more abundant honour on that part which lacked. (1 Cor. xii. 24.)

Notes and Comments.

THE bountiful summer, now fast mellowing into autumn, is eloquent of the goodness of the Creator in providing food for man and beast. The harvest festivals that will soon be held all over the country should strike a special note of gratitude, and sound a call to a more generous service. Seldom have such crops been vouchsafed to this country. "The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof," and its fruitfulness is a proof of his love and care for his creatures. Those who accept the bounty without a thought of the Giver are unworthy of it. Gratitude should issue in unselfishness, and plenty in heartfelt praise. We are ready enough to complain during years of scarcity and leanness. The years of plenty should be marked by an overflowing recognition of the Providence who provides enough for all—if men but do their ty to one another.

The desire of charitable donors to maintain a modest anonymity is commendable, and should be respected as far as possible. A correspondent describes a difficulty he has had in inducing a society to which he contributes to acknowledge his gifts in the form he desires. He pointed out the inherent weakness in the system adopted as affording facilities to a dishonest clerk, but it was not until he demanded the return of his contribution that his wish was complied with. We do not imagine that such a hitch would often arise, but, on the face of it, it seems only reasonable that a donor's wish in such a case should be respected. The difficulty may be obviated in a simple way, by acknowledging subscriptions with four or five letters of the alphabet, chosen by the donor, in addition to the "progressive numbers" adopted by the Society's officials.

On the other hand, donors should exercise discrimination in selecting their pseudonyms. "A Friend," "Anon," and other hackneyed terms should be avoided, as it is not uncommon for several of these to be received at once, each with a gift of the same amount. Care and tact on both sides would tend to safeguard the interests alike of the societies and donors, by removing temptation from weak and designing employés, and would inspire confidence in those who support missionary and philanthropic work. The small extra trouble is of no account in the face of these desirable ends. It is important that our "good be not evil spoken of," and that spiritual work should be conducted on business lines.

The Boston Congregationalist contains an article on the "Sin of Neglecting the Health." It calls attention to the need of physical exercise and training. It is well known that the Y.M.C.A. in most of their centres throughout the world have made provision for the necessary development of the body. It must be true that a strong, vigorous physical nature is a great aid to the Christian worker who has devoted himself body, soul, spirit to the highest service of Christ in serving his fellowmen. Physical debility is a great hindrance to the energetic discharge of the many demands of a consecrated Christian life.

We make a sad mistake when we suppose that, so long as we try to be good and do good, God does not care about the state of our health. Indeed this notion is positively sinful. Quite apart from the fact that physical weakness hinders us from attaining the highest usefulness, or even the highest degree of moral and spiritual excellence possible to us, God has told us plainly that our bodies are his temples. He would have them kept in a condition appropriate to his own indwelling and use. He desires to avail Himself of their efficiency. To neglect them is to disregard his commands.

The present holiday season should do much to renew Christian workers, in body as well as spirit, and thus help to qualify them for future wholehearted service!

There are few trials of faith more persistent, and none that seem to rise from a higher source, than the sense of the inequalities in human lot. The difference between the starting-point, the environment, the opportunities social and spiritual, of one man and another, are startling and painful. On many believing hearts this problem weighs with the force of a nightmare. The great source of relief is in a rehabilitation of the Scriptural doctrine of the Divine judgment on human life. We must remember that if there is inequality here and now, it will be all redressed when the issues of life are summed-up by the all-seeing eye and the all-loving heart of God. Every man will be justly dealt with in the end. In the perfect balance of Him who "weigheth the actions of bad men" all these inequalities that vex and try us will disappear. There is comfort and inspiration in this thought.

The astonishing reign of terrorism in South London is a terrible revelation of the results of overcrowding and unsanitary social conditions. The police system seems helpless to deal with the evil or to run the culprits to their dens, and peaceable citizens are afraid to walk unprotected in many parts, even in broad daylight. It is a clear call to deal with the root causes of this latest development of ruffianism. Civilisation, as such, is clearly no remedy for the brute instincts that slumber in the human race at its lowest. For, as the Daily News says:—

> The exposure of realities, as far as it has gone, is a rude rebuke to our optimism as to the state of the poor. We have only to use our eyes and ears in any quarter of London to know that thousands of children are as surely trained for ruffianism and crime as their betters are trained for industry or the professions.

All this is an eloquent commentary on the rosy views of human nature that are written and sometimes preached in these days of revolt against Puritan notions.

The disastrous effect of industrial disputes is impressively illustrated in the official report and balance-sheet of the great engineering dispute of last year. In addition to the expenditure of a sum of £181,000 contributed by the public, there was a loss of some £4,680,000 in wages to all the trades concerned. This does not touch the losses entailed by the masters and by the general business public indirectly, these being immense, but difficult to calculate. It is clear that strikes and lockouts are ruinously expensive methods of settling disagreements between master and man. It is significant, and a little humiliating, to find Mr. Barnes, the representative of the labour party, confessing that one of the causes of the outbreak was the high state of efficiency of the organisations on either side and a desire to test each other's strength. "The sight of means to do ill deeds makes ill deeds done." It is, however, good to hear that all concerned now look forward to a lengthened period of industrial peace in the engineering world. The pity is that the peace should ever have been disturbed.

> He remains at his vast offices in the City-road till eight or nine p.m., lunching there—usually dining there—absorbed in the myriad details of his world-wide business. He is so indifferent to social success that he never had been at a dinner party in London in his life up to two years ago; had never been in a theatre in London; had never, in short, gone outside his business and his office; and even now he has to be dragged unwillingly to any entertainment. He remains as simple in tastes and habits as ever he was.

Such is the description of Sir Thomas Lipton, given in our versatile contemporary, M.A.P., and a similar instance of simplicity of living is found in the person of Rev. Dr. Corfe, the new Bishop of Corea:—

> Dr. Corfe's work among the bluejackets was instantly and phenomenally successful. He lived the life of the A.B.'s, even giving up his cabin at night to sling his hammock in the men's quarters. There was no humbug about him; both men and officers were quick to recognise the fact, and Corfe became the most loved and valued naval chaplain of our generation. He is probably the only prelate in the world who has no bed, table, chairs, or, indeed, furniture of any kind. He sits to his meals, and to do his reading and writing, on the floor with his back to the wall. He sleeps in his hammock, the companion of his busy and adventurous life. His food is of the simplest. Needless to say, Dr. Corfe is a bachelor. His diocese contains 13,000,000 people, and includes, as well as Corea, the province of Shing King in China.

Both men are embodiments of the injunction—"What thy hand findeth to do, do with thy might," a much-needed precept in these days of shoddy and veneer.

It is always encouraging to find in the great labour associations of our country evidence that they are not divorced from the guiding and ennobling influence of the Christian faith. Many of the members returned to Parliament by the labour vote are professed followers of the Saviour. At the Labour Exhibition at the Crystal Palace the Bishop of Ripon was chosen to give the opening address. At the meeting of the Labour Association two days later, Mr. J. M. Ludlow spoke upon "The Joyousness of Labour," and insisted that a workman is never at his best until his work becomes a delight—play, but the play of the good player, the play that is itself work, beauty, honest, the best that a man can give, without shirking or shamming, in the sense of those Divine words once uttered by the Saviour of mankind, "My Father worketh, and I work." May such counsels prevail in increasing measure among our working men.

It is disquieting to hear that through our lack of workers in the mission fields, the Roman Catholics are reaping the harvest sown by Protestant missionaries in Corea and Manchuria. Such is the emphatic testimony of Dr. Ross, of the Presbyterian Church in Manchuria, and Mr. R. T. Turley, of the British and Foreign Bible Society. Thousands of converts and inquirers who have been pleading in vain for teachers are passing over to the care of Romish priests at work in the district. While we are fighting Popish tendencies at home, are the fresh fields sown by the hand of devoted pioneers to be delivered over to the same tendencies abroad? Here is a loud and earnest demand for more labourers to go forth to the Lord's vineyard.

The pilgrimage to Lourdes still continues with its former fascination; as many as thirteen trains full of pilgrims left Paris one day last week. The English-speaking pilgrims are more numerous than in past years. Nearly every diocese in Great Britain and the United States is said to be represented, including the parish of St. Bernard, Liverpool, in which church a facsimile of the grotto and basilica is to be erected. The exposures made have had no effect. Like other once frequented but now forsaken shrines, Lourdes will have its day, and devotees will weary of it, or a new wonder will arise. Very likely none of the pilgrims have made any inquiry into the reality of the things said to be done at Lourdes, and company after company will continue to go until they are caught by some other pretence.

Mrs. Josephine Butler and her coadjutors have always contended that by placing power over fallen women in the hands of the police, power was also inevitably given to them over virtuous women which was liable to be misused at times. Evidence of this crops up again and again in most unlikely quarters. Even the Daily Telegraph, which has defended the Indian cantonment regulations, is a witness. Its "own correspondent" at Berlin said, in a letter on "Lawlessness Abroad," that > Respectable women are seized, on suspicion of prostitution, and detained in the common cells amidst the lowest criminals, simply on the independent testimony of an incompetent constable.

That correspondent may yet come to know that such outrages are sometimes committed where there is no "suspicion" at all, but with perfect knowledge that the victims are quite innocent. Meanwhile, he tells us that the Berlin police are not much trusted by the citizens to do their proper duties. No, for the system spreads corruption all round.

"When fathers tell their sons that a racecourse is a place to be avoided at all costs, we may easily foresee that the downfall of the turf is an event which, though long delayed, is certain to happen." So says the Daily Telegraph, and at the same time supplies an overwhelming amount of evidence to show that the turf is as bad as every kind of sin can make it. Fathers now have, if they never had before, abundant reason for warning their sons against it. Will this revelation have any influence with men in high places who are the great patrons and supporters of a sport "which may be paid for too dearly at the price of national disgrace"? Will the Daily Telegraph itself, which has done as much hitherto as any contemporary to support the turf, have the courage to maintain this new attitude after the "silly season" is over? It is stated that a leading bookmaker will not allow his own children to follow either his pleasure or his way of gain, and a sport which he thus condemns ought neither to be fostered by princes and peers of the realm nor supported by the Press.

American shop-girls, we are told, are beginning to tire of the confinement and overwork to which they are subjected, and show a tendency to prefer the higher ranks of domestic service. This is said to be partly due to the kinder treatment they are receiving from many mistresses, who have found by experience that the most intelligent domestic worker, even if a little higher-priced than the other, is of far more value. The New York Herald, commenting on this movement, remarks that their former unwillingness to face domestic service was partly due to a false pride and the desire to have some evening leisure to themselves. It would be a widespread blessing if a similar solution of the growing problem could be found in this country. This can only be by mutual concession, and a willingness on the part of mistresses to grant some privileges to those under them. Many housekeepers are prepared to do so, and there are thousands of respectable young women to whom the benefits of a good home would more than counterbalance such social disadvantages as would remain.

By the kindness of a friend we have examined the Intercession Paper for August of the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ. Among the topics set down for intercession are these: That there may be daily celebrations in all cathedrals, etc.; that the Holy Eucharist may be generally accepted as the chief Sunday service; that faithful and Catholic-minded bishops and priests may be appointed to vacant sees and benefices. From the general we pass to the particular, and notice requests for "guidance" for a squire, a political dissenter, and one tempted to secede; also, as regards "full belief in the doctrines of the Church," for one losing faith, a godmother, an Anabaptist, and the bishops and clergy! Ireland is not overlooked, as this clause shows: "That the preface inserted in 1877 in the Irish Prayer Book may be withdrawn, and what has been lost touching the Catholic faith may be restored." The "priests-associate" of the Confraternity will, no doubt, continue their solicitude for those who are out of the Catholic way; but they may as well know that others are praying that God will frustrate their Romish intriguing, and bring them to such a mind as shall enable them to worship Him in spirit and in truth.

The question of the antiquity of the art of writing among the Israelites is an important one in view of the attitude of many of the higher critics towards the Old Testament records. In view of this problem it is interesting to hear of some specimens of old Egyptian stationery just acquired by a museum in Berlin. One of them is a palette or inkstand ascribed approximately to the period of the 18th or 19th dynasty—about 1500 B.C. It is made of wood, and has two compartments, an upper one provided with holes for red and black ink, and a lower one containing three reed pens. Some of the ink still remains in a dry condition, after a period of 3400 years. The significant point is that at this time the Israelites were in Goshen, and that Moses was not born till a century later. Being brought up at court, instructed in all the lore of the Egyptians, it is clear that he had the fullest opportunity of learning the art of writing. This fully meets the objection, which can no longer be maintained, that the art was unknown to his nation till long after the wilderness wanderings.

Readers of the Reformation story know how intense was the hatred of every free Protestant country entertained by the Papacy; and it is well to remind ourselves that such is still the case. Germany was, in Luther's days, heartily detested, so were England and Scotland. The darling of the Papacy was always the nation that lent itself most readily to the guiding minds at Rome. The sympathy of the Pope with Spain in the recent war has been unmistakeable. English liberty is hateful because it is liberty, and is the child of the Bible. The loss of our religion would be also the loss of all that is best in our political and social life, and has made us powerful and respected among the nations. We are dealing with our nation's enemies when we are resisting priests and their myrmidons; patriotism as well as religion requires our efforts.

If there are indirect methods of propagating erroneous religious ideas, there are also indirect methods of counteracting them. A guide over a celebrated ecclesiastical building, to which visitors greatly resort, may tell his tale in the spirit of servile worship of the past or as a freeman who lives in a brighter day. We were recently made glad by the intelligent and able manner in which a guide unrolled to a large party the history of a venerable pile, pointing out the frauds and shams of some of the monks of olden time, the grasping authority of the Popes, and the unreality of much that passed for genuine religion. At the same time he reverently recalled the services of the worthy dead, and noted events which had marked for good the history of the country. A staff of well-informed, capable Protestant guides at each of our cathedrals and abbey churches might do no little service to the truth in these days of backsliding.

The True Holiday.

THE connection between religion and holidays is apt to be lost sight of, but if there had been no holy days there would have been no holidays. Apart altogether from the fact that the heathen and Jewish festivals gave rise to special days of rest, the spread of the kindly practice of holiday-giving is quite recent, and is owing to the spirit of Christianity. Yet many of those who avail themselves of the privilege it has brought them, sneer at the Christian religion, and wonder what men can see in it. If there were nothing else in it but holidays, that alone would be a powerful argument in its favour. How many holidays would atheism have won for us?

But, aside from this consideration, the true holiday is the holy-day. We know enough of the way in which some spend holidays to know that many a slip will be made in life which will not easily be recovered. Leisure may mean sinning, and sin generally means suffering. Some will break out for the first time and never be broken in again; some will continue in wrongdoing, for the holidays are often the devil's best chance. At other times life's needs keep them labouring, but when time is their own then comes the temptation. It would have been better for some if they had never had holidays at all. They come back with bitter memories, with aching heads, shamed hearts, and empty purses, and infinitely worse fitted for the battle of life.

As we have heard men whose faces bore the marks of "rapid living" and dissipation, say "I am going for a change to put me right," we have thought that what they needed was not so much "a change" as to be changed; not holidays so much as holy days of confession, repentance, and reformation. Then would come the days of the clear eyes, and steady nerves, and restful mind, and happy life; but not till then.

There are others, too, who, beyond rest and change, need actual inspiration. An aching head can be cured by sea breezes, but a man who is sick at heart needs something more to enable him to return to take arms against his troubles, and, by opposing, end them. Need we say that such seasons have come to a good many among the crowds who keep holiday? They are away seeking rest and change to cure them. The cure lies not there—it lies in the quiet chamber, and the upward look, and the leaning upon God. Then, let the man come down with his soul in perfect peace, because his mind is stayed on God; let him go where he will, for the blue of the sky, and the sparkle of the ocean, and the waving trees and verdant fields will be as God's ministers unto him.

Drinking the Cup.

John xviii. 1-14.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

IN our Master's arrest the one feature which stands out in unique splendour is its voluntariness. He went into the garden "knowing all things that should come upon Him." Even at the last moment He might have evaded the kiss of the traitor, and the binding thong with which Malchus sought to manacle his gracious hands. The spell of his intrinsic nobleness and glory, which had flung his captors to the ground, might have held them there; the power that could heal the wounded ear might have destroyed with equal ease the entire band, as Elijah did.

The reason for all this hardly needs explaining. His life and death were not merely a sacrifice, but a self-sacrifice. He freely gave Himself up for us all. Each believer may dare to appropriate the words of the Apostle: "He loved me, and gave Himself for me." It was through the Eternal Spirit that He offered Himself without spot to God. It was from his own invincible love that He gave Himself for the Church, his Bride. "From beginning to end the moving spring of all his actions was deliberate self-devotedness to the good of men, and the fulfilment of God's will, for these are equivalents. And his death as the crowning act of this career was to be conspicuously a death embodying and exhibiting the spirit of self-sacrifice." Let us learn:—

I. The Supreme Nobility of Surrender to the Evitable.—It is, of course, most noble, when the martyr goes to his death without a murmur of complaint; allowing his enemies to wreak their vengeance without recrimination or threatening; bowing the meek head to the block; extending the hand to the hungry flame. He has no alternative but to die; there are no legions waiting under arms to obey his summons; no John of Gaunt to stand beside him, as beside Wycliffe, to see him fairly tried and insist on his acquittal. Then, there is nothing for it but to evince the patience and gentleness of Christ in being led as a lamb to the slaughter.

But though this spectacle stirs the hearts of men, there is one still more illustrious. When the sufferer bends to a fate which he might easily avoid, but confronts for the sake of others. The former is submission to the inevitable, this to the evitable. That is bearing a yoke which is imposed by superior authority; this taking a yoke which might be evaded without blame, as judged by the tribunal of public opinion. And this is the sublimest spectacle on which the eye of man or angel can rest; for thus the sacrifice of Christ finds its noblest

COUNTERPART AND FULFILMENT.

When a missionary, with ample means and loving friends, deliberately spends among squalid and repulsive conditions, the precious years which might have been passed among congenial society and luxurious comfort in the homeland; chooses a lot from which nature inevitably shrinks instead of that to which every conclusion but one points; and stays at his post, though his return, so far from being resented, would actually be favoured by all whose opinion is of weight—this is a voluntary submission to the evitable.

When a home pastor stays by his poor flock because they need him so sorely, and sets his face towards grinding poverty and irksome toil when the city church invites him to a larger stipend and wealthier surroundings—this again is a voluntary surrender to the evitable.

When a wealthy bachelor is willing to forego the ease and quiet of his beautiful home in order to welcome the orphans of his deceased brother, who might have been sent to some charitable institution or cast on strangers, that they may be beneath his personal supervision, and have a better chance in life—this again is voluntary submission to the evitable.

In each such case, it is not inevitable that the cross should be borne, and the hands yielded to the binding thong. The tongue of scandal could hardly find cause for criticism if the easier path were chosen. Perhaps the soul hardly realises the kindredness of its resolve with the loftiest that this world has seen. But it is superlatively beautiful, nevertheless. And let it never be forgotten, that nothing short of this will satisfy the standard of Christ. No Christian has a right to use all his rights. None can claim immunity from the duty of seeking the supreme good of others, though it involve the supreme cost to himself.

II. The Recognition of God's Will in His Permissions.—In the bitter anguish which had immediately preceded the arrest, our Lord had repeatedly referred to his cup. "If this cup," He said, "may not pass from Me, except I drink it, thy will be done." The cup evidently referred to all the anguish caused to his holy nature in being numbered among the trangressors, and having to bear the sin of the world. It is enough for us to know that, whilst there was much that cried, "Back!" there was more that cried, "On!"—and that He chose, from the profoundest depths of his nature, to do the Father's will, to execute his part in the compact into which they had entered before the worlds were made, and to drink to the dregs the cup which his Father had placed in his hands.

But here we note that to all appearances the cup was mingled, prepared, and presented by the malignity and hate of man. The High Priests had long resolved to put Him to death, because his success with the people, his fresh and living comments on the law, his opposition to their hypocrisies and pretensions had

EXASPERATED THEM TO MADNESS.

Judas also seemed to have had a conspicuous share in his discovery and arrest. Had we been left to our unaided reasonings we might have supposed that the most bitter ingredients of his cup had been supplied by the ingratitude of his own, the implacable rancour of the priests, and the treachery of Judas; but, see, He recognises none but the Father—it is always the Father, always the cup which the Father had given.

There have been times in our lives when we may have been tempted to distinguish between God's appointments and permissions, and to speak of the former as being manifestly his will for us, whilst we suspended our judgment about the latter, and questioned if we were authorised in accounting them as being equally from Heaven. But such distinctions are fatal to peace. Our souls were kept in constant perturbation, as we accounted ourselves the shuttlecock of rival powers, now God's, now man's. And we ended in ruling God out of more than half our life, and regarding ourselves as the hapless prey of strong and malicious forces to which we were sold, as Joseph to the Ishmaelites.

A deeper reading of Scripture has led us to a truer conclusion. There is no such distinction there. What God permits is equally his will as what He appoints. Joseph tells his brethren that it was not they who sent him to Egypt, but God. David listens meekly to Shimei's shameful words, because he felt that God allowed them to be spoken. And here Jesus refuses to see the hand of his foes in his sufferings, but passes beyond the hand which bore the cup to his lips to the Father who was permitting it to be presented, and reposed absolutely in the choice for Him of one who loved Him with a love that was before the foundation of the world.

O sufferer! whether by those strokes, which, like sickness or bereavement, seem to come direct from heaven, or by those which, like malicious speeches or oppressive acts, seem to emanate from man, look up into the face of God, and say, "My Father, this is thy will for me; thine angels would have delivered me had it been best. But since they have not interposed, I read thy choice for thy child, and I am satisfied. It is sweet to drink the cup which thy hands have prepared."

III. The Deep Law of Substitution.—Some of the rabble crowd had probably shown signs of a disposition to arrest some of Christ's followers. He, therefore, interfered, and reminded them of their own admission, that He was the object of their midnight raid, and bade them allow these to go their way. Is it surprising that the evangelist generalises this act, finding in it an illustration of his Master's ceaseless interposition on behalf of his own—that of those whom the Father had given Him He should lose none?

In brief, this scene affords a conspicuous and striking illustration of the GREAT DOCTRINE OF SUBSTITUTION.

As the Good Shepherd steps forth to the front and sheathes the swords of his foes in his own breast, while He demands the release of the cowering flock, He is doing on a small scale what He did once and for ever on Calvary; when exposing Himself to the penalty due to sin, and braving the concentrated antagonism of a broken law, the drawn sword of inviolable justice, the sharpness of death, the shame of the cross, and the humiliation of the grave, He said, "If ye seek Me, let these go their way."

Christ sheltered us without reckoning the cost to Himself. He stood to the front, and bore the extreme brunt of all that was to be borne. He substituted his suffering for ours, his wounds for our pain, his death for our sins. If you are fearing the just recompense of your sins, like a band of arresting soldiers lurking in the dark shadows and threatening to drag you forth to pay the uttermost farthing, take heart; Jesus has met, and will meet them for you. Listen to his majestic voice, saying, "Take Me, but let this soul, who clings to the skirts of my robe, go his way." He is arrested, and led away; thou art free—that in thy freedom thou shouldest give thyself to be his very slave.

This scene had a deeper significance than any of those knew who participated in it. There are depths indeed in it which no mortal can penetrate or expound. We can only see hints and suggestions gleaming through all the confusion and tumult, of the realisation and fulfilment of the Divine intention, that God Himself, in the Person of Jesus, should, by his obedience and grace, submit to the supreme forfeiture of sin, releasing us to go our way into the supreme felicity and liberty of the sons of God.

The Contemplation of Christ.—The devout contemplation of Christ's example sweetly insinuates into us his spirit, and impresses his likeness. We are attracted by it into the love and practice of holiness and goodness by the force of a Divine fascination. We love Him, not only for his adorable excellencies, but for the great love wherewith He loved us, and gave Himself for us. By loving we are led to look on Him, and by looking to imitate. Love always longs to be in the presence of its object, and assimilated to it—its counterpart, its other self, one soul in two bodies. And "he who is joined to the Lord is one spirit."—Dr. John Leifchild (1780-1862).

Doncaster Races.—The friends of the Racecourse Mission, including Mr. Josiah Nix, are expecting to muster in strong force at Doncaster the first week in September for Christian work during the races. Gospel meetings will be held in the town market place, as well as on the course. The races extend from the Tuesday to Friday, the cup day being Wednesday. Gospel portions and other Christian literature for distribution will be gladly received, and should be addressed, carriage paid, to Mr. O. L. Heatley, Priory-place Wesleyan Chapel, Doncaster. Help in money for the large expenses of the work should be sent to Mr. Heatley, the King's Own Mission, Kennington-park, London, S.W.

Hop-Pickers in Kent.—Among the thousands who work in the hop gardens of Kent during September the Hop-Pickers' Mission has, for upwards of thirty years, been toiling every year, and many have been the pleasing signs of blessing attending the work. Help is needed to enable us to place our missionaries in the field. Parcels of Testaments, Gospel portions, and illustrated tracts will be very welcome. Boots and clothing are acceptable for the shoeless and thinly-clad. Parcels should be prepaid, per S.E.R., to Rev. J. J. Kendon, Marden Station. Contributions to Rev. J. J. Kendon, Goudhurst, Kent, or to the writer,

The Northfield Conference.

JUDGING from the copious and sympathetic reports in the New York Daily Tribune, the many friends attending Mr. Moody's conference of Christian workers at Northfield had a most profitable and enjoyable time. The meetings were continued this year for three weeks (July 29 to August 18), but the interest seems to have been as varied as ever and well maintained to the last. As we have already noted, both the chief Conference speakers were from this side of the sea—Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, of Tollington Park, and Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, of Notting Hill. These brethren have each visited Northfield three times, and their expositions of Scripture teaching were heard with the utmost zest and attention. We furnish some notes of the earlier proceedings, culled from our New York contemporary, reserving an account of the later gatherings for another issue.

The conference opened quietly on the evening of July 29, with Mr. Moody as president, Mr. Sankey as leader of the praise, and a large audience. Mr. Sankey, Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins, and other friends sang frequently during the convention. Mr. Campbell Morgan gave the opening message on "The Law of Revelation," from John xvi. 12: "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now." God's revelation (he said) depends upon man's capacity to understand. It is God's will that the whole spiritual sphere should be revealed. This will be done when the truth which has been received is obeyed. He gave several incidents from his pastoral experience to show that Christians who are not obedient to the voice of God and who are not living at peace with their fellowmen cannot find a blessing.

Sunday, July 31, was a full day of privilege and testimony, many being in attendance, including numbers from the surrounding districts. Much interest was excited by accounts of Christian work among American soldiers in the camps and at the seat of war, especially the recital by Major Whittle of some personal experiences of the work, in which he had much blessing among the men to record. It was stated by Mr. Moody that the Major had come back with malaria and rheumatism. A contribution was made at the evening meeting towards sending workers and books to the camps and the front. In the morning Mr. Macgregor preached on Christ's intercessory work, and what it accomplishes in the lives of believers. During the day Mr. Campbell Morgan preached two sermons on Peter's fall and his recovery, full of practical teaching and instruction for believers.

On Monday, August 1, Mr. Campbell Morgan preached on Achan's sin, making reference incidentally to the struggle between SPAIN AND AMERICA.

"I believe that the corruption and misgovernment of Spain have come to a crisis, and that God has put the sword into the hands of the sons of the Pilgrim Fathers to bring this corrupt rule to an end." In his sermon Mr. Morgan related an interview he recently had with his friend Mr. Hall Caine, author of "The Christian," who said that in writing that book he meant to show that Christianity was a failure. "You do not mean to say that Jesus was a failure?" "No," he said, "but the Churches which bear his name are not Christian. Look at England. We call ourselves a Christian nation. Take two of the teachings of Christ at random, 'Resist not evil' and 'Take no thought for the morrow.' Does England obey either teaching? Is she not armed to the teeth for the very purpose of resisting evil? And so with anxiety. Are not those that bear the name of Jesus anxious and troubled? The Churches have departed from the teaching of their Founder."

Mr. Morgan did not quote the sentiment to approve or condemn it, but simply to show what a man of letters thought of the Christianity of to-day. He was not afraid, he added, of blatant atheism, but he feared the practical atheism inside the Church.

In an address on "Backsliding," Mr. Macgregor said that the beginning of it was the want of obedience to the will of God, and the secret of its continuance was lack of penitence. At the evening meeting Mr. Morgan exhorted the unsaved in a powerful address on "Cumbering the Ground."

Tuesday, August 2, was a day of varied interest, like most of the others, but perhaps the army element was predominant. Mr. Moody pleaded for consideration for the soldiers engaged in active warfare, and read a letter he had got that day from two little girls. "We send three dollars to help send the Gospel to the soldiers, and hope it will help them. We have earned it selling sweet peas, and are also going to send some money to the fresh air fund and to the missionaries."

Mr. Fitt read several deeply encouraging reports from army workers as to the distribution of books and evangelistic work among the soldiers. Major Whittle told some as to the power of the Gospel message to change hearts in these times of crisis. He said, "It is the opportunity of our generation, in a double point of view, in reaching the young men of our country that have been separated so largely, in many cases, from the influence of the Church, and bringing North and South together in the bonds of Christian love."

Next day the point of specially exciting social interest was shifted from the soldiers to the poor children of New York and other great cities in connection with the fresh air fund. Mr. Moody very pathetically pleaded the cause of these weary city-bound little folk, and said that although he had given away nearly every cent he could spare for the work among soldiers, yet he would be good for something towards the fresh air fund. Two days later special offerings were made on this behalf, and a very considerable sum was collected.

The same day the sermonic interest gravitated between Mr. Morgan and Mr. Macgregor, the former speaking on "The Severity of Love," as illustrated by God's disciplinary dealings with Jacob, while the latter gave a very searching, burning address on "Our God is a Consuming Fire." Further addresses or exhortations were given at different hours of the day by Rev. J. Torrey, on "The Holy Spirit," by Tamil David, the Indian evangelist, Dr. Dixon, and Mr. Henry Varley. Tamil David's talks were appreciated by many, and invariably dealt with the phases of the Spirit-filled life.

On the morning of August 4, Mr. Moody read out from The Tribune some headlines as to the possibility of an early cessation of the war, and the people joyously applauded. Mr. Moody went on to state that on the Sunday he had asked for 1300 dollars to help on Gospel work among the soldiers and sailors. He had since received an additional 1100 dollars, making in all 2400 dollars to be devoted to this purpose.

The principal addresses on Friday, August 5, were as usual by the two London pastors. Mr. Macgregor's theme was "Loosing the Prisoners"; he dwelt on the need of deliverance from the power of evil habit, and on the continuance of the deliverance which God gives in the path of faith and obedience. Mr. Morgan gave lessons from the incident of healing the man with the withered hand.

The second Sunday of the Conference showed no falling-off in interest or attendance. Speaking of the latter, The Tribune correspondent says:—

Every building seems to be full. Marquand Hall, East Hall, Stone Hall, Skinner Gymnasium, Weston Hall, Hillside House, Betsey Moody Cottage, the Jackson, the Revell, the Nina, the Westview, and the Hotel Northfield are all crowded, while visitors by the scores are boarding in private houses and on near-by farms, and between two and three hundred more are to be found in tents on the seminary grounds and at the Young Men's Christian Association camp, in the woods, half a mile away. With all the crowds, however, there is an air of quiet and rest that makes the Sabbath at Northfield unique.

The whole day was filled up with meetings, embracing addresses both by Mr. Morgan and Mr. Macgregor on "The Healing of Naaman" and its present-day lessons, a talk by Tamil David, a Christian Endeavour rally, etc.

Monday, August 8, was declared to be a rest day, and the only morning speaker was Mr. Moody himself. He devoted nearly two hours to the unfolding of his favourite topics, The Bible and How to Study It; How to deal with enquirers; and How to make sermons. He had one of the largest week-day audiences of the Conference, notwithstanding his injunction to spend the time in rest or recreation.

Women and Protestantism.—Referring to our recent quotation from Lady Wimborne's letter on Ritualism, and our appeal for the starting of some movement for the enlightenment of Englishwomen, a correspondent desires to draw attention to the work of the Women's Protestant Union, which exists for the very purpose desired. The president of the W.P.U. is Mrs. Arbuthnot, Plawhatch, East Grinstead, Sussex.

A Schoolboys' Camp.

THE first camp promoted by the Committee for "Free Church Camps for Schoolboys" was held at West Runton, near Cromer. The movement is suggested by the "Universities' Camps for Public Schools," but attempts more especially to reach the boys of Free Church families. There is no rivalry between new and old, rather gratitude on the one side for constant kindness upon the other, but the success of the recent venture has shown its value. Most of the details were closely copied from the older camps, the only important change being a considerably higher standard of age. There were fifteen officers (with but two exceptions from Oxford or Cambridge) and fifty boys from various schools, of whom the Leys, Mill Hill, and Bishop's Stortford were most numerously represented.

Many small difficulties at one time or another threatened the success of the camp, but boys and officers all worked so loyally together that even four days of intermittent wet weather made little difference to the enjoyment. The work of the camp was all done by the boys themselves with the aid of one soldier-cook. The sports' day was most successful; the cricket team did not lose a match, and the Camp Chronicle found universal favour even among the victims of its personalities. Mr. Evan Spicer, as commandant, made everything go.

Of the spiritual work (mainly through the addresses of the chaplain and officers at the morning and evening prayers) it is not easy to speak with careless assurance. But no one who heard the chaplain (Rev. Arnold Foster, of Hankow, L.M.S.) could doubt that though the work was quiet, it was very deep and strong. The boys were deeply impressed, and when they grow up to become the leaders of their churches we shall see the results of "camp" in past, and the rest we shall see hereafter.

Scripture Readers in Ireland.

IN a recent sermon preached in Dublin on behalf of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland, Rev. W. D. Austin said:—

"We are the most emigrating people in the world. During the last fifty years some three millions of people have gone forth from this country to all parts of the world. Can we hope that many of those carried with them the glad tidings of God's love and mercy to sinners? Had they opportunities of hearing the old, old story of Jesus and his love for themselves? If not—why not? It was as an effort to do our duty as Christians to our own countrymen that this Society was founded now more than seventy-six years ago. The rules which the founders drew up for the guidance and government of the Society show that they were endued with the wisdom which is from above—first pure, then peacable. The Bible is the only book used by the evangelists in their work amongst the people; there must be no controversy, calculated to stir up strife or angry feelings. The readers are strictly forbidden to introduce any questions between rival churches and clashing creeds; they are to confine themselves to the one great subject—Jesus Christ, the only Saviour of sinners.

"This society is literally for Ireland. The veteran secretary, whom God has raised up to guide the work, is always ready to send an experienced reader to itinerate in any district where open doors are reported to exist, and these itinerating evangelists are directed to call upon the clergymen of every parish and district through which they pass. I have no doubt of your support for this good work, which I can from many years' experience declare to be the best spiritual agency—and the one best calculated to merit the spiritual needs and circumstances of our country—existing amongst us."

The Dukhobortsi.—The High Commissioner of Cyprus having agreed to accept £15 per head—man, woman, and child—instead of £20, the necessary amount (£16,500) has been guaranteed by members of the Society of Friends, so as to enable the 1100 Dukhobortsi who are at Batum to leave for Cyprus. Mr. Wilson Sturge, of Poti, on the Black Sea, formerly British Consul, has placed his services at the disposal of the committee with a view to assisting in the settlement, and has left London for Cyprus, vid Marseilles. Meanwhile the Colonial Office has telegraphed the necessary permission for the new colonists to land.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, August 28.

"My very heart."—Philemon 12 (R.V.).

THIS fragment of ancient letter-writing gives us a model of the way in which our commonest or most prosaic dealings, and our letters, even on business matters, may breathe Christ's spirit. It also illustrates the relation in which we stand to Jesus Christ. What Onesimus was to Paul and Philemon combined, that we are to our Lord.

What was Onesimus to Paul? His child, whom he had begotten in his bonds. He had probably been discovered by some of his companions in the purlieus of Rome, where criminals concealed themselves from justice, and abandoned characters gave vent to the wildest passions. Or, having heard that the Apostle, whom he had so often met in his master's house, was residing in his own hired house in Rome, the runaway slave had found him out, when in the extremity of hunger. In either case he had now become dear as the Apostle's heart; had proved more than a servant—a brother beloved.

What was Onesimus to Philemon?—He had been unprofitable, and we have been. He was sent back, and we have returned to the Shepherd and Bishop of our souls. He had been a servant, henceforth he should be a beloved brother. He had grievously wronged, but his sin had been forgiven, and so covered by over-abounding grace, that it would bring him into a position of greater privilege and blessing than ever before. In this man's sin and restoration, we see ourselves.

MONDAY, August 29.

"Thou art the same."—Heb. i. 12.

Thou art the same, when contrasted with nature.—The solid bases of the hills were laid in their sockets by thy hands. The blue tapestry of the sky was woven by thy fingers, and it is as easy for Thee to lay it aside and substitute new heavens as for us to lay aside a worn-out dress and take another. And as the change of dress does not affect the nature of the wearer, neither will all the changes of creation or nature affect the power of thine hand or the tenderness of thy heart. Thou art the same.

Thou art the same, when contrasted with men.—They come and go. The great ones of the past—Abraham, Moses, David, Elijah, stood with thee for a moment on the earth, and then passed into the great silence. Augustine, Luther, Calvin, Knox wrought for Thee and with Thee, and passed away. Our own teachers and friends, one by one, have passed from us; Thou art the same.

Thou art the same, when contrasted with our own moods and impulses.—They are too fitful—like the morning dew, like the evening wind. Sometimes we feel we could die for Thee; at other times we sleep amid thy sorrows. Emotions, resolutions, methods of thought and action are permanent only in their changefulness. But Thou art the same—changeless and timeless, our Rock of Ages, our impregnable Fortress and Home!

TUESDAY, August 30.

"A merciful and faithful High Priest."—Heb. ii. 17.

The priesthood of Jesus stretches like the sky from the horizon of the past to that of the eternal future. It covers all we know of Him.

In the days that preceded his incarnation.—We are told that the priesthood of Melchizedek was made like that of the Son of God (Heb. vii. 3), from which it is clear that all the apparatus of priesthood within and without the Jewish system was some faint imagining forth of the priestly mediation and intercession of the Saviour. The eternal temple was reared, the incense of intercession ascended, the sacrifice of the Lamb was slain, before the first thin spiral of smoke rose from Moriah's summit.

In the days of his earthly ministry.—At the Passover, when the High Priest had finished the sacred rites, he came forth to the people, and said, "Now ye are clean." In John xv. 3, Jesus addressed his disciples in the same words. His authority to forgive sins; his quick sympathy, and likeness to his brethren; his frequent prayers; his intercessions for sinners, as when He pleaded for his crucifiers; his intercessions for the tempted, as when He prayed for Peter; his intercessions for his own, as in the matchless John xvii.; his reference to the shedding of blood; the whole circumstances of his death—show his priestly attitude, which culminated in his passing within the veil.

In the days of the present dispensation.—The Divine Apostle tells us that he saw Christ clothed in a vesture to the foot, and employs this specific word for high-priestly dress. He saw him engaged in priestly ministry; and in a subsequent vision tells us that he saw Him mingle much incense with the prayer of saints, and present them before God. What a miserable sacrilege it is to see poor human priests intruding into his sacred office!

WEDNESDAY, August 31.

"Consider...Jesus."—Heb. iii. 1.

Who are to consider Him?—"Holy brethren." We must possess the holiness without which none can see the Lord, and we must live in holy love with all who bear the name of Christ. Do you lack either of these?

What right have they to consider Him?—Because they are partakers of a heavenly calling. They have turned from the world, from the fascinations of sin and the flesh; they are seeking the heavenly city, the New Jerusalem. Surely such have a right, given them of grace, to live in daily personal vision of their King?

In what aspects should they consider Him?—As Apostle, whom God has sent out of his bosom to man, and whom man sends back to God? As Priest, who bears our needs and sins and sorrows on his heart? As the Son, compared with whom Moses was but a servant? As Creator, who built all things? As the Head of the household of those who believe? As the all-faithful One, who will never resign his charge? Consider Jesus in each of these aspects and rejoice in Him.

THURSDAY, September 1.

"There remaineth therefore a Sabbath rest (a Sabbatism) for the people of God."—Heb. iv. 9 (R.V.).

There is a rest for weary souls.—God speaks of it as his Rest. To every other creation-day there were evening and morning, but not to this; it partakes of the nature of eternity in its timeless bliss.

Let us rejoice that this rest remaineth.—That is, it has never been exhausted. Of course, the Sabbath, which was and is a type of it, could not exhaust it. And Canaan, with its sweet plains and cessation of the wilderness wanderings, could not completely fulfil it, because centuries after it had been given through Joshua, in the Psalms God spoke of yet another day, as though his rest were still future.

The rest may be a present experience.—The word "remaineth" has diverted the thoughts of commentators and others, who have supposed it referred to heaven. No doubt there is rest, sweet rest, there. But "remaineth" only means "unexhausted, unrealised, by aught which has taken place." The rest is for us here and now. "We which have believed do enter into that rest" (ver. 3). Where is it? It is in the bosom of Christ—"Come unto Me, and I will give you rest." It is in ploughing the furrow of daily duty—"Take my yoke...find rest."

This rest is compatible with great activity.—He that enters into the Divine rest is not reduced to quietism. The Creator rested from creation, but works in providence; Jesus rested from Calvary, but pleads in heaven. From the prompting of the indwelling Spirit higher and better service emanate.

FRIDAY, September 2.

"Senses exercised to discern good and evil."—Heb. v. 14.

It is difficult to exaggerate the value of the physical senses. Take, for instance, that of scent. By the order of God's providence, hurtful substances exhale noxious and forbidding odours, by reason of which we are warned from going into their close proximity.

How important a part our spiritual senses may play in the regimen of the inner life! If we are quick to discern good and evil, we may welcome the one and avoid the other with ever-increasing readiness. We may receive the blessing of the one when still afar off, and avoid the curse of the other when only threatening us.

The army which is ill served by its scouts stands a much worse chance than if it were forewarned when an attack was advancing. The foremost ranks of the foe may be over the ramparts, and engaged in the heart of the fortress, before there has been time for preparation. Oh, to detect temptation, when still it is only a thought, a suggestion, a faint shadow on the sky!

We may sharpen our senses by use. May our hearts become most sensitive to all that might lead to temptation! Let us deal with the tempter in the very earliest suggestions of evil.

SATURDAY, September 3.

"It is impossible to renew again to repentance, the while..."—Heb. vi. 6. (R.V. marg.)

In the awful stress of trial which accompanied the fall of Jerusalem, the Hebrew Christians, who were still dwelling in Palestine, were strongly tempted to apostatise. Some, indeed, had done so. But can we really consider that they ever were true Christians? They went out, because they had never been truly of. They had been enlightened as to the doctrines of Christianity, but the enlightenment had been of their head rather than of their heart. They had tasted of the heavenly hopes, anticipations, and joys of the Gospel message, without really belonging to the Household of Faith. And they had gone back.

It is impossible to renew such to repentance, whilst they go on living as they do, crucifying the Son of God by their vicious and cowardly course of action, and putting Him to an open shame. Notice that whilst, suggested by Bishop Westcott, of the margin of R.V. It is the solution of the great difficulty which has perplexed many timid souls. The impossibility of renewal is only for those who persist in their evil ways. Abandon your sins, and God will restore you to your old place.

(1/6, or Presentation Edition, 2/-: Morgan & Scott.) Vol. II., 1 Samuel—Job, will be ready shortly, and will be followed at short intervals by Vol. III., Psalms—Song of Solomon; Vol. IV., Isaiah—Malachi; Vol. V., Matthew—Revelation.

The Students' Summer Conference.

AN INNER VIEW.

WE have reported at some length the Conference recently held at Ripon. But there is a side to such conferences which scarcely comes into view in a record, however full, of the meetings held and of the addresses given. We speak of the inner side—the side which presents itself to those who spend with the students the time between the meetings; the side on which what is most significant appears. A glimpse of the inner side of the Ripon Conference will, we are sure, interest our readers. It will do more: it will prompt to praise and to prayer. We must needs confine ourselves to the men's camp.

Here there are close upon two hundred students from some fifty colleges in different parts of the United Kingdom. Art students preponderate, but medicals are almost as numerous. There are under twenty of the faculty of Divinity. Other faculties are represented by twos and threes. Between twenty and thirty tents accommodate the students, who are grouped, in some cases according to the University to which they belong, in others according to the city or country from which they come. On the latter principle of grouping we have, for example, the Irish tent, two Scotch tents, the Birmingham tent, etc.; on the former the Oxford tent, the Cambridge tent, etc.

This systematic grouping of the men has many manifest advantages, Some who are tent-mates during the nine days of conference are personal friends beforehand. Others get to be friends all the more quickly because of common interests and ties academic or local. And the basis is laid or broadened through the for fellowship and concerted action in Christ's name in the different centres to which the students will gravitate when the conference is over.

This grouping is, however, only one characteristic of the camp. Of equal importance is the intermingling of students from the different tents, in the mess-marquee, for meals. Here the principle of inter-dispersion is favoured, and an element of great strength in these annual gatherings comes into operation. Links between college and college, and between one part of the United Kingdom and another, are established as student talks with student at table about the themes and purposes which occupy and exercise the whole company. Especially is this so in the delightfully informal stand-up-and-move-about supper which follows close upon the last meeting for the day. As each man helps his neighbour and himself to cocoa and biscuits, and earnest conversation engages every two men who for the moment chance to be together, the interlacing of the different parts of this national student movement proceeds apace.

We have used the word "national," but it has to be remembered that a union of British colleges means more than a union of British students. In this Ripon Conference there are students of at least four other nationalities—two Continental and two Asiatic. This means that the British students in camp are helped to rise above the somewhat insular view of the things pertaining to Christ's kingdom (as of things in general) which the Christian of these islands is apt, all unconsciously, to take. And those students from afar are made to feel that the lands from which they come will be better understood and more intelligently prayed for by many in this land because they, as students in British colleges, have come into fellowship with British students who, like themselves, are also—and first of all—Christians. Indeed, we have in this conference a miniature world's federation of Christian students. And here are seen at work the principles and powers which are certain to make the Federation a prime force in the evangelisation of the world—which are already making it such.

The bugle sounds at half-past six in the morning, and soon after men are to be seen moving in three different directions out of the camp, that they may be absolutely alone with God in prayer. Others find their place of retirement in the tent, from which their mates have withdrawn. But it is clear—growingly so as the days pass—specially so towards the close of the conference, and after the subject of "The Morning Watch" has been dealt with, that here are young fellows who have learned to "BEGIN THE DAY WITH GOD."

Then comes breakfast, and then tent-meetings for Bible-study and prayer. In these the devoutness and the precision with which the Word of God is read and its meaning sought after, and the earnestness and definiteness of the prayers that are offered, show that the conference draws together men who are intent upon knowing more perfectly what it means to be a Christian, and what their being Christians ought, by God's grace, to mean to Christ, to their colleges, and to the world.

It is from seasons of private and united worship such as we have indicated that the students assemble for the conference meetings. What wonder that the Divine presence is felt even before the opening hymn is sung? The acknowledgment of Him in secret and in the tent circle has prepared the heart of the assembly towards Him. Moreover, it is unto Him that the company is gathered. "I will hear what God the Lord will speak," expresses the prevailing mood and motive.

And when God has spoken, and "the opening of his words" has given light, and the light has brought to view things in the life that are not "after Christ," and the absence of things from the life that are in Christ for the believer, many a man is glad, as in a deep hush the meeting breaks up, to be able to turn to another, perhaps only a little more experienced in the Christian life than himself, that in communion together over the Scriptures and in prayer the life may be "rectified" (to use one of the key words of the Conference) and the power of God's Spirit to sanctify and keep and guide be more abundantly known. Some of the speakers remain throughout the Conference just that they may give help in this way, and there can be no doubt that through personal intercourse, and the dealing with specific spiritual difficulties, and the bringing of the Word of God to bear on peculiarities in the circumstances and experiences of individuals, much of the work of God through the conference is accomplished.

This came out strikingly in the impressive testimony meeting which we reported in our last issue. We recall the case of a student who in that meeting thanked God that in the quiet of a speaker's room he had been led to see the truth in regard to the infilling of the Holy Spirit the night before the subject was dealt with in the Conference. He rejoiced that he had been brought to yield himself to God to be filled with the Spirit calmly and deliberately alone. He could never be tempted to fear that he had been carried away by "feeling," as he might have been tempted had the crisis come upon him when it came to others gathered in the meeting tent. Manifestly in this case the personal method was used of God not only to the accomplishment of the Divine purpose, but also to the gracious guarding of the surrendered soul from all doubt as to the reality of what had taken place.

Between supper and the bugle-call for "lights out" every tent has its service of thanksgiving and prayer. When rain has been falling heavily and the camp is drenched, and there is the prospect of a stormy night, so that tent pegs must be strengthened, if thanksgiving is general and sincere it must be because a delight in things unseen and eternal—a joy in God Himself—fills the men. And we can think of nothing connected with this remarkable conference more conclusive, as evidence of its genuine and strong spirituality, than the fact that not one murmur is to be heard anent the weather, albeit it has blown hard enough to bring at least one tent to the ground, and rained sufficiently to flood at least one other. When men accept uncomplainingly what weather God sends, it being other than they would have chosen, the presumption is that their hearts are right towards Him. Who can measure the issue of the setting right towards Him of such lives as these?

The Noon Prayer Meeting.

THE meeting of Monday last at Aldersgate-street, held in the library, was remarkably well attended for this season of the year. Mr. O. L. Heatley, superintendent of the King's Own Mission, Kennington Park, secured the interest and sympathy of his auditors as he briefly related the founding of the mission several years ago—the initial difficulties, the early struggles and opposition, and the ultimate success by the blessing of God. The neighbourhood, which may be described as a kind of second-rate middle-class, is one that stands greatly in need of such earnest aggressive work. The practice of total abstinence is strongly maintained in the mission, and the principle is inculcated that the converts are saved that they may serve. Many agencies are now in operation, including Band of Hope, Sunday-school, Bible classes, meetings for different sections of the people, savings bank, Dorcas club, house-to-house visitation, open-air work, and the regular weekly preaching of the Gospel.

Some time ago the workers feared that the mission premises would be alienated from them for the purposes of a music-hall. Prayer was made and various friends interested, with the result that of the £2000 needed for the purchase of the lease and necessary repairs £1300 was contributed, the remaining £700 being advanced, without interest; by Mr. W. Green, of Bickley, who has been a generous and tried friend of the work. This mission is doing splendid service in a specially needy district, and well deserves the co-operation of all interested in London evangelisation.

Missionaries' Literature Association.—The work of this Association continues to be much appreciated, and the demand for useful and interesting magazines, etc., is very great. In addition to periodicals, scientific, religious, historical, and medical books have been applied for, as well as pictures and picture books. Funds are needed to carry on the work, and will be thankfully acknowledged by the secretary, Mr. Wm. R. Dover, 57 and 59, Ludgate-hill, E.C.

Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A.—Last Friday evening there was an interesting missionary meeting here to say farewell to one of the members, Mr. Gordon Harding, who is about to undertake work in connection with the China Inland Mission. Mr. Robert Burn presided, and about a hundred fellow members of the Association were present. Interesting testimonies were given by several of these, and also by Mr. Stevens, of the Candidates' Home at Newington Green. Mr. J. Jackson and Mr. C. Hartnoll, members of the Committee of the Association, also spoke.

THE LATE

Mr. W. H. Roberts,

OF PLYMOUTH, TRAVELLING SECRETARY Y.M.C.A.

THIS departed friend was an earnest member of the able band of men who are retained by the Young Men's Christian Association as travelling and organising secretaries.

Mr. Roberts had served a good "apprenticeship," having graduated, first in a business house in Plymouth, then in a similar establishment in the metropolis, then as local secretary (for four years) at Ipswich, and lastly for a somewhat briefer period at Plymouth. This preliminary training enabled him to give practical counsel to committees and secretaries, whom he regularly visited, both as regard errors to be avoided and methods that were likely to prove helpful.

Mr. Roberts's best and ripest years were spent in the county of his nativity, where, by his self-sacrificing earnestness, he won the affectionate respect of all with whom he was brought into contact. He was born in 1855 in the Cornish village of Callington, of humble, godly parents. His father was for thirty-nine years a Methodist local preacher and class-leader. Young Roberts was trained at the Callington Grammar School, and led his young comrades both in sports and piety. As an early instance of his originality in spiritual methods, he organised amongst the boys a daily open-air noon prayer meeting in the fields after morning school. Having experienced much youthful exercise of soul, at sixteen years of age he was brought to decision to accept the Lord Jesus Christ as his personal Saviour, and at eighteen he commenced to preach the Gospel. Following his father's example, he was enrolled as a local preacher. On his removal to London he identified himself with the Wesleyan Chapel in Great Queen-street, and engaged actively in open-air preaching.

Not till he was twenty-five years of age did he become connected with the Y.M.C.A.; but, once having joined, he entered heartily into the work at Exeter Hall, leading the psalmody and singing solos at the young men's meetings. His zeal and ability as a worker led to his accepting an invitation in 1882 to undertake the Y.M.C.A. secretaryship as his lifework. From first to last he has most amply justified the wisdom of this suggestion. These secretaryships are not lucrative positions. In the course of a few brief autobiographical notes Mr. Roberts tells how he felt the pinch of a straitened salary; but he adds that the wise management of his wife enabled him to tide over the difficulty.

In each successive sphere of Association work he found matters in a dull and depressed condition, and he was enabled, before leaving, to lift them into a more sound and healthy position. This was the case in his first charge at Ipswich. At Plymouth he commenced with ninety members and associates on the roll! and the Association was housed in most unsuitable hired premises. After three years' labour, when he was transferred to the travelling secretaryship, there were six hundred members and associates, and the Association possessed a magnificent building costing £9000, free of debt, and, still better, in both these spheres the record states that there were in the meantime many conversions to God. The same characteristics marked Mr. Roberts's work of superintendence. When he took executive charge, embracing the counties of Devon and Cornwall, there were only eleven Associations, with 2071 members and associates; none of these societies possessed a building of their own. Now, when his earthly service has ceased and he has entered into his abundant reward, there are twenty-six Associations, with 3372 members and associates, and thirteen of the Associations—exactly half, and these in the principal towns—are provided with well-adapted buildings at a cost of £30,000, two-thirds of which amount has been already paid.

It needs no assurances to enable one to realise how much this bright, devoted worker must be missed in the sphere he has left vacant; how sadly he is mourned in the home, where he leaves a widow and seven young children for whom he was able to make none but a nominal provision. A memorial fund has been opened by friends in Plymouth, and efforts, which have been generously responded to, are being made to raise a sum of £2000 for their necessities. Gifts in aid of this fund, which are still greatly needed, will be gladly received by the publishers of this journal.

Mr. Roberts's comparatively brief life—he was only forty-three when he died—has been a practical commentary on the text, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." He overcame the many difficulties which constantly confronted him, first, by the prayer of faith, and, secondly, by resolute effort in dependence on the Holy Spirit.

The Star Hall (Manchester) convention announced for October 11 is unavoidably relinquished for this year, owing to Mrs. Crossley's illness.

Doncaster Races.—May I earnestly appeal to your readers to help us in our forthcoming great campaign for the Lord at Doncaster Races, from September 4 to 9? We have a noble band of evangelists ready for the work, but the distance from London makes the cost of visiting Doncaster Races specially heavy. We shall be deeply grateful to your readers for their gifts and prayers.—Yours faithfully, FRANK COCKREM, Secretary.

Mr. Joseph Rabinowitz's Work.

SOME months ago, when I was staying with him, Mr. Joseph Rabinowitz, of Kischeneff, laid before me the following plan. As is generally known, he preaches regularly every Jewish Sabbath in the Somerville Hall, Kischeneff, a building erected with funds mostly contributed by friends of Israel in Scotland. His utterances are powerful, his printed sermons are circulated widely, and his name carries great weight amongst Jews in Russia.

His heart is set upon more aggressive testimony than the regular and localised preaching. The plan in his mind is to build a mission railway carriage of three compartments: one for him and his helper to live in, another to serve as a store for Bibles and tracts, and a third (and largest) compartment with seats and reading desk for preaching the Gospel. There is little doubt that if the Lord, through his people, send in the necessary funds for building such a mission carriage, the Railways Department of the Russian Government would give it a free pass on Crown lines. The Government is generous in this respect, and has hitherto shown no disfavour to Mr. Rabinowitz's efforts.

Wherever it was desirable to make a few days' stay the mission carriage would be shunted to a siding, and with its prominent text, "Therefore, let all the house of Israel know assuredly that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ," would attract the large Jewish populations both to hear the Gospel and to receive the printed Word. The plan is quite practical, and appeals to me, as one who knows something of Russia, as a magnificent means of giving Mr. Rabinowitz's witness a much wider range, reaching fresh centres of Jews, and following up the distribution of New Testaments which has been prosecuted in Russia during the last ten years, and in God's good hand drawing out many souls whom we already know to be open and inquiring.

Russian railway stations, specially in small towns, are often busy scenes—serving both as telegraph and post offices. The lines may be crossed at will, the trains being few. The plan of railway carriages for the sale of beer, etc., and even for Government schools, is practised in Russia. "Why should not the service of steam and railway line," says Mr. Rabinowitz, "already used to circulate liquor, be utilised in the service of the Lord Jesus?" Why not?

I believe that £1000, or possibly less, would cover the cost of the carriage. I have made some mention of this matter in Trusting and Toiling, and about £40 has been contributed, which, of course, is insufficient to warrant commencing operations. Gifts may be sent to the office of THE CHRISTIAN, or to me. SAMUEL WILKINSON.

Christian Home in Switzerland.

GRINDELWALD, in the lovely Bernese Oberland, has for some years enjoyed a high reputation as a summer resort, but its chief merit is that it possesses inestimable advantages for an autumn and winter sojourn. The great mountains entirely exclude the north and east winds, which never enter the valley, while the fogs of the lake districts never rise so high. The winter days are bright, clear sunshine, and can be largely spent in the open air. Patients suffering from asthma, malaria, and nervous complaints are strongly recommended by physicians to spend the winter in Grindelwald.

Mrs. Christlieb, the widow of the late Professor Christlieb, D.D., of Bonn, who was so well known in England also, is opening a Christian Home and Sanatorium for Missionaries and other Christian workers in a most charming position overlooking Grindelwald.

Mrs. Christlieb takes up this work that she may serve Christ in ministering to his people, and has made the most perfect arrangements for the comfort of her guests. For prospectus of terms address Mrs. Christlieb, Grindelwald, Switzerland.

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

The Evangelisation Society.

TENT WORK.

IN a quiet room overlooking the bend of the Thames below Somerset House, Mr. John Wood, the secretary of the Evangelisation Society, holds and guides the threads of that organisation, which has the whole of Great Britain for its parish. Far too little is known of this Society and the band of able and well-equipped gospellers who compose its recognised preaching staff, some of them giving occasional and voluntary service, but most of them paid and fully employed in the work of an evangelist. Lord Shaftesbury used to say that London would be unendurable but for its city missionaries; in like manner we might assert that but for the continued labours of the agents of the Evangelisation Society the spiritual indifference and positive ungodliness of our land as a whole would be far greater than they are.

In these long and bright summer months it is easier to gather the people to hear the Gospel in tents than to get them into permanent buildings. In order to glean something of the society's tent work, a representative of The Christian waited on Mr. Wood, at 21, Surrey-street, Strand, last week, and received the pleasing information which he now passes on to the reader. The reporter's first question was: "How many Gospel tents have you had in use this season?"

"During the present summer the Society's agents have been conducting missions in thirty-nine tents of its own; while it has also supplied preachers to six or eight others. These tent missions are being held in different parts of the country, from Sutherlandshire in the north, to Southampton in the south, from Herefordshire in the west to Norfolk in the east. In some of the localities very large numbers have been drawn together—indeed, far beyond the seating capacity of the tents. Of course, in the exclusively country districts where agricultural pursuits preponderate, the numbers attending on week evenings are sometimes small. It is not possible to state the numbers exactly attending on a given Sunday, but on a low estimate something like 30,000 people are present at the ninety meetings held on Sunday under canvas in these forty-five tents.

"The Society (continued Mr. Wood) adheres to its simple mission of preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and does not engage in Protestant discussion. But it is undoubtedly the fact that the anti-ritualistic crusade has led to an increase of zeal for evangelistic effort, more especially in Lancashire and other thickly-populated districts. Applications have come to the Society from these places in large numbers for missions, the arrangements extending up to Christmas next, and in the case of some evangelists up to the following Christmas. In places where five years ago the people would not have a mission because the clergyman objected, they are now going to have one without caring for the opinion of the parson."

"Do you get hold of non-churchgoers in these services?"

"One great advantage of tent work is that many of the careless masses, who are every year becoming more difficult to reach, are attracted. This applies also to missions held in public buildings in the winter months, where Christians of various denominations unite in the work. Experience has shown that it is most difficult to induce the utterly indifferent to frequent buildings of a denominational character. For this reason the Society is doing everything in its power to promote united missions in undenominational buildings, and in special cases it helps with the expenses in order to encourage local Christians to venture on such effort."

"Doubtless you receive interesting and encouraging testimonies as to the success and value of these Evangelistic missions?"

"Very many letters of a most cheering character are continually sent to the Society telling of manifest blessing, not only on recent efforts, but on those of former years. I may quote a few of these testimonies as examples of many more."

Mr. Wood read out to his interviewer from the original documents extracts of letters received. The first was as follows, and came from

CLAYTON-LE-MOORS, LANCASHIRE.

"Our little town has just been favoured with a month's tent missions, conducted by an agent of your Society. It has been a memorable time, and will live in the hearts and minds of very many who have received blessing at the meetings.

"Of your evangelist I have heard nothing but words of praise. He is a man of God, thoroughly fitted for and devoted to the work in which he is engaged. He has won the hearts of many by his ability, zeal, faithfulness, impartiality, and tact. He is a man with a message, and like Elijah of old he knows his message, and has not hesitated to declare the whole counsel of God. The fundamental truths of our holy religion have been his theme, and have been emphasised and enforced night after night. As a preacher of the Gospel myself for many years, I can say that I never heard it more faithfully or forcefully delivered.

"As to the results, eternity alone can reveal them. A goodly number have openly sought the Saviour, and the whole moral tone of the neighbourhood appears to be raised. Sluggish Christians have been quickened and the churches revived. If this mission is a sample of the work you are doing throughout the country I wish you God-speed, and trust you will arrange, if possible, for a similar visit next summer."

A delightful extract was next read from the letter of a lady resident in Corsham, Wilts, about a mission at Moor Green, in which two of the Society's evangelists participated. Want of space, however, compels us to pass on to a deeply interesting testimony from a minister in CUPAR, FIFE.

"It is with great pleasure that I write some words about Mr. C.'s tent services recently held here. On Sabbath evening the capacious tent was quite filled with sympathetic and responsive congregations; while on week evenings the attendance kept up beyond the most sanguine expectations of the workers. Night after night the preacher has proclaimed the Gospel with a freshness, earnestness, eloquence, and force which have amazed many of us. Without hesitation I say that Mr. C. is the ablest evangelist who has ever crossed my path, and many a paper-bound preacher in our pulpits to-day might well envy and covet the fluency and versatility of this gifted servant of Christ. I have long thought that evangelistic work needed raising, and that the very best men were required for this most important part of Christian service. I have also thought that the ethical side of Christianity needed emphasising with gospel meetings. In these directions Mr. C.'s methods have been ideal. He has recognised the intelligence of the people before him, and has aimed at reaching them through conscience, intellect, and heart. Many souls during these three weeks have been led from darkness into God's marvellous light, while Christ's followers have been stirred up to draw more largely on Divine resources.

"It is impossible to tabulate the full results, but it was certainly a wonderful sight to see such a splendid company of believers, many of them the direct fruit of the mission, remaining on the last Sabbath evening solemnly to consecrate themselves to the Lord, and to declare themselves ready for any service or suffering that might bring glory to Him and good to men."

These were only brief peeps into the pile of correspondence that lay on the secretary's table, but they will suffice to indicate the extent to which God is setting his seal on the work of the Society. Mr. Wood's last words to his visitor were:—

"The three things we want are more men, more money, and more grace."

The last is certain to be got for the asking; the reader may help the Society, if he chooses, to get the other two.

Southsea Common.

FOR about ten weeks we have been preaching the Gospel in our tent on this open space, holding open-air services both before and after the tent meetings. We have had the manifestation of the Lord's presence with us in blessing to believers, and in the conversion of sinners. Sanger's Circus has at different times been pitched near our tent for days together; we have worked freely among the employés, distributing large numbers of Gospel tracts and books. This is a class much neglected, and many of whom have sunk very low, but not too low for the grace of God to reach them. We hope to continue these tent meetings for about another fortnight, after which we shall be giving our strength to the Gospel in this town and elsewhere.

Evangelistic Movements.

The "Gospel Cyclists," for the sixth successive year, visited Romford on Saturday, 20th inst., and held a large meeting in the Market-place. As in other towns visited, local Christians heartily co-operated. A deep impression seemed to be made, and personal conversation with inquiring listeners afterwards proved this. Members of the party, who are all voluntary workers, are open to visit neighbouring mission halls, etc., to conduct services, on application to the Hon. Sec., A. F. Borton, Hermon Hill, Wanstead.

MR. WILLIAM HILL, the Scottish Evangelist, has lately concluded a ten days' mission in the Wesleyan Church, Heidelberg, Transvaal. The congregation, interest, and power grew as the days passed, until the preacher and his message became subjects of common talk in likely and unlikely places. His scathing denunciation of modern day sins roused the ire of some, whilst his clear setting forth of the manner of life demanded by Christ from his followers inspired many to strive after closer communion with God. Members of the church were quickened, and many souls converted. The afternoon Bible readings were most helpful and much appreciated.

ROBERT F. APPELBE, Wesleyan Minister.

Union of Women Workers.

THE co-operation of good women in effort for the welfare of their fellows is admirably organised by the National Union of Women Workers. There are sub-committees to guard many interests, including rescue and preventive work and technical education for girls. Years ago Miss Ellice Hopkins had an active part in important departments, and she still takes a lively interest in such endeavours to influence public opinion.

The annual conference of the Union will be held at Norwich, October 25 to 28; and the programme shows that topics of vast interest are to be discussed. Among these are: "The Friendly Society Movement," "The Work of Midwives and Maternity Nurses," "The Care and Nursing of the Epileptic," "The Care and Education of Deaf Mutes," "The Care and Training of the Feeble-minded," and the "Treatment of Children in need of Legal Protection." Further information may be had from the office of the Union, 59, Berners-street, London, W.. Miss Janes, secretary.

Nice, France.—In a recent letter Mr. E. C. Newbery writes from this place telling of large congregations of Italians and much spiritual blessing. The meeting place had to be enlarged for want of room, and even now it is crammed. In former hot seasons the meetings grew smaller, but this year the attendance is sustained.

Looking Backward.

By Mrs. HARVEY-JELLIE.

SUMMER flowers once again were seen, and birds filled the air with their melody, as the old man sat under the drooping ash-tree in his garden. His threescore years and ten had passed, and still the light shone from his eyes and a peaceful smile rested on his face. His hopes, all clear and radiant, were fixed upon the nearing future, but his thoughts ran o'er his past, and as the years came before him in answer to his call, a shadow or a tear oft changed his countenance. Sacred memory—"the heart knoweth its own bitterness, and a stranger intermeddleth not with its joys," for—

Through all these earthly mazes
The thread of a Father's care,
Is not lost through the darkest places,
No break in it anywhere;
But running clear into heaven,
And no end to it even there.

A rustle near by arrested attention, and Kathleen Hedington appeared in the garden.

"Uncle Robert," she said, "I am going away to-morrow. My husband hears that the ship sails at once."

"It has been good to have you staying so near, Kathleen. You remind me of your aunt so much; she has been gone a year."

Seating herself beside him, she told of her children and their prospects, of herself and husband too, of his success in life; and the venerable man laid his hand upon her arm.

"My niece, I love to hear of all that interests you in the coming days, but you will stand at the other end by and by; try so to live that the retrospect may be good."

"'Sufficient to the day is the evil.' You are too grave, dear uncle."

"Nay, nay, my dear, that is no meaning of the text. I do not bid you worry, and take up an unborn trouble, but I would have you remember we have just one life here to live, and days will speak as the reckoning time draws on. I am now on the borderland, where you will be one day."

"How does it all appear to you, uncle? you have been so good. Tell me, uncle, has life been worth living?"

"Eh, that it has—worth all the sorrow to know God's comforting grace; worth all the storms to see Christ coming on the waves to bless. And all my times of despair and failure came from looking downward, and when I cried to Him, I realised afresh the almighty power of God."

To Kathleen it seemed life was too busy and days too full of occupation to allow much thought of spiritual things—or even opportunity for Christian work. She had a place in the church roll, and attended the usual services, but position and business prospects had a large and engrossing place in heart and home.

They were silent for a minute.

"What would you advise one like myself who is midway on the journey and in the thickest of the conflict?" she asked.

"I would say, follow the Master's example; go from the turmoil of pleasure up on to the mountains, and get refreshment and strength from God; then step fearlessly into life's thickest maze of duties, to abandon yourself earnestly to all righteous claims, and be the best of everything, and do the noblest for Christ. Let works and influence honour Him, for 'Whoso offereth praise, glorifieth Me,' and you can make life a song of praise in this dull world."

Farewells were spoken, the aged one soon after finished his course with joy, and passed the border into the sunny land beyond.

Kathleen Hedington, amid the pressure of life's midday, landed in America with her husband and children, there to make home, and to be in easier reach for the ship. Her uncle's words came back sometimes, and she hoped ere she came to the border-land all would be right.

But "while it was yet day her sun went down," and her retrospect was taken earlier than she expected.

What did Jesus mean when He said, "Mary hath chosen that better part which shall not be taken away"? Did He denounce activity and care for this life's affairs?—surely not, but He reminded that these things must be left—"taken away"—at the end, and only the true and better part be carried with us; and Kathleen saw her all recede and the retrospect brought no peace. She was going and all was being taken away by the greedy hand of death, and to her account she saw no "better part." In vain well-meaning friends said, "Only trust Him." She failed in that hour of weakness to grasp that which can never be taken away.

So near to the kingdom, yet what dost thou lack?
So near to the kingdom, what keepeth thee back?
Renounce every idol, though dear it may be,
And haste to thy Saviour, now pleading with thee.
To die with no hope, have you counted the cost?
To die out of Christ, and thy soul to be lost;
So near to the kingdom, oh tarry no more,
While Jesus is pleading, come enter the door.

Some Experiences in Open-air Preaching.

By Col. S. DEWE WHITE*
(late Bengal Staff Corps).

MY first experience of this work was in India, when, taking my Hindustani Testament in my hand, I frequently preached to crowds of natives the simple soul-saving truths of the Gospel; and here my intimate knowledge of the language was very helpful. It was while residing at Southsea, after retiring from the service, that I discovered what could be accomplished in spite of nervousness, through the Lord's blessing, by a man of moderate abilities, in open-air ministry.

From long association with soldiers, in times of peace and of war, it was comparatively easy for me to enter their barracks and speak, in a friendly way, about a Saviour's love; but I found it much harder to take my stand alone on the Hastings beach, to preach to all sorts of passers-by on the promenade. In view of the open contempt which I might expect from some of my hearers, I feared the ordeal might be more trying to the spirit than rushing up to the cannon's mouth in the excitement of battle. I prayed about my nervousness; and God so answered me that ere long I had no fear of man. Sneers very soon lost their sting, especially as I got aglow with the grandeur and importance of the Gospel message.

The Lord gave me much encouragement at the outset; eight days after my first open-air address three dear children were hopefully converted as the result. Other coversions of children followed. I frequently preached to adults also, especially on Sundays, when I often had attentive audiences of a hundred persons. Interruptions were suffered on divers occasions from drunken or noisy opposers, sometimes banded together in uproar. In June of the following year, I had the privilege of to quite two hundred patient hearers at a service on the Hastings beach, lasting two hours. Well attended meetings followed in the same place, also interesting personal conversations. A blind lady told me that this bodily affliction had produced keener spiritual sight, and that Rom. viii. 28 made her quite resigned to the Divine will.

Services at Eastbourne and St. Leonards were owned of God to impress and convert boys and girls, and on one occasion a boy told me that he had been led to trust in Jesus by what he heard from my lips in the previous year. Two girls who had come forward to be prayed with two days before, now told me they were trusting Christ for salvation. It is no wonder that God should answer believing intercession. Three days afterwards I met with opposition on the Hastings beach, even unto personal violence; indeed, my experience at this time was somewhat like April weather.

In August I gave a swimming lesson to three boys who had attended my services, making it the medium of Gospel teaching. I guaranteed that they should be able to swim after my first lesson on condition that they would believe and do what I told them. I assured them that if they would trust themselves to the water and make the movements I had taught them, they would be buoyed up. The two elder boys lacked courage and faith; but the third, a simple little fellow of eight years, exhibited confidence in my instruction, and actually swam some distance, though he was unable to do so before. Thus I had the joy of explaining how saving faith takes God at his word and throws us into the loving arms of the Saviour.

During 1888 I had over a hundred open-air services in addition to indoor addresses. While at Weymouth, in July, a militiaman reminded me of my preaching at Dorchester, and said that my addresses to the young soldiers there had been productive of much good. Among my open-air meetings was one at Portland, attended by some eighty soldiers; and one which took the form of a children's Bible-class upon the Weymouth sands, whereat eighteen prizes given for Scripture knowledge stimulated keen competitive interest. On one occasion, a dear child of about nine years courageously led the singing of two of the hymns in an audience of about a hundred persons.

In 1889 I had over a hundred and fifty open-air services at various places, thus being privileged to make known God's plan of salvation to several thousand hearers, besides preaching in churches, schoolrooms, and halls. Children have come forward and have knelt down for prayer, in response to my appeals to those earnestly desirous of salvation. I have met with much appreciation and Christian love on the part of parents, as well as from the dear children; although in one instance a worldly father forbade his children to continue their attendance at my beach services, in which they took much interest.

The limits assigned me do not permit of detailed reference to many interesting incidents of succeeding years in connection with this loved work, but I may sum up my experience by saying that open-air preaching is a sphere of labour which in meeting emergencies, and in refuting all manner of objections to Biblical truth. In copying the example of Christ as the Prince of open-air preachers, we are by God's grace enabled to bear scorn, ridicule, and abuse with patience, as we stand up to bear a bold, unflinching testimony for the Master. When such work is humbly undertaken, in dependence upon God for help, as well as from love to Christ and sympathy for the perishing, it is glorious and delightful, and will surely be blessed when watered with believing prayer and child-like trust in God's promises.

In case of apparent failure of his efforts, the open-air preacher must have recourse to honest self-examination as to whether the fault does not lie with himself. I would strongly deprecate any approach to a collection at the close of an open-air service. The fact that children are very impressionable points the necessity of striking while the iron is hot. Poor children should never be excluded from beach serviees; but, by wise arrangements, helpers may avoid wounding feelings, on the one hand, and prejudicing refined parents on the other.

* Extracted from a long narrative of work.

From Tanner's Land to Bisley.—Under the above title an illustrated booklet has been issued by the committee of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, 164, Shaftesbury-avenue, calling attention to the remarkably beneficial results attending the transfer of poor destitute children from the stifling slums of London to the pure and bracing air of Bisley Common, where the Society has two farm schools for boys. The work referred to is from the pen of Mr. Henry G. Copeland, finance secretary, who edits "Our Log Book" and also lectures throughout the country on behalf of these refuges and the training ships Arethusa and Chichester. Through the kindness of the War Office authorities, the 300 lads of these Bisley Schools are now enjoying a fortnight's stay at the Circular Redoubt Eastbourne.

With the Hop-Pickers.

FOR several years past, we have spent the month of September among the hop-pickers of Hereford and Worcester, so it may interest our young friends if we tell our experiences.

A FIELD THAT WAS FINISHED.

One morning we entered a large hop-yard just as the pickers had cleared off all the hops. They were resting waiting for the master to come and measure what they had done; as it was dinner time, they were sitting in groups around their fires enjoying their food. As we passed around with tracts and books, one of the men said,

"Ain't you going to give us a word, sir?"

Yes, as they wished it, we would. Looking across the picked hop-yard we began:

"It is finished! Not a pole to pull, not a hop to pick; all is done, and so you rest. There was a time when you came into this yard, the work was before you to be done, now, it is finished."

Then we told them of another work, which Jesus came to do, the work of keeping God's holy law and the work of putting away sin. Jesus began the work, continued at it, and at last could say, "It is finished."

Before entering that hop-yard we had passed another, belonging to the same grower; into this the pickers were to go next and work. When we believe in the finished work of Jesus, then God has work for us to do: not to get saved, but because we are saved.

Who can quote words of Jesus that tell us thus to rest from labour that we may begin to labour?

Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.
Take my yoke upon you, and learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls.
For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light.
—Matt. xi. 28-30.

A FERRY THAT WAS FREE.

Another day we had to cross a river to get home. So we called the ferryman at the mill, for the boat was on his side. We could not go to him; he must come to us. Sin divides us from God, so that we cannot go to God until He comes to us; but we can call or pray.

When the miller came to where the boat was he stood and scratched his head, for the boat was chained with a padlock, and he had forgotten to bring the key. It made me think of God's boat, the law, the ten commandments; we cannot be saved by that. "By the deeds of the law shall no flesh be justified in his sight" (Rom. iii. 20).

Right again. The ferry friend thought a minute, then he shouted, "There's another boat."

Good news! So jumping down among the rushes he pushed off in that second boat and came to us. Then we had to trust him and his boat. God has a second boat, "Grace," the Son Himself; shall we not trust Him, and so get safely over all that separates?

When over, we offered the man twopence for the ferry.

"No," said he, "not from you, while on such good work."

"Then you will have some of our books?" and I began selecting a handful.

"I'll have them, if I pay for them."

"But we are giving them away." "But somebody has to pay for them, and I shall help my mite."

And with that he tossed twopence into my pocket. So instead of us paying him, he paid us. This was grace. Do we think we have to give to God? No, He gives to us.

"Can you do with a rabbit?" he asked.

Do what? Catch it? Not we. Eat it? Rather. So taking us up to the house, he gave us this further present for the future, and in addition filled our pockets with nuts. Just like God's grace again. Shall we not empty our pockets to receive of his fulness? "When do you go home?" he asked.

"Monday morning."

"How are you going to get to the station?"

"Walk!" though we half dreaded the tramp.

"No, you will not walk. I have a horse and trap, and will meet you."

And he did; but took good care to let us know he did not do it in the prospect of being paid. The grace that ferries us, feeds us, and at last fetches us home.

A FEAST THAT WAS FURNISHED.

One evening after a long day we were walking to our lodgings, very tired. "Don't I wish I had a cup of tea," said my companion.

I told him he must do three more miles, and then he should have two, perhaps three. So we braced ourselves up to get the distance lessened as soon as possible, when lo, from the hedge above us came—

"Won't you have a cup of tea?"

We stopped, looked up—the evening shadows were closing—we saw no one, but again came the invitation—"Won't you have a cup of tea?"

"How long will it be?" "Now." That was better than waiting and walking three miles.

It was a friend; he came down the bank, led us up and into his house, and there refreshed us with the best he had.

Young friend, are you thinking of having salvation presently, at the end of life's journey? Jesus offers it now.

After that tea the three miles seemed so short and pleasant. Thus with life. Why put off that which will make you strong to endure, and even turn endurance into enjoyment?

"And what did you do with the twopence the ferryman gave you?" do you ask.

We kept it till we came to another ferry, where it was demanded; and it made us think of the death-ferry which we are all nearing; the grace I receive now will carry me over at last, so remember—

"The death of Elisha."—2 Kings xiii. 14-25.

Golden Text.—"Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."—Psalm cxvi. 15.

HALF A CENTURY.

TIME moves so swiftly now that great changes may happen in half a century. But in those days the world walked, now it flies. It is nearly fifty years since the story recorded in the last lesson. Elisha has been working quietly in his prophetic and pastoral office. Only once we see him doing his helpful work at the siege of Samaria. The teacher should tell the story of this wonderful siege and deliverance, also the lesson taught by the captain who could not believe the prophet's word and the awful fulfilment of Elisha's saying.

THE DECLINING DAY.

Elisha is dying. His long day of over eighty years is closing. The Syrians are still harassing the border country of Palestine. They had seized most of Israel's possessions on the east of Jordan. The lesson turns round the defeat of the Syrians.

Joash hears that Elisha is dying at Samaria and comes down to weep over the prophet. For sixty years he had been the one whom king and nation had regarded as God's representative, and who had been their defender and deliverer in all times of peril. So when the king sees Elisha he cries, "My father, the chariot of Israel and the horsemen thereof." This expression was used by Elisha when Elijah was taken. It means that the defence of the nation is departing. "Some trust in chariots and in horses, but we will trust in the name of the Lord our God."

ELISHA DIES IN PEACE.

When a man dares to speak out the unpalatable truth he is hated by those with whose ease he interferes. Most of the prophets were slain. John the Baptist is beheaded. Jesus is crucified. Several of the apostles were put to death. Savonarola and John Huss were burnt. A minority, including Wycliffe and Luther, have been allowed to die in peace. Elisha is honoured in his death. It is possible to live a martyr's life, as well as die a martyr's death. Those who have suffered for others, whether in life or death, pass to the crown of joy to which the Master looked.

THE PROPHET'S LEGACY.

Elijah left his mantle, and to the nation and the world a wreath of holiness and inspiration. Elisha leaves to the king the hope of speedy victory over the perpetual foes of his people. This is the meaning of the story.

(1) Elisha's hand on the first shot was to show that God's guidance and benediction would rest on the effort of Joash against the Syrians.

(2) Elisha in the name of God tells Joash now to take the arrows and to shoot downwards to the ground.

The first shot was one of prophetic promise. The rest depended upon Joash.

Lesson.—We have our part to play in all good work. If we do ours we may rest assured that God will do his.

(3) Joash shot three arrows in a half-hearted manner and then tired of the symbol. He ought to have gone with enthusiasm into the performance, and, using all his arrows, to have exterminated the enemy.

MANY STILL LIKE JOASH.

We have our enemies of ignorance and sin.

(a) We must never rest content with what we already know about God and God's world. Newton said he felt like a boy still going to school with his satchel—and we, too, ought always to be shooting away the foe of ignorance in ourselves and in others. All the pride and prejudice due to the fact that people have only shot three arrows, and they think the enemy of ignorance is slain.

(b) Our besetting sins. When we become as good as those round about us, we rest. Three arrows instead of six. Or perhaps we have some pet sin which we don't like to kill, and so we desist from fighting against it. Three arrows instead of six.

(c) Remember as it was with Joash so it will be with us. If we do not kill our enemy—sin—it will kill us. It is a serpent nurtured in the bosom.

Women's Armenian Relief Fund.

DEAR SIR,—The following extracts from a letter lately received from Dr. G. C. Raynolds will interest you. There is no doubt, from what he says, but that the need will be very heavy indeed during the winter—which commences with the early days of October—particularly among the villages in the vilayet of Van. I have also included some remarks by Mrs. Cole respecting Mr. Edward Millard, who has lately returned from an Evangelistic Mission to Turkey in Asia, and extracts from a letter from Mr. Millard.—Faithfully yours,

MARY HICKSON (Mrs.), Hon. Sec.

Grange-road, Sutton, Surrey.

Van, June 30, 1898.

DEAR MRS. COLE,—My associate, Mr. Allen, is just on the point of leaving for America, and his work is thus being turned over to me. I have to look after the various branches of work connected with the premises, the orphanage, etc. You will therefore excuse my writing very fully. Mr. Millard, an English evangelist, spent ten days with us a few weeks ago, and was very much interested in the orphan work.

In the autumn we shall be able to form a more intelligent estimate of what the needs for the winter will be. The villagers on the route of my recent journey were living on roots and greens, with hardly any bread to help out, and this must continue till harvest. The amount sown is small, and the character of the product of that is not yet apparent, but the promise is only moderate. Russia is sending back thousands of refugees, who had taken refuge within her borders, and they return to find their fields in the hands of the Koords, and their houses too, so far as they have not been destroyed. They have no animals, tools, or seeds, even if their fields are given back, and they add to the existing difficulty in very large measure. In the Bitlis vilayet, through which I passed, the Koords are now committing all sorts of outrages, and the general outlook is really most depressing.—Yours sincerely and gratefully, G. C. RAYNOLDS.

FROM MRS. COLE.

"I have seen the young evangelist from Armenia, Mr. Edward Millard. He has addressed some 250 great meetings throughout Armenia, often 2000 or 3000 people in the Gregorian churches, and has had most absolute attention. Splendid work is being done amongst the children, and it is quite astonishing to hear how much has been taught and learnt in so short a time, and all done in a truly loving and religious spirit, and with absolute discipline and ready obedience. He speaks hopefully and warmly of our manufacturing industries, and urges their continuance for the widows and young people, asking for help for the men in grain, seeds, and implements."

Mr. EDWARD C. MILLARD writes on July 29: "The profitableness, as one may call it, of the orphan work is very encouraging. Every penny spent in these orphanages makes matters better for all concerned, and I hope there will be a good response to the prayers of the friends that those whose hearts are touched by the Lord may obey in giving as He presses upon them. You will see by Dr. Raynolds' letter to me that Mr. Allen has left Van. I sincerely hope that a young doctor will be sent, so as to free Dr. Raynolds for this most important orphan and industrial work, in which he is so interested and so capable of carrying on successfully. Dr. Raynolds, at the same time, would very much appreciate the assistance for a time of a lady worker, who would be able to relieve Mrs. Raynolds by superintending the girls' department, for there is danger of overwork."

Anglo-American Relations.—At a gathering held in the Westminster Chapel, James-street, Buckingham Gate, London, on Sunday, addresses on the subject of an Anglo-American alliance were delivered by Rev. Samuel G. Smith, of St. Paul, Minnesota, and Mr. T. B. Roberts, the hon. secretary of the Anglo-American League, before a crowded congregation. On either side of the entrance to the building the Union Jack and the Stars and Stripes were entwined together, while inside the front of the organ loft was also discovered the national colours of both countries. The speeches were preceded by a service of prayer and hymns specially selected for the occasion.

OBITUARY.

MR. G. R. COATES.

A cablegram has been received containing the sad news that Mr. George R. Coates, mining engineer, son of Mr. John Coates, C.E., a prominent Wesleyan layman in London, has been accidentally shot during a prospecting tour in North-West Ontario, Canada. The deceased, who was only twenty-two years of age, was educated at Leys School, Cambridge, under the late Dr. Moulton, and was a young man of considerable literary promise.

MRS. LEMARK.

This lady was for twenty-seven years the Matron of the Rescue Home, Milton House, Fernshaw-road, Chelsea, one of the branches of the Society for the Friendless and Fallen. She was the first matron appointed when the Home was opened. Her death occurred on the 15th inst., after a most painful illness, extending over several months, during which her patience and resignation to the Divine will were an inspiration to all who had the privilege of seeing her. In spite of the holiday season, there was a large number present at her funeral in Fulham cemetery on the 19th inst., and among the mourners was a former inmate of the Home who has been fifteen years in the situation provided for her when first placed out. She was greatly beloved and is deeply mourned by a large circle of Christian friends and fellow-workers.

MR. JAMES KEATES.

Many will hear with sorrow of the death of Mr. James Keates, manager of the Bessbrook Homes. He died from inflammation of the brain brought on by the excessive heat. The Bessbrook Homes were founded by Mr. G. P. H. Maynard, with the object of helping hopeless and homeless men. The first centre, 39, Queen-square, Bloomsbury, was opened in 1893. It provided them with work and a dwelling-place, but avoiding all appearance of charity, and paying them only for what they earned.

The establishment was conducted on Christian principles, and the inmates became total abstainers on entering. Besides board-carrying, the inmates of the homes deliver circulars, address envelopes, and in other ways make themselves useful. No. 2 Home is at 167, High Holborn, and is available for forty men. They have all been thoroughly tested at 39, Queen-square, and slightly better provision is made for them; here they pay three shillings a week instead of the two shillings at Queen-square. No. 3 Home is at 28, Orde Hall-street, near Queen-square, and is slightly better still; it is intended as a boarding-house for men who have obtained permanent situations, and they pay here 3s. 6d. a week. Meantime, all who are interested in the work will learn with grief of the death of the earnest and useful man who had so much to do with its organisation.

Personalia.

Rev. H. Price Hughes and Mrs. Hughes celebrated their silver wedding last Saturday.

Rev. Isaac Shimmin, the founder of the Wesleyan Methodist Church in Bulawayo, has arrived in England, and does not intend to return to Rhodesia.

The Bishop of Ripon fell on the lawn while playing with his children last week, and fractured his collar-bone. The broken bone has been set, and the patient is progressing favourably, but he will be incapacitated from duty for some time.

Mr. F. Staniland, recently returned from Japan, after several years' residence there, is open to arrange with churches and chapels to lecture, during September and early October, on "Japan and the Japanese," with magic lantern illustrations. Letters may be addressed to him, Hazelwood House, Richmond-road, Staines.

Requests for Prayer.

For a sixteen days' mission at Oswaldtwistle, by Miss Seymour.

For blessing on a mission by Rev. Jas. Lyall, of Chicago, in Caledonian Crescent Mission Hall, Edinburgh.

Items of Interest.

The King of Abyssinia claims to be a lineal descendant of the Queen of Sheba in the ninety-seventh generation.

The departure of the Southern Cross on her voyage of Antarctic exploration has taken place amid considerable enthusiasm.

The Premiers of Queensland, New South Wales, and Victoria have met in conference at Sydney on the recent New Guinea concession.

Rev. C. H. Goodman, of the United Methodist Mission, who was thought to have been massacred in West Africa, has arrived at Liverpool.

The expedition to Khartoum is progressing amid serious interruptions from the swelling Nile, the intense heat, and the sting of scorpions.

The formal opening of the new cable line between Cape Cod and Brest was the occasion of the exchange of friendly greetings between Presidents McKinley and Faure.

The Moravians are considering whether the society that did the first missionary work in the West Indies has not a duty to Porto Rico, as it is being opened to Evangelical influences.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes thinks that the betrayal of the temperance cause by the Liberal party would destroy the latter for a generation, as the immense majority of its supporters are temperance men.

The Church Army in America is very prosperous. Receipts for last year reach nearly to half-a-million dollars.—There are in New York more than five hundred distinct charities that cope with the giant needs of the mammoth city.

Important results have been achieved in the direction of the pacification of the west and south of the island of Madagascar, where General Gallieni has received the submission of several Sakalava and Mahafaly chiefs.

The National Council of Free Churches has done much to unite the forces of Nonconformity. At the autumnal meeting of the Baptist Union in Nottingham, Rev. R. J. Campbell (Congregational) will preach, while at the Congregational Union meetings at Halifax, Rev. W. L. Watkinson (Wesleyan), will preach.

India.—The monsoon continues excellent throughout India. This means a second good crop, and the termination of all fears of famine.—The plague in Bombay has again become epidemic. Deaths are increasing each week. The official report states that there have been 100,000 victims, but the mortality is thought to be greater than that. Two European ladies have succumbed to the plague.

Russia's Movements.—Russia is reported to be carrying on pourparlers with Spain for a naval base in the Philippines—but it seems that the surrender of Manila includes the cession of the islands to the United States.—She plans, further, to build a railway from the Mediterranean to the Persian Gulf, starting at Tripoli harbour, in Syria, and ending at Koweyt. —She has replied to the circular of the Porte, positively opposing the despatch of fresh Turkish troops to Crete.—Russia is trying to oust Sir Robt. Hart from his position as Commissioner of Chinese Customs, and to replace him by a Russian.

America and Spain.—In official circles at Washington it is felt that President McKinley's test of statesmanship will come after the conclusion of peace, when he will have to determine his policy in connection with the development of American influence among the great commercial nations.—In Spain the Carlists are ready to rise, and are only awaiting the conclusion of the peace negotiations and the return of the Cuban army to strike.—There is terrible mortality among the Spanish troops at Santiago, the number of dead being so great that the bodies are cremated by hundreds.—The American Bible Society has taken steps in regard to Bible work in the Philippines, authorising their agent in China, Dr. Hykes, to visit Manila and make investigations.

A Timely Utterance.—Dean Farrar was the special preacher at St. Mary's Parish Church, Scarborough, on Sunday. In the course of his sermon, the Dean said that a church might be particular about candlesticks, vestments, rubrics, and the use of this thing or that thing, and yet be no better than a whited sepulchre; and Churchmen might bow their heads like bulrushes and go through the externals of public worship without having in their hearts one atom of that holy reverence which blossomed into righteousness and love. Such churchmanship was no better than the booming gong or the clanging cymbal, and religion was irreligion if it substituted man's traditions for Christ's teaching.

President McKinley and Sabbath Observance.

THE President is most conscientious in the religious observance of the Sabbath. Although the exigencies of war have rendered it necessary for him to transact some business on Sunday, he always does it with extreme reluctance.

Some officials at the White House, Washington, arranged a picnic down the Potomac for him for a particular Saturday afternoon, intending to return on Sunday night, so that the President might enjoy twenty-four hours in perfect liberty from State affairs. Hearing of the plan, he at once said, "That will not do." He would not spend the Sabbath travelling on a steamer for his own pleasure and recreation, because he did not believe it right. "He went down the river, but he was back in the White House before the Sabbath began."

Such loyalty to the Lord's Day cannot but have a powerful influence for good upon the nation. Sunday evenings at the White House are spent by the President in the midst of his family, where reading and the singing of hymns occupy the time.—Christian Intelligencer.

The Waldensian Church.

WE are glad to have tidings from Italy and Sicily of the progress of Evangelical Christianity. The restlessness amongst the priests of the Romish Church—many having already come out from her communion—is a significant sign of the times. If the Protestant Churches, however, were thoroughly united they would be a much greater power for the spread of the pure truth of the Gospel than they are. The ancient Waldensian Church especially is making her influence felt in many directions. The evangelistic efforts of this community are being much blessed. One result of mission enterprise in Riesi, in Sicily, is most encouraging. Last month the new church there, which had been in process of erection for some months, was opened amid many congratulations. Pastors and delegates from various parts of the island, and some from Southern Italy, took part in the rejoicings. They were met at the gate of the town by a band of music, which played the Italian National Anthem and the Hymn of Garibaldi.

Somebody Else.

Who is Somebody Else? I should like to know.
Does he live at the North or South?
Or is it a lady fair to see,
Whose name is in everyone's mouth?
For Meg says, "Somebody Else will sing,"
"Or Somebody Else can play."
And Jack says, "Please let Somebody Else
Do some of the errands to-day."

If there's any hard or unpleasant task,
Or difficult thing to do,
'Tis always offered to Somebody Else.
Now isn't this very true?
But if some fruit or a pleasant trip,
Is offered to Dick or Jess,
We hear not a word about Somebody Else,
Why? I will leave you to guess.

The words of cheer for a stranger lad,
This Somebody Else will speak;
And the poor and helpless who needs a friend
Good Somebody Else must seek.
The cup of cold water in Jesus' name,
Oh! Somebody Else will offer.
And words of love for a broken heart
Brave Somebody Else will proffer.

There are battles in life we only can fight,
And victories too, to win,
And Somebody Else cannot take our place,
When we shall have entered in;
But if Somebody Else has done his work,
While we for our ease have striven,
'Twill only be fair if the blessed reward
To Somebody Else is given. —Selected.

The Hadleigh Colony.—The Salvation Army's industrial land colony at Hadleigh, Essex, was visited on Monday by about 1000 members of the "Light Brigade," whose share in the operations consists in keeping money-boxes and placing trifles therein from time to time for the replenishing of the war chest. Last year the Army gathered over £10,000 from this source, the yield of which grows steadily. There are 250 "colonists," as the men under process of reclamation are called, and the visitor can but marvel as the officials and their assistants quote case after case of happy revolutions worked in lives that seemed at first hopeless.

The Book World.

MR. SPURGEON'S LIFE.*

Those who welcomed the first volume of Mr. Spurgeon's autobiography have anxiously awaited the publication of the second volume. At length it is issued, and in point of form and contents admirably matches its handsome predecessor. The illustrations are numerous, and in some cases of historic importance. Here we get glimpses of notabilities of bygone days, and interior and other views of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, recently, alas! destroyed by fire.

The opening chapters of the volume deal with "Love, Courtship, and Marriage," and are largely filled with matter that has the charm of novelty as well as the fragrance of affection and devotion. Of course this is from the pen of Mrs. Spurgeon who makes it abundantly clear that both as a lover and a husband, C. H. Spurgeon's rule always was—Christ and his service first; all else subservient to Him. Among the illustrations which have been specially prepared for this portion of the work, are three which will be sure to have a hearty welcome —"My Brixton Home," "Our Trysting-place," and "Facsimiles of Lovers' Keepsakes,"—portraits of the young couple when they were engaged. Even the "love-letters" of 1855 contained references to the storm of abuse which had already burst upon the young preacher's head; and two chapters are devoted to "Early Criticisms and Slanders." Copies are given of some of the caricatures which helped to increase Mr. Spurgeon's popularity, though they may not have been issued with that intention.

The narrative in its autobiographical form is resumed with a chapter, "In Labours more Abundant." In succeeding pages details are given of the growth of the Church of Christ in general, and of the Baptist denomination in particular, as realised a generation ago. Then we follow the great preacher as seeking the souls of men, acting the part of Mr. Greatheart in Bunyan's immortal allegory, and saying, "I am engaged in personally-conducted tours to heaven. It is my business, as best I can, to kill dragons, and cut off giants' heads, and lead on the timid and trembling." After the story of the founding of the College, and the issuing of the Pastor's earlier writings, Mrs. Spurgeon describes the early years of wedded life. A full account is given of the great catastrophe at the Surrey Gardens, and of the events that led to the opening of the great Tabernacle. Dealing with the words and works, aspirations and undertakings, of a great man, the volume is of surpassing interest from beginning to end. All preachers of the Gospel will find its pages profitable as well as entertaining.

The well-known controversial monthly, The Anti-Infidel, keeps on its way, and we welcome another volume, the thirteenth, in which a year's parts are stitched together. There is considerable variety in the contents, sketches and arguments being combined with records of work and incidents in connection with the conflict with atheism. (1s. 6d. Snow & Co.)

An interesting compilation, likely to promote godly meditation, is Aspirations of a Devout Soul, expressed in the words of the Psalter, or Psalms of David. (2s. 6d. Longmans & Co.) Canon Pollock, who writes a preface to the book, thoughtfully says that "in proportion as we study the Psalms we find words which reveal not only our blessed Lord's outward actions but also the innermost working of his soul, and so are furnished with an inspired guide to our own devotions."

A pamphlet at once instructive and timely is The Priesthood of the New Covenant, by Werner H. K. Soames, M.A., of St. George's, Greenwich. (Elliot Stock.) Dedicated to "The Church Cleansed by the Blood of Martyrs, the Church which Protests against the Errors of Rome, the Reformed Church, the Church of England," it is a remarkably compendious inquiry into priestly characteristics and sacerdotal claims. In a prefatory note Mr. Soames alludes to the present crisis in the Church of England as follows:—"Things have come to such a pass nowadays that one does not know how soon a volcanic eruption may burst forth and wreck the Church, which for so many a generation has borne brave and true testimony to the truth of God. The only possible way of averting such a catastrophe is for the ministers and the people to learn and to re-embrace the truth as it is taught in the Holy Scriptures." This striking pamphlet is sent forth in the hope that God will use it as one means to the end indicated.

"A Churchwoman" has sent a donation of 100 guineas to the Church Army for the purpose of providing and equipping another mission and colportage van for the Winchester diocese, the present one being quite unequal to meet all the applications for a van mission. The Church Army has now fifty-five of these vans.

The Bishop of Wakefield has received from Sir R. Tempest a further donation of £1000 towards the Bishop How memorial scheme for enlarging Wakefield cathedral. Additional meetings are to be held in the diocese during the autumn, and it is hoped that the first instalment of £10,000 needed in order to begin the work will shortly be secured.

Each summer since Rev. H. J. Bulkeley was appointed rector of Morpeth he has opened the rectory grounds on Sunday evenings, after service, to the adult population of the town. A short undenominational service has been held, and the claims of some philanthropic or Christian cause advocated. These most successful gatherings are attended by persons of all denominations.

Canon Carter, Tait Missioner for the diocese of Canterbury, is making arrangements for a band of ladies, experienced in work among the London poor, to visit Kentish hop-gardens and devote themselves to mission work amongst the women, girls, and children who throng the farms along the valley of the Medway. The workers will be under the direction of the local parochial clergy.

The Church Army are in need of a number of bright, earnest, active young men, from nineteen to twenty-five years of age, filled with the desire to do the Master's work. They also want a number of thoroughly earnest, humble women as mission nurses, rescue and slum workers. The whole of the training is absolutely free of cost, and board and lodging is provided free during the entire period of training. Information will be given by Rev. W. Carlile, hon. chief sec., 130, Edgware-road, London, W.

Congregational.

Mr. George Gee Wah has been appointed first missionary to the Chinese in Adelaide.

Rev. John Eames, of Cambridge, who succeeds the late Rev. E. Theodore Hitchens in the pastorate of the Eccleston-square Church, Belgrave-road, S.W., will commence his ministerial duties on Sept. 18.

At the London Missionary Society's valedictory meeting at Halifax (Oct. 12), Rev. H. Arnold Thomas, M.A., chairman-elect of the Congregational Union, will deliver the address. Dr. Horton will preside at the meeting of the Watchers' Band.

Rev. James Pritchard, a native of Mold, who for the last fifteen years has been minister of the Edwards Memorial Church, Port Elizabeth, has reached this country, and will stay for about a year, endeavouring to awaken fresh interest in colonial mission work.

Arrangements are being made for the celebration in Nov. of the 150th anniversary of the foundation of Carr's-lane Chapel, Birmingham. This historic church was the result of the secession of a number of members from the Old Meeting Church, in consequence of Arian tendencies.

The Congregational Union Assembly, after an interval of forty years, meets in Halifax during October. Rev. W. L. Watkinson, ex-President of the Wesleyan Conference, has consented to preach the Colonial Missionary sermon on the afternoon of Tuesday, Oct. 11, in Harrison-road Chapel, and to address the public meeting at night.

The U.M. cause at Manor Chapel, Bermondsey, is in a flourishing condition under its young pastor, Rev. W. Kaye Dunn. Last Connexional year the offertory amounted to £183, being an increase of £56 on the year.

A building, known as Emmanuel Church, West Brixton, belonging to the Church of England, and erected originally by the vicar and a number of parishoners in 1881 at a cost of £2500, has now been secured by the P.M. Church for £1000.

Sunday, October 16, and Monday, October 17, have been set apart by the P.M. Connexion as days of universal prayer for Sunday-schools; and Sunday, November 27, will be observed throughout the Connexion as Temperance Sunday.

Mr. J. Theodore Donaldson, of George-street, Haslingden, who has been awarded one of the Quiver medals for lengthened Sunday-school service, has been connected with King-street Sunday-school for over seventy years, having been taken there as a child of four.

A father, mother, and daughter who resided at Ribe U.M. Mission Station, East Africa, for ten years, have been sent back to slavery by British officials at Mombasa. The missionary remonstrated and protested, but the officials said "they must administer the law."

Revised regulations have been issued by the Government of India with regard to the use of Anglican churches belonging to the Government for services of denominations. Such regulations have existed since 1860, but hitherto they have been confined to Presbyterians. Henceforth Wesleyans will be included.

Methodist New Connexion Home Mission stations show an increase of sixty-four members. In all except two stations there are increases, besides a gain of Sunday-school teachers and over 100 scholars. The mission at Layton, an inland suburb of Blackpool, where no provision for worship existed, is growing, and it will be necessary to provide a suitable building instead of the present barn.

In 1793 there were only 231 ministers in the Church in Ireland, including the Synod of Ulster and the seceders; there are now upwards of 600.

The remarkable revival of religion at Summerhill, county Meath, continues. It is conducted by Mr. Craig, now in the fifty-seventh year of his ministry.

Rev. W. C. Roberts, D.D., a well-known Welsh Calvinistic Methodist minister, has accepted the principalship of the Central College, Danville, Kentucky, U.S.A.

The English Synod has grown encouragingly since the Union of 1876. The congregations and preaching-stations have increased from 271 to 327, and the sitting accommodation from 34,146 to 162,044. The membership has grown from 51,013 to 71,444. The estimated value of the Church property has improved by over £800,000.

Much regret is felt by a wide circle of friends at the death of Rev. John Elliott, Presbyterian minister, Armagh, at the age of seventy-four years. Mr. Elliott took for many years a deep interest in the Hibernian Bible Society, of which he was local secretary, and also in the Colportage Society of Ireland, of which he was convener.

Salvation Army.

Another Industrial Home for women has been opened at Toronto.

In the Government Reformatory of Western Australia boy prisoners are to be handed over to the S.A. authorities, who will employ them on a new industrial farm in the Collie district.

The Chinese School in Melbourne, Australia, carried on by the Salvation Army is doing excellent work. As a mark of their appreciation the local Chinese prepared a public tea at their own expense, and invited Mrs. Booth as the principal guest.

In the San Quentin penitentiary, California, the Salvation Army has a corps of twenty-one soldiers, as a result of its officers' efforts. All are serving sentences varying from one year to a lifetime. The prison officials commend the work, and the Chaplain speaks very highly of the consistent lives of the converts.

A capacious building accommodating thirty men has been secured at Sydney for a home for discharged prisoners. It stands on twenty-one acres of ground, and is admirably adapted for its purpose. The industries carried on embrace salvage and woodwork, mat and toy making, poultry and canary rearing, and flower growing.

The General is conducting Salvation campaigns in various parts of England, including a great camp meeting at Fakenham, in Norfolk, when the meetings will be held in a huge marquee. Mrs. Booth has also been holding successful social meetings in the principal summer centres, including Harrogate, Scarborough, Folkestone, Tunbridge Wells, etc.

The Crowning Curse of Popery.—In a letter to The Times, Rev. A. Robins, of Windsor, says:—"The growth of the confessional, 'of all the curses of Popery the crowning curse,' in the Church of England, minimise it as some weak minds ever halting between two opinions will, is not, as is by some alleged, 'insignificant.' It has come on by leaps and bounds, of course in the dark, where the secret societies do their undermining. It has increased appallingly. It is appallingly increasing. The modern mimics of medievalism are conspiring in many secret ways and places to cut us off from the true faith of the Church of England. It is a libel on the primitive and the pure to call confession 'Catholic.' Do not let us who can see what is coming look on and do nothing, whilst they who would make us the captives of a 'crowning curse' dig a trench around our liberties and about our laws."

Finsbury Park Rescue and Preventive Association.—Mr. John Sellers, who has assumed the post of honorary treasurer to the Alpha House Home, 45, Hanley-road, N., writes:—The work has been sadly crippled for want of funds, and often the most pitiful cases have to be turned away. As so many of the girls who become inmates are from suburban or country districts, it seems only reasonable that residents in those parts should have the opportuity of helping us. During their residence in the Home the girls are trained in laundry work, needlework, and general household duties, and when not returned to their friends situations are obtained for them as domestic servants in Christian families. It is most pleasing to find how many of them appreciate the interest taken in their welfare, and continue to attend the meetings held at the Home from week to week for their benefit."

Notes and Comments.

A N esteemed correspondent sends us "a votive offering" which he was led to make "for special deliverance from a pecuniary difficulty, in answer to special prayer." His gift goes to help several excellent institutions. We pray and we receive, but do we so readily give back to God? We commend the act of our correspondent as an example to others.

The Church Congress, which is to meet in Bradford during the last week of this month, is already exciting much interest. The present anti-Ritualistic movement amongst the Evangelical clergy will no doubt give the meeting a special significance. Yorkshire is a stronghold of Protestantism, and the assembly could hardly have met in a more favourable centre. The Bishop of Ripon has ruled out "burning questions" from the programme. The Evangelical section of the clergy, however, do not mean to hold their peace upon the matters that press for consideration. It is impossible to prevent the question of the prevailing clerical lawlessness coming up. Several leading Evangelicals, including Archdeacon Madden, of Liverpool, Rev. Dr. Moule, of Cambridge, Prebendary Eardley-Wilmot, Prebendary Webb-Peploe, and Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence have consented to speak at a meeting to be held on the first evening of Congress week, under, it is expected, the presidency of Sir John Kennaway, M.P., when "The Present Crisis in the Church of England" will be discussed. The meeting, however, is to be of a private character, limited to ticket-holders.

We cannot be too thankful that there is good hope of the industrial strife in South Wales reaching a satisfactory termination very soon. Too long already has the bitterness between capital and labour been fomented in the coal industry. Both masters and men must be heartily tired of the enforced inactivity. The compromise agreed upon at the conference on Saturday, though not granting all that could have been desired, put forth an equivalent to a minimum wage—at least, the principle has been accepted. The proposals involve an arrangement that whenever wages are reduced below 12½ per cent. upon the standard of 1879 the men will be at liberty to terminate the agreement. The minimum is thus secured in its first stage. We trust that the terms arrived at will establish a foundation for lasting peace, which is the one great need of the whole district.

The President of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference expressed the other day a truth which is too much forgotten in the heat and selfishness of party conflict :—

Whatever party identifies itself with the liquor trade will, at no distant date, experience the disastrous fate which befell the slavery party in the United States of America.

To obtain votes is not the only thing necessary at an election ; more depends on the quality and on the object for which they are given than on the quantity. Parties, like individuals and nations, are judged according to their works. "The face of the Lord is against them that do evil."

The Brewster Sessions are giving evidence of an improved state of conscience with regard to the drink traffic, magistrates often refusing new licences, and not being unwilling to take away an old one when they had a good reason for doing so, and also being especially determined to prevent the supplying of drink to children. Their sensitiveness of feeling and carefulness of action mark a great advance upon the old rough and ready way of doing things, and may be fairly taken as a reflection of an improved public feeling generally. Even "the trade" itself, if only for prudential reasons, is professing an anxiety at least to diminish the number of houses, and so remove from the public eye some of the causes of offence. In Birmingham the brewers have agreed among themselves to close twenty-three houses, and ultimately fifty ; and in thanking them for co-operating with the magistrates Mr. Arthur Chamberlain said that "they did not wish any young children to be served, and sooner or later they would not have them served." Only let this tone predominate, and an appreciable check will be given to this threatening evil.

Once more the impartial and authoritative report of the Asylums Committee of the London County Council has indicated the vice which does most to fill the institutions in their charge, the pauper in and out patients of which number over twenty thousand.

Intemperance in drink is the chief cause assigned for the insanity of patients admitted last year, the number who became demented from mental anxiety, domestic troubles, overwork, privation, and so forth being by comparison ridiculously light.

It is a striking fact that the majority of our insane are drawn from two extremes of intellectual activity—the overstrained clergy and the vacant country labourers. Surely there is no excuse for the former, at all events, with the command before us to cast all our care upon Him, and be anxious for nothing! And how much trouble, overwork, and worry might be saved by constantly remembering that they who are called to Divine work receive Divine strength in full proportion to their duties, and that God is not a Master who expects two things done at once!

Again and again has attention been called to the evils resulting from too great facilities for divorce without the imposition of proportionate penalties on the parties charged with the cause, but it is not often that a judge on the Bench takes his stand as a Christian man and protests. All the more praise is, therefore, due for the action last week of Mr. Justice Phillimore, to whom fell the duty of formally declaring absolute the decrees in some twenty cases which had been before the Courts this summer.

Equally gratifying has been the important utterance of Lord Wolseley on the morals of the Army, and the brotherly warning he has offered to all in the ranks, who may indeed be thankful for their general's example. In the course of his remarks he says :—

Nothing has probably done more to deter young men who have been respectably brought up from entering the Army than the belief, entertained by them and by their families, that barrack-room life is such that no decent lad can submit to it without loss of character or self-respect. The Commander-in-Chief desires that, in making recommendations for selection for promotion, regard should be had to example set to the soldier. No man, however efficient in other respects, should be considered fit to exercise authority over his comrades if he is of notoriously vicious and intemperate habits.

He points out the dangers of men in the prime of youth exchanging the helpful and restraining influences of home-life for the unnatural surroundings of the barrack. No one can be blind to the effects of that system and the important questions it raises ; but so long as the cause is unavoidable the only remedy is the salvation of the individual soldier. Such a manifesto as this should go far towards purifying the atmosphere, and the warning with regard to example is a most effectual available lever.

The Westminster Gazette has had the courage—and it is courage—to say in view of the military preparations for a battle in Egypt :—

We hope we are not deficient in spirit if we say that we cordially hope, though without expecting, that the capture of Omdurman may be a "military promenade."

It makes one sick to think of a repetition, as there probably will be, of the scenes that took place at Atbara on Good Friday. The words of Tolstoi, written in the same paper on the same day, are words that the British people may well take to heart at this time :—

Enlightened, sensible, good Christian people who inculcate the principle of love and brotherhood, who regard murder as an awful crime, who, with very few exceptions, are unable to kill an animal—all these people suddenly, under those conditions when these crimes are called war, not only acknowledge the destruction, plunder, and killing of people as right and legal, but themselves contribute towards these plunders and murders, prepare themselves for them, take part in them, are proud of them.

This inconsistency will become too glaring and too shocking to be borne.

The Emperor of Russia has suggested to the Governments of Europe that an international conference be called to deliberate on the importance of a mutual reduction of armaments by all the leading Powers. No wiser or more humane proposal has been made to the Governments of Europe for many years. It is to the honour of the Czar that he has taken the initiative in this important movement, and probably this will secure for it a more favourable consideration than if the proposal had come from England. It is to be hoped—and prayed for—that the design will be successfully carried out, and thus the burdens and dangers of the nations be lessened and a great blot on our civilisation wiped away.

At the same time doubts are freely expressed as to the disingenuousness of the proposal, and fears as to what may lie behind. Be this as it may, the European Governments will incur a serious responsibility if they do not in the first instance treat it as bona fide, and meet accordingly for conference. This will determine subsequent action. It is a significant indication of the perplexities which come to nations and men when human designs are given precedence of Divine decrees.

Whether or not the Czar's proposal attains to tangible results, it is to be earnestly hoped that the spirit of it will be put into force in his own dominions in a reversal of the cruel and pitiless policy hitherto pursued against the Stundists and other "sectarians."

The columns of The Daily News have a vigorous correspondence on the question—"Is Nonconformity a Declining Force?" by which is meant, Is it a declining political force? We can leave that question to be answered where it is asked; but it is of supreme importance to us whether any Protestant Evangelical Church is, as such, a declining force. Hold what view we may of Church government, we are nevertheless of opinion that each Evangelical Church is capable of doing a unique service, if only it has the spiritual life. In the struggle with sin we cannot afford to dispense with a single ally. There is some section of the people which each Church can reach and influence, and decline in spiritual power in any is greatly to be deplored. And with spiritual power, which is like health to the body, goes every other kind of power. The Church that has most of the spirit of Jesus will reach the most people, will influence them most deeply, and will have the widest and most formative influence over the nation in every kingdom of its life and activity.

The moral of Dr. Gregory's book—"Sidelights on the Conflicts of Methodism"—seems to be that it is an evil thing for any brother in a church, no matter how wise or good he may be, to have the pre-eminence. Dr. Bunting's autocratic rule was hurtful to himself, to his sense of fairness and his reverence for his brethren, to the spirits whom he wounded and roused into antagonism, and to the denomination he was anxious to serve. The strong men have need also to be the meek men, or the strain they put upon others becomes intolerable, and the result a secession, regarded by the secessionists as justifiable and necessary, but by the remaining party as strange and uncalled for. Every age and every church show the need for the warnings of our Lord against seeking to be first, and for the exhortations of Paul to be humble-minded, ready to honour all other men.

While it is undoubtedly right for Christians who are changing their home to choose a church in which they can hear the Word of God faithfully preached, they may in making that choice give too much attention to what they can get and enjoy, and too little to what they can give and do. A fastidious taste is not so good as practical devotion. Time may be wasted and a fault-finding spirit engendered by thinking of the ways of various preachers; at the same time, golden opportunities of doing good may be missed because the family "has not yet settled." We believe that experience would show that the families which settle the soonest, and throw themselves into Christian service, are both the happiest and the most useful. Self-forgetfulness in the service of Jesus obtains the largest blessing.

Mrs. F. H. Boalt, writing in The Arena on "Prayer: who can tell what it is?" asks for an exposition of the results of the real test of prayer that has been going on ever since men have prayed. There are men and women, she says, tried by the heaviest sorrows, possessing experiences treasured in their inmost hearts, the very saints, who hold their faith in the everlasting arms. "Among other treasures that they have in store, I am sure they will bring us good reason to believe in a watchful Presence in our troubles." The universal testimony of praying people is: "I sought the Lord, and He heard me, and delivered me from all my fears." Testimony is one thing, definition and exposition another. And even if prayer were expounded, what would it avail any but the initiated? "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him." He who would know what prayer is must pray.

A most interesting article in The New York Observer deals with the question of prayer in its relation to scientific knowledge. It reminds us that the greatest modern scientists—men who have towered above and over-shadowed all the rest—have been pre-eminently men of prayer. We have no fear of scientific investigation really proving hostile to the prayer of sincere faith. Effectual, fervent prayer has for its advocates such distinguished men of science as Sir Isaac Newton, Michael Faraday, Lord Kelvin, on this side the Atlantic; and, on the other side, James D. Dana and Sir Wm. Dawson. It never seems to have occurred to these men that there is any inconsistency between their scientific knowledge and their Christian faith. In the article alluded to the objections of the sceptic are stated and answered, while the conclusion arrived at is this:—

> Mere material and mechanical order are utterly worthless, except as a basis for the higher kingdom of God. In the highest and truest scientific sense, therefore, God becomes the supreme factor in the universe, and a correct conception of his relation to his universe shows most clearly that there is ample scope for prayer according to the Christian doctrine.

No advance of knowledge, no "higher criticism," no wider culture, can ever overthrow the simple Gospel truth: "Every one that asketh receiveth, he that seeketh findeth, to him that knocketh it shall be opened."

An old writer has said "unquietness is the greatest evil that can come into the world except sin." If there is a little rhetorical exaggeration in this saying, it represents a great truth. Modern habits are tainted with a restlessness that leaves little room in the life for the calm meditation and the serene quiet in which the most precious divine influences descend. All the more care should be taken to safeguard the "hour of silent dew"—the daily period for prayer, the weekly Sabbath for worship, the annual holiday for repose. Those who have forgotten how to be still will miss the supreme experiences of life. "In quietness and confidence shall be your strength."

The R.V. rendering of 2 Tim. iii. 16 is "Every Scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching," etc. This implies that there is Scripture which is not inspired of God, and not profitable for teaching, etc. But the Scripture calls nothing Scripture except itself. The Lord Jesus speaks of what is written in the Jewish Law as Scripture, and says "the Scripture cannot be broken." What is said of the personal Word may be said of the written Word—"He taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes" (Matt. vii. 29); "His word was with power" (Luke iv. 32). In Heb. iv. 12, 13, it is difficult to distinguish between the personal and the written Word: "The Word of God is living and active, and sharper than any two-edged sword...neither is there any creature that is not manifest in his sight." In accord with this, the Apostle says, "The Scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the Gentiles by faith, preached the Gospel beforehand unto Abram"; and again, "The Scripture hath shut up all under sin" (Gal. iii. 8, 22); and again, "The Scripture saith unto Pharaoh, For this very purpose did I raise thee up" (Rom. ix. 17). In literature and by literary men no other writings are called Scripture. The exclusive claim to the title which Scripture makes for itself is conceded by universal consent. There was no sufficient reason for sacrificing the definite and significant assertion of the A.V. for the indefinite and pointless truism substituted by the R.V.

On the other hand, the Revisers have done excellent service in the prayer taught by the Master to his disciples when they asked Him, "Lord, teach us to pray, as John also taught his disciples." In the petition, "Deliver us from evil," the A.V. is indefinite and general, while the R.V., to our great advantage, is definite and specific—"Deliver us from the evil one." It will make a great difference in our experience whether we pray for deliverance from the evil one, who is "a murderer from the beginning, a liar and the father of it," or from evil in general, unlocalised in the author of evil.

It may be profitable to call to mind at this time the faith that Luther had in the power of the Word of God. All turbulence, he said, was wrong, and only made bad worse. Words would do more than was enough with the priests, and there was no need of hewing and stabbing. The Apostle's words that the Lord should consume the Antichrist with the spirit of his mouth were to be fulfilled, according to Luther, in the words of Gospel preaching. His own experience taught him, as life advanced, to rely with quiet confidence on the simple Word; he knew that he had done more injury with it alone to the Pope, the priests and monks, than the emperors and princes had done with all their power. At Worms the whole contention ranged around the Word and what he had said of it in his various books. As to his books, he could only say, in the words of his Master: "If I have spoken evil, bear witness of the evil; but if well, why smitest thou me?" If any could confute him out of the Old Testament and the New he would throw his books into the fire. The confutation could not be given, and Luther triumphed; the Word of God could neither be bound, nor burned, nor silenced, and it must be our great weapon of attack and defence in the present struggle with sacerdotalism.

We all know the advantage and pleasure of reading an author who has the gift of illustrating his subject with rare and appropriate similes; but it is a dangerous confusion of things when the simile is put for the truth or supposed truth which it should set forth. Clothes are not the same as the man they were made to cover. Processes in nature are among the most impressive and best remembered illustrations of spiritual things, but we must not subject the spiritual to the material. The doctrine of the restitution of all things we have heard enforced by the relation of the earth to the sun. The daily revolution of the earth on its axis, while bringing light and warmth to the most of the world, leaves the poles in the cold, and you might suppose they would never see day; but the precession of the equinoxes, a slow and gradual process, brings them also at length under the blaze of the sun. So there are distant operations of the love of God. This is a wrong method of procedure. Let spiritual teachings be drawn from the Scriptures, their pure and proper source, and then bring forth the parable to adorn and enforce them. The destiny of mankind cannot be settled by any analogies, fancied or real, that we come upon in nature.

The Supremacy of Christianity.*

BY REV. D. J. BURRELL, D.D.

I AM told that one-half of this audience will presently enter on foreign missionary work, and the other half on the kindred work of home evangelisation. But what is the use? Why enlist as missionaries at all? If one religion is as good as another, you had better go to shoemaking or any other honest handicraft, rather than spend an earnest life in trying to displace influences that have power to save. But if the Gospel is spes unica, then in God's name make all possible haste to tell the world of it.

I want to make a brief survey of the more important of the false religions, and I select those that have been brought into closest contact or collision with prophetic and historic Christianity. It would be impossible to canvass all, for the religions of the world have been many and diverse. There is nothing more melancholy to contemplate than a dead or moribund religion; it means the crushing of unspeakable, innumerable hopes.

THE RELIGION OF EGYPT.

We begin with the religion of Egypt, the oldest of all. Our knowledge of it is chiefly derived from the papyrus and byssus bands which are unrolled from the mummies. We are enabled thus to form a somewhat clear conception of the sacred book known as the "Book of the Dead."

The god of this religion was Ammon-Ra; that is, the sun, as centre and source of life. He is represented as a hawk-headed man, his forehead encircled with the solar disc. He was worshipped by the priests in mysteries, but to the people all forms of life were objects of devotion. The ibis, the crocodile, the scarabeus, the lizard, and the snake—all these were worshipped as proceeding from Ammon-Ra, the mystic origin of life.

The Egyptians believed in immortality. They carved upon their mummy crypts the image of the phœnix rising from its ashes, and the lotus flower opening with the early sun. The dead were embalmed, in the hope that in the fulness of time Ammon-Ra would revive them. The coffin itself was called "the chest of life."

They also believed in a final judgment. On many other tombs the god Anubis is represented with balances in his hand—a human heart in one scale, a feather in the other. The teaching of the "Book of the Dead" is as clear with respect to final retribution as that of our own Scriptures.

But what has the religion of Egypt to say in answer to the crucial question, "What must I do to be saved?" The only preparation for judgment was obedience to the Maat, or rule of the right-living. It cannot be determined with precision what were the precepts in this elaborate code. This, however, is clear—in case of failure to obey there was no remedy for sin. It is this that stamps the Egyptian system as the religion of despair. It contains no suggestion of forgiveness. Thus, while the Egyptians were the most mirthful people on earth, they were the saddest of worshippers. It is written: "They offered tears upon the altars of their gods." An illustrious lady, the wife of Pasherenptah, is represented as thus addressing her husband from the grave: "O my beloved, forbear not to eat and drink and drain the cup of pleasure while you live; for here is the land of slumber and darkness. We weep for pleasures that have passed by."

The Coming Kingdom.

WE are waiting for the loved Lord, for his coming and his kingdom. Our dear ones, the sleeping saints, are waiting too; and soon they and the living will be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord.

How much the coming of the Lord in glory is substantiated and made palpable to the heart in the Transfiguration of the blessed Lord, which was announced to his apostles in his gracious words, "There be some standing here which shall not taste of death till they see the Son of Man coming in his kingdom"! What tender consideration of our God to give us, who are so slow to grasp such wondrous truths, the visible manifestation of what the glory is to be, as well as the record of it in the Scripture! Peter, one of the eye and ear witnesses in this sublime scene, gives us, some thirty years after, his testimony as follows: "We have not followed cunningly devised fables when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty. For He received from God the Father honour and glory, when there came such a voice to Him from the excellent glory—This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. And this voice which came from heaven we heard when we were with Him in the holy mount." This witness soon after sealed the testimony with his blood, as his Master had foretold.

Let us consider a brief statement from the combined Gospels. Jesus took the favoured three up the mount to pray apart, and to be the witnesses of his majesty. As He prayed the fashion of his countenance was altered, and He was transfigured before them: his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light and glistening as snow. The saints of the Old Testament appeared in glory. Moses had seen the solemn inauguration of the Law. Elias had sought to bring his people back to Jehovah and the Law. Now they have another theme—this their all-engrossing theme: they talk with Jesus of his decease, which he should accomplish at Jerusalem—this the great central truth which occupies both themselves and the Lord. The heavenly glory of the kingdom and death are in immediate relationship—the sufferings first, and then the glory.

The apostles, overwhelmed with so bright a revelation, could little apprehend it, though they saw the glory of the Lord and the two men that stood with Him. Peter made the rash request, his mind apparently filled with Jewish associations, "Let us build here three tabernacles: one for Thee, one for Moses, and one for Elias, not knowing what he said." But while he was speaking the Shekinah cloud overshadowed them, and they feared as they entered into the cloud and were prostrated on their faces. The voice came out of the cloud saying, "This is my beloved Son: hear Him." The patriarchs were no more seen. The Lord came and touched and quieted the three disciples, and when the voice was passed and their fears were quelled they lifted up their eyes, and "saw no man save Jesus only."

The narrative is rich in instruction for us. The God of Israel bears witness in his new name as Father, witnessing to Jesus as his Son; and the Father's affection for his Son are made known to us sinners.

The saints of the Old Testament share with those of the New Testament in the glory of Christ.

The King was murdered by his subjects, the kingdom was postponed till the King appears a second time. His saints now share in his heavenly glory as partakers of the heavenly calling.

The glory cloud God dwells in and spoke from, the same cloud that sheltered and protected his people in Egypt, all through the wilderness, and at the tabernacle.

What a thin veil there is between us and the unseen heavenly things made known to us!

The sufferings and death of our adorable Lord are the all-engrossing subject to fill our thoughts. Nothing exceeds it in importance. Our Lord did not on earth dwell very much on his atoning sacrifice, but sent down the Holy Spirit from heaven to reveal its glorious efficacy, and bring it with power to our hearts. We have Christ's words in the Gospels, but his instructions did not cease when He left the earth. His further revelations are given to his servants in the Apocalypse, and there we find He is presented in his character as the suffering Redeemer, as the slain Lamb, calling forth the praises of saints and angels. "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing." "Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation, and hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth."

May the Holy Spirit make these thoughts on the Transfiguration of our Lord as refreshing to the reader as they have been to myself.

THE DISPENSATIONS.

DEAR SIR,—In a recent issue "F. S." stated that "the prophecies of the Bible relate to three great classes of persons, viz., Gentiles, Jews, and the Church of God, with whom God is dealing at the present time on different principles." The latter part of this sentence I do not understand. It sounds to me like a contradiction of the universality of the Gospel of God. We emphasise God's love to the world—"Whosoever," "No difference," "Justified freely by his grace," "Hath broken down the middle wall of partition," "Through Him we both have our access in one Spirit unto the Father," "He is a Jew who is one inwardly," etc., etc. Will "F. S." kindly state the different principles on which he thinks God is now dealing with (1) the Gentiles, (2) the Jews, and (3) the Church of God?—Yours in the Gospel,

EVANGELIST.

Ten Weeks' School of Bible Study.—Arrangements are in progress for a series of lectures to begin in January next, and to be held in different parts of London, by Professor W. W. White, of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago. The course will consist of twenty lectures, two each week. The method will be partly by lecture, partly by diagram. The study of the Bible by book, by chapter, by topic, by word, by character, and by period will be illustrated. The objects are: (1) to secure a more comprehensive and thorough knowledge of the Bible; (2) to suggest best methods of Bible study; and (3) to stimulate to further study. The Y.W.C.A., the Y.M.C.A., and the British College Christian Union are co-operating in this movement, and will in due course issue a circular giving full information. Anyone wishing for the same should apply to one of the hon. secretaries of the School for Bible Study, at Y.W.C.A. Headquarters, 26, George-street, Hanover-square, W.; or Y.M.C.A., Exeter Hall, Strand; or B.C.C.U., 93, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

The Hall of Annas.

John xviii. 13.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

THE band that had arrested Jesus led Him back across the Kedron bridge, up the steep ascent, and through the ancient gateway, which at this season of the year stood always open, even at night.

The passage of the armed men through the quiet streets must have aroused many sleepers from their slumbers, who hurried to the windows to see them pass below in the clear moonlight. But no one guessed who was being taken into custody; and most thought that the soldiers had probably captured some more of the Barabbas gang, who at that season of the year would make a rare harvest by plundering pilgrims to the feast.

Their destination, in the first place, was the mansion of Annas, the head of the reigning priestly family, who was father-in-law of the actual high priest. He was now an old man; wealthy, aristocratic, and laden with all the honours his nation could give. For many years he had worn the high priest's robes, and though he had now nominally retired from that exalted office, he still kept his hand upon the reins of government. Caiaphas, at the time of which we speak, had held the priesthood for seventeen years under his tutelage; and he retained it for five years after. It is easy therefore to understand why Annas is described as the high priest. He was still the most powerful living wearer of that title. The whole family partook of his character, and was notorious for unwearied plotting. The gliding, deadly, snake-like smoothness with which Annas and his sons seized their prey is said to have won them the name of

"HISSING VIPERS."

It is likely that Annas and Caiaphas shared the same cluster of buildings, which was probably the official residence of the high priestly family. In the East the houses of the great are frequently a group of buildings of unequal height, standing near each other and surrounded by the same court, but with passages between, independent entrances, and separate roofs. Sometimes they would form a square or quadrangle with porticos and corridors around it, plants and fountains in the midst, and a slight awning over head to protect the open courtyard from the sun or rain, the communication with the street being through a smaller courtyard and archway, called in the Gospels "a porch." In some such cluster of splendid buildings Annas and Caiaphas and others of their family would live, and the whole would be called "the high priest's palace."

In one of the large reception halls Annas waited, impatient and feverish, to know the result of the midnight expedition. He had a nervous dread of what Jesus might do when driven to bay; and dreaded lest the secret should ooze out, and the Galilean pilgrims rise in defence of their favourite Prophet, whom four days before they had escorted into the city with shouts. What if Judas should not prove true? All these disquieting thoughts chased each other like pursuing phantoms through his mind, and it was an immense relief when the clank of weapons in the court assured him of the safe return of Malchus' party, and answering voices told him that Jesus was at last safe within his power.

The prisoner was at once brought before the old man, who eagerly scrutinised his features in the flickering light of lanterns and flambeaux, casting shadows which a Rembrandt would have loved to paint. One or two intimates may have stood around him; but the main inquiry was left to himself, as he put the Master through a preliminary and informal examination, in the hope of extracting from his replies materials on which the court, which was hastily summoned for an early hour in the morning, might proceed.

On the surface the inquiry seemed fair and innocent enough. The high priest, we learn from the 19th verse, asked Jesus of his disciples and his doctrine. But for the questions were so worded as to entangle, and to provide material on which to found the subsequent charge, which was even then being framed, that Jesus was a disturber of the public peace and a teacher of revolutionary doctrine.

First, then, about his disciples. Annas would like to be informed what this association of men meant. Why were they formed into a society? By what bond were they united? What secret instructions had they received? What hidden objects had they in view? If Jesus refused to answer these questions, might it not be made to appear that an attempt was on foot to organise a confederation throughout the entire country? If so, it would be easy to awaken the jealousy of the Roman authorities, and lead them to feel that they must take immediate steps to stamp out the plot by executing the ringleader.

And, next, as to his doctrine. Had not Jesus repeatedly spoken about the Kingdom of Heaven? What did this mean? Was He contemplating the setting up of a kingdom? Did He intend it to be understood that He was the expected Messiah, and that He meditated revolt against Rome? Was the manifestation of force, which had accompanied his recent entrance into the city, at his instigation?

Our Lord at once penetrated the design of his crafty interrogator. And in his answer He took care not to mention his disciples, speaking only of Himself. He affirmed that He had nothing to say which He had not already said a hundred times in the synagogues and the Temple, before friends and foes. He had had no secret doctrines for the initiated, but had declared all that was in his heart. Between his disciples and Himself there had been no connection other than was obvious on the surface. No meetings under cover of night, no discussions of revolutionary topics, nothing that could not bear the fullest scrutiny: "I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue, and in the Temple, whither the Jews always resort; and in secret [that is, in the sense in which you use the word] I have said nothing. Why askest thou Me? Ask them which heard Me what I have said unto them: behold, they know what I have said."

Our Lord's reference to those who had heard Him is probably an allusion to the whom Annas had set on his track, watching his actions, reporting his words. Was not this examination of the prisoner a confession that the close scrutiny to which He had been subjected for so long had failed to elicit aught on which a criminal charge could be based? Jesus knew that his most secret words had been tortured to yield an accusation against Him in vain. How great, then, was the hypocrisy which could feign ignorance! How evident it was that Annas was only intent on inveigling his prisoner to say something on which to base his after-accusation.

All this was implied in our Lord's noble and transparent words. We shall see that He adopted another tone when he was properly arraigned before the assembled Sanhedrim; but in this more private, injudicial, inquisitorial interview, with one scathing rebuke He tore away the cloak of assumed ignorance with which this crafty man veiled his sinister purpose, and laid his secret thoughts open to the gaze of all.

For the time Annas was silenced. He had made small headway in the informal examination of his prisoner, and he now gave it up. Whatever resentment he may have felt at our Lord's answer he carefully concealed, biding the hour when he might vent the vials of his hate without stint.

We must not suppose there was any anger in that long-suffering heart towards this judge. He was even then about to die for him, and to bear the guilt of the very sin He so pitilessly exposed. But surely it was the part of love to show Annas what he was, and to utter words of rebuke in which, as in a a mirror, his secret thoughts might be revealed. But if, in the moment of his humiliation, Jesus could thus search and reveal a man, what will He not do when He is

NO LONGER PRISONER, BUT JUDGE?

Oh, those awful eyes, which are as a flame of fire! Oh, those awful words, which pierce to the dividing asunder of the joints and marrow, and criticise the thoughts and intentions of the heart! What wonder that men shall at last call on the rocks to hide them from the wrath of the Lamb! Kiss the Son, lest ye perish from his presence when his wrath is kindled but a little! Blessed are they who can stand before Him without blame!

Then followed one of the grossest indignities to which our Lord was at this time subjected. On speaking thus, one of the officers, in the spirit of that despicable flunkeyism which will sacrifice all nobility and self-respect to curry the favour of a superior, smote our Lord with a rod, saying, "Answerest thou the high priest so?"

When afterwards they came around Him to mock and smite, He answered nothing; but when this first stroke was inflicted the Master said quietly, "If I have spoken what is false or unbecoming, prove that I have done so; but if you cannot, why do you strike Me? No one has the right to take the law into his own hands, much less a servant of the court."

It is impossible not to recall the mighty utterances against the resistance of wrong, spoken from the Mount, in the Messiah's manifesto: "I say unto you, that ye resist not evil; but whosoever shall smite thee on the right cheek, turn to him the other also." Clearly our Lord did not literally do so in this instance, because he saw an opportunity of revealing to this man his true condition, and of bringing him to a better mind. Our bearing of wrong must always be determined by the state of mind of those who ill-use us. In the case of some we may best arrest them by the dignity of an unutterable patience, which will bear to the utmost without retaliation—this is to turn the other cheek. In the case of others we may best serve them by eading them calmly and quietly to take the true measure of their crime. In all cases our prime consideration should be, not what we may be suffering, nor the utter injustice which is meted out for us; but how best to save the evil-doer, who is injuring his own soul more fatally than he can possibly injure us, and who is sowing seeds of harvests of incredible torture to his own conscience in the long future which lies behind the veil of sense.

If only we could drink into the pure love of Jesus, and view all wrong and wrong-doers, not in the light of our personal interest, but of their awful condition and certain penalty; if only we could grieve over the infinite horror of a warped and devil-possessed soul, drifting like a ship on fire before the breeze, straight to the rocks; if only we could see the wrong done to our Father God and his sorrow, we should understand Chrysostom's beautiful comment on this scene: "Think on Him who said these words; on him to whom they were said; and on the reason why they were said; and, with Divine power, they will cast down all wrath that may arise within thy soul."

A Tramps Mission at Glossop has been begun by Rev. R. Howton, of the Mission Hall in that town. As a member of the local Guardians of the Poor, he found many of these nomads when visiting the casual wards. For these he has held Gospel services with encouraging results. He would be glad of some good wall texts to put up in the wards.

A Wesleyan Pastoral.

THE Annual Pastoral addressed to the Wesleyan Methodist Societies of Great Britain bears the signatures of Revs. Hugh Price Hughes, President, and Marshall Hartley, Secretary, of the Conference. In opening words on duty and opportunity the address says:—"Our vocation has not lapsed, and we are but on the threshold of a great and honourable history. Be patient and abound in hope by the power of the Holy Ghost. Our church organisation, which is a growth, and no one man's feat of ecclesiastical statesmanship, may sometimes seem complex, elaborate, burdensome. Do not despise it, for its advantages are incalculable, and the course of events will more and more tend to show that it is a providential development."

While expressing satisfaction at the nett increase in church membership reported, the Pastoral calls attention to the migratory character of the populations as adverse to the stable and neighbourly feeling which distinguished the social life of the past, and at the same time imperils the growth and well-being of many of the churches. The need of full and specific religious instruction in family life is insisted upon, so that the tens of thousands of young people may grow up into loyal and steadfast disciples of Christ. Whilst the doctrinal controversies of the present generation have not found in Wesleyan Methodism special centres of activity and disturbance, yet Methodism in common with other Churches suffers in an unhealthy this constituting one of the weaknesses of evangelical work. Men do not believe so heartily and emphatically as once, and there is a tendency to settle down in an attitude of suspense and reserve. This is ascribed to the excitement and distraction of the present day, life oscillating between the excess of business occupation and the abandon of amusement, leaving the mind less fit for conviction, besides narrowing the opportunity for sustained thought.

Brought face to face with the temper of restless independence which asserts itself in every realm of human life, Methodists are exhorted to have wisdom and unshrinking courage. Parents are urged to cultivate a spirit of comradeship with their children, and the old authority will come back in better and more gracious forms. The genial atmosphere of the home, not vitiated by laxity, will nourish better fruit than the wise sternness of its piety. They are further exhorted to cultivate brotherly kindness, mutual love, and good will. Those who have wealth, social standing, and culture are to welcome those in less favoured positions, who are often keenly alive to their disabilities. Ministers and people are exhorted to be one in trying to keep the spirit of caste out of the congregations, and effectually to drive it out where it is already creeping in. They are to see that the tragic contrast between Dives and Lazarus does not exist in the household of Jesus Christ.

Reference is made to the irreligion and indifference which shows little sign of disintegration and abatement. An earnest exhortation is given to be as diligent to conscientious attendance at God's house as in drilling them in good business habits, and never to be absent personally from public worship without sufficient cause. Methodists are reminded that the acquisition of wealth is not the great end of life, and they are urged to abhor those gains which accrue through the impoverishment and degradation of others. In business and recreation alike they are to abhor all that savours of chance. The heinousness of gambling does not rise or fall with the sums of money involved. Some vices are stated to arise from the excess of legitimate and useful appetites, but gambling is a vice, root and branch, and infinitesimal degrees of it contravene alike social and spiritual laws.

Dealing with the growing sense of kinship which marks the relations of this country with the United States of America, the Pastoral remarks that the efforts of America to disburden the suffering regions of the earth of the pitiless and truculent misgovernments under which they have groaned, command warmest sympathy such as was never valued before. It claims that in fusing together the two great divisions of the Christian Churches have played the chief part, although, like their Lord, they do not cry nor uplift their voices in the highways of international politics. The Pastoral states that the Conference has been gladdened at hearing of revived missionary enthusiasm within the Methodist churches. Reference is made to the great movements at hand in the Far East, to the dissatisfaction felt in high places with the religious systems of the past, and to the patience and reverence with which such Christian literature is placed within their reach is studied. The permanence of movements that may soon be officially initiated in Eastern empires will depend upon the extent to which the popular mind has been saturated with Christian teaching through unremunerative periods of toil. There must be timely enterprise and unflagging loyalty.

The Story of a Dream.

"Your Heavenly Father knoweth."

"DO you believe in dreams, Agnes?" Mrs. Duncan looked in surprise at her husband as he asked this question in a somewhat worried tone, strongly in contrast with his usual bright calmness of manner.

"In what way, Edward? You cannot mean do I believe in their existence?"

"No, but do you think they are sent for our guidance—should we be obedient to any directions conveyed in them?"

"I suppose that would have to be decided by sanctified common sense," Mrs. Duncan said. "But what is the case in point? You look troubled, dear."

"Not troubled, exactly, but a good deal perplexed. I woke this morning with the distinct impression of a dream, in which I had been told to take to Mr. Carr the sum of £3 17s. 6d. It is not the giving of the money that is the difficulty, for Mr. Ainslie, only last Saturday, gave me a £5 note to be used for any cases of need, and I have been praying for the right one to be brought under my notice. But in the first place I cannot think that Mr. Carr is likely to want any help of the kind; and then the amount is such a curious one; if a sum like that were needed it would probably be even money."

"No, I should never have thought of John Carr as a case for charity," Mrs. Duncan said thoughtfully, "but I suppose you will find out, Edward." "I suppose I must try," her husband said, "but it does seem rather a fool's errand. Fancy me walking into that respectable tradesman's shop and saying, 'Mr. Carr, do you want £3 17s. 6d.?' However, I will walk round that way after tea; I shall have no time until then." Accordingly, about seven o'clock, the good town missionary entered a small but well-stocked and well-kept grocer's shop in the neighbourhood of Edgware-road, and asked for Mr. Carr. Mrs. Carr was behind the counter, and said that her husband had gone to Croydon on business, but she volunteered no further information, and though Mr. Duncan remained a little while, asking friendly questions about their family and their health, he had to leave at length without gaining any clue to his difficulty. But in the morning clearer light came, and Mr. Duncan announced his intention of "just looking in at Carr's." "The fact is," he added, "I have had a very uneasy night, and I cannot rest until I have satisfied myself by further inquiry."

Mr. Carr was in the shop, looking unmistakably careworn, and Mr. Duncan decided on a straight course. "Mr. Carr," he said, "you must excuse me taking a great liberty in asking a rather strange question, but—are you

IN WANT OF A LITTLE MONEY?"

The tradesman's face paled visibly as a strong emotion swept over it, and he pressed his hand heavily on the counter to steady himself. "How could you know?" he asked tremulously. "I thought it was a secret from everyone but my wife; but now that you have asked I must tell you. I never was in such straits before. Things have been very difficult in business lately, and I never had such trouble in getting in my accounts because of this strike, and yet I cannot see the women and children starve, and I have gone on giving credit, I fear a little unwisely, and my book debts are heavier than they have ever been since I commenced business. I had a large payment to make on Saturday, and it cleared me out, and another comes due to-day, and I cannot make up the amount. I went to Croydon last night, quite expecting to get money enough then; but no one could pay, and I have just been counting up what is in the till, and I am £4 short, and the bill must be met at noon."

"Four pounds," repeated the good missionary, in some perplexity, unable to reconcile the discrepancy between the sum he had been instructed in his dream to pay and the amount required.

Mrs. Carr came forward eagerly. "But, James, there is the children's money." Her husband's face brightened, "Yes, I ought not to forget that. Last night when I came from Croydon my wife and I were very downhearted, we were not used to trouble of this kind, for we have always been able to pay our way and a little to spare, and we both of us dread debt as something so very disgraceful to a Christian. When we talked together we did think that our Heavenly Father, who has bid us 'owe no man anything,' would help us in our difficulty, for He knows we have never been extravagant in spending; so we agreed between ourselves that we would just take this trouble to Him; and as it was the time for family prayer, before the children went to bed, I prayed first and then my wife, and we felt such a lifting of the burden as though the Lord had really taken it off our hearts. The bairns had never heard us pray like that before, and it seemed to puzzle them, and they were whispering together in a corner. Then they ran upstairs, and presently came scampering down again with their money boxes and emptied them out on the table beside me. Little Jessie climbed on to my knee and said, in her pretty lisping way, 'That's to help Jesus to give 'oo money, dad.' She had tenpence in her box and Walter one-and-eightpence, and I had to promise I would use it; so that left three pounds seventeen shillings and sixpence for me to raise."

The cloud lifted from the good man's face as he talked of his children, but it came back again as he added, "How it is to be done I cannot tell. I have been saying to myself all the morning that it is in the Lord's hands; but the time is getting on, and we cannot expect miracles." It seemed to the missionary that he had never before been brought so near to the wonder-working hand of God. "He has ravens still!" he could but reverently exclaim; and as Mr. and Mrs. Carr listened and looked on in astonishment he proceeded to count out the exact sum, and to explain how he had been bidden to bring it from the loving Father to his needy child.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, September 4.

"After the power of an indissoluble life." —Heb. vii. 16 (R.V. marg.).

THIS chapter is a veritable Psalm of Life. It overflows with the message of the Easter morning. Throughout its verses it is witnessed that He liveth, that He ever liveth, that He liveth after the power of an indissoluble life.

Remember, all that was done to dissolve and loose it. Satan spoke to his chief captains, Sepulchre and Corruption, and bade them hold his prisoner fast. The Sanhedrim affixed their seal, set the watch, and made the grave as secure as possible. Was all in vain. His body could not see corruption. His life defied death.

And, what is more, that life may be communicated to us by the Holy Spirit. It is not only true that He ever liveth, but also that because He lives, and as He lives, we shall live also. In the first creation God breathed into Adam the breath of his life, and he became a living soul; but in the second creation Christ breathes into us the spirit of his life, and our spirit is filled with a property which it had not previously, and in which the sons of men have no share. "The first man, Adam, was a living soul, but the Second Adam is a life-giving spirit." "He that is joined to the Lord is one spirit." See to it that you deny your own life, in deeper and ever deeper depths, that his life may become ever more regnant within you.

MONDAY, September 5.

"In that He saith, A new covenant, He hath made the first old."—Heb. viii. 13.

There had been a manifest decay and vanishing away of the first Tabernacle or Temple with its rites and services. At the time when these words were written there were evident symptoms of the approaching collapse of the whole system of which pious Jews had been wont to boast. But the Holy Spirit reassures their failing hearts.

Those who believe in Christ are still in covenant relationship with God. A new covenant has been set up, which indeed is as old as the everlasting hills. It is the covenant of love; the covenant which says very little of what man does, and much of the I WILLS of Jehovah; a covenant which was entered into between God and his Son, standing as Mediator; a covenant which has been sealed with priceless blood.

The provisions of that covenant are enumerated in the foregoing verses: that God will engrave his law on mind and heart, and take us to be his people and be our God, and remember our sins no more. As the decay of the symbols of the Old Testament indicated that it was vanishing, so the ever-fresh beauty of the supper of our Lord, maintained as in the first church, witnessed to the permanence of the New Testament.

TUESDAY, September 6.

"Unto them that look for Him shall He appear." Heb. ix. 28.

There is an evident parallel intended between the first and second Advent, and especially in the manner of looking for it. At the first Advent there were many who were definitely looking for and hastening to that day. Simeon was waiting for the consolation of Israel, and Anna spoke of the infant Lord to those who were expecting redemption in Israel. To look for the consolation and to look for the redemption were the two articles in that early creed. And presently this quiet, patient waiting broke out into the rapturous song of the Nunc Dimittis.

It has been truly remarked that this eager looking for the Advent has always been the mark of the living Church. "Ye turned," said the Apostle, "unto God from idols...to wait for his Son from Heaven." And again he said, "A crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give unto me in that day; and not to me only, but to all them that love his appearing." And remember the distinction the Master made between the virgins that watched and those that slept. "Blessed are those servants whom their Lord, when He cometh, shall find watching."

As it was with the first advent it shall be with the second. The Son of God will come at a time and in a manner for which men are not prepared; and only the elect, who may have been contemned and despised by the world at large, will discern Him, and go forth to meet Him in the air.

WEDNESDAY, September 7.

"He taketh away the first, that He may establish the second."—Heb. x. 9.

The meaning of this is clear. In the old covenant the stress was laid on the outward rite, but in the new covenant for burnt-offerings and sacrifices for sin are substituted first, the entire devotion and consecration of the blessed Lord to his Father's will, and next, ours in Him.

It is very noticeable that by the offering of the cross, in which the Saviour's yielded will culminated, we are said to have been sanctified, consecrated, or set apart once for all (ver. 10). The thought there is, evidently, that our Saviour's death has implicated us for evermore, and that his Church, whom He represented in that supreme act, is for ever pledged to be dead unto the world and sin.

Every time our will is brought into more perfect union with the will of God a further step is taken towards that glorious elevation to which Jesus bore us in the death of the cross.

And if you would have an incentive to this, remember how Jesus promised that all who would do the will of God should be reckoned members of the holy family (Matt. xii. 46-50). See to it that you are not only within the holy circle of the will of God, but that you are near the golden centre where Jesus is seated.

THURSDAY, September 8.

"They without us should not be made perfect." Heb. xi. 40.

This chapter proves that the saints of all ages are essentially one. There is a link which unites them, a thrill which passes from hand to hand around the circle. One theme for many voices, one attitude for many faces, one inspiration for many hearts. The saints that lived before the Advent and those that have lived since are one in their faith in the living God, making the unseen visible, the distant near, and seeing the eternal through the transient and ephemeral.

And now heaven waits. Its joys are not complete, its rapture not full. The blessed are blessed, but there is yet a margin between what they are and what they will be—between what they enjoy and what they may enjoy. The choir is not full, and the anthem cannot be fully rendered till our voices blend in it. There is a pause, a halt, an expectancy, an incompleteness, till we come. Your dear ones want you to be there. They have not gone far into the heart of God's bliss, but are lingering near the gate till you have joined them.

From Switzerland your friends write you to say it is perfectly beautiful, but "it will be better when you join us; we are reserving the best excursions till you arrive; we are incomplete without you; make haste." It is thus that the blessed await us. And when the whole family is gathered there will be a perfecting indeed, from which no element shall be wanting.

FRIDAY, September 9.

"Ye are come unto Mount Sion."—Heb. xii. 22

These poor Hebrew Christians, outcast from their Temple, and soon to see their beloved city vanish from the earth, were sore at heart. What a contrast was presented by the bare room in which they celebrated the simple supper and the splendid Temple with its magnificent rites! What a tiny rill their hymns were, compared with the mighty torrent of Temple psalmody! What a handful of worshippers compared with the multitudes that congregated from all the world! Sometimes it seemed as though the contrast were unbearable.

Then, said the Holy Ghost, lift up your eyes and see. Ye are not the lonely, isolated handful ye suppose. Every time you offer your prayer and sing your hymns ye are joining with the spirits of the perfected just, with numberless holy angels, and with vast multitudes in heaven and on earth who are ever adoring Christ—myriads of happy and holy spirits; and those surely are specially near whom you "have loved long since and lost awhile."

What special blessing these thoughts will bring to the bedridden, who for many years have not entered the courts of God's house, to the aged, and lonely, and exiled! We never worship God alone. As soon as we begin to pray we say, Our Father which art in heaven, forgive our sins, give us our daily bread.

SATURDAY, September 10.

"Make you perfect in every good work to his will."—Heb. xiii. 21.

To perfect is to adjust, to put in joint, to articulate us with the living Saviour. It may be described as a surgical operation. Too many of those who are in the Body of Christ are not in living articulate union with Him. Hence the writer asks that we may be properly jointed with Christ.

The agent of this process — The God of Peace. Let us not be afraid of Him, as though He must use some terrible anguish, some heart-rending grief. He will not shrink from this, if all other methods fail; but He prefers to achieve his purpose by gentle, tender, peaceful means.

The guarantee that He will perform this process.—He brought again from the dead the Lord Jesus, that Great Shepherd of the sheep, and surely the power which achieved that bringing again is capable of any demand that may be made on it. Will He do so much for the Shepherd, and neglect the flock? Will He give Him the victory, and forsake those for whom He won it? In bringing the Shepherd did He not pledge Himself by the most solemn sanctions to do all that needed doing for the weakest of his sheep?

The object of this process.—Whatever is well pleasing in his sight will be readily fulfilled in and through our yielded natures. When the helmsman is right with the captain the boat will naturally take the course that the captain selects.

The Holy Spirit.

DEAR SIR,—Your correspondent "Observer," of Glasgow, in The Christian of June 23, says: "The great majority of professing Christians are much in darkness regarding the place and work of the Third Person in the Divine government." The statement is sadly true on this side of the Atlantic as well as on yours. The late C. H. Spurgeon once wrote: "'I believe in the Holy Ghost.' This is one of the articles of the creed, but it is scarcely believed among professors so as to be acted upon." A prominent Evangelical preacher and author in the United States has thus expressed himself: "There is no phase of our common faith regarding which there is such vagueness, such uncertainty, such indefiniteness, as that relating to the Holy Ghost...we fail somehow to apprehend the real nature of the Spirit, or rightly to appreciate his place and functions in the economy of grace." Is it not passing strange that He who came to terminate doubt and uncertainty for ever should Himself be surrounded with a haze of vagueness and uncertainty? And when the facts concerning Him are duly considered the wonder will increase. What are those facts?

1. Jesus Christ, who came to reveal the mind of Jehovah and to accomplish his will for the benefit of man, declared that the Holy Spirit was to be the supreme and exclusive convicter (John xvi. 8, R.V.), teacher (xiv. 26), revealer (xv. 26, xvi. 14, 15), and guide unto all truth (xvi. 13), during all of the time when He Himself would be absent from the world. He was to be supreme in all those relations to the believer, because He is as really Divine as the Son is who spake of Him. He was to be completely sufficient, because his indwelling supplies every real need of the soul. Thoughtfully read and group together the promises concerning the Spirit above mentioned, contained as they are in Christ's last discourse, and the complete sufficiency of the Spirit's indwelling will be seen without fail. The wording of those promises shows that the Spirit is to have no rival or co-ordinate, and as He is God He needs no assistant.

2. The Book of Acts plainly shows that the first believers accepted the Holy Spirit as supreme, Divine, and sufficient, and having received Him they obeyed Him promptly and implicitly. And in that history there is no hint of any giving way or flinching from that attitude of obedience to his exclusive authority. His indwelling was known to be a universal privilege (Acts v. 32, vi. 3).

3. When the splendid intellect of Paul had resolved the facts above mentioned as well as those of the incarnation and career of Jesus Christ into somewhat of a system, and he gave the believers at Rome the benefit of his thinking in his great theological epistle, he definitely asserts in Romans viii. that Christian living is a life entirely dominated by the indwelling Holy Spirit; that living in the Spirit is the only legitimate Christian living, and that all other kind of living is living after the flesh, which

RESULTS IN SPIRITUAL DEATH.

Throughout the first seventeen verses of that chapter these truths are asserted and reiterated with decisive and emphatic expression. The promises of Christ concerning the Spirit, the attitude of the original churches toward Him, and the theology of Paul on Christian living agree together as a triple testimony to the right of the indwelling Spirit of God to the entire control of the believer's life. In those days there was no haze or ambiguity as to the true place of the Third Person in the economy of salvation or the production of holiness.

4. But in process of time there came to be a falling away from the plane of Pentecostal completeness in the case of the Galatians, to whom Paul says (Gal. i. 6): "I marvel that ye are so quickly removed, from Him that called you in the grace of Christ, unto a different Gospel." What was that different Gospel? He challenges them in chap. iii. 3, on this wise, "Having begun in the Spirit, are ye now perfected in the flesh?" All believers in that age began most definitely and professedly in the Spirit (1 Cor. xii., xiii.), and the growing subserviency of the Galatians to the flesh was evidenced by what is stated in Gal. iv. 10, "Ye observe days, and months, and seasons, and years." So utterly wrong was all that in Paul's estimation, that in chapter v. 4 he says, "Ye are fallen away from grace." In the first epistle to the Corinthians, also, we find Paul rebuking that church on account of certain moral lapses which were showing themselves among them, and warning against the hunger for "signs" which the Jew showed, as well as the trust in philosopy which was so characteristic of the Greek. As a cure for these moral failures, and as a preservative against being led away by those falsities, he insists on the fact that "your body is a temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you," and "we received, not the spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God, that we might know the things that are freely given to us by God." And the remedy for the backsliding of the Galatians is, "Walk by the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lusts of the flesh."

The first falling away from the normal state of Christian life which was inaugurated at Pentecost and Samaria and Cæsarea resulted from a failure in loyalty to the Holy Ghost. The decline, which appears to have made its first appearances in Corinth and Galatia, seems to have spread gradually throughout all the churches. Human authority in the government of the Church took the throne rightfully belonging to the Holy Spirit, and man-made dogmas took the place of the Spirit as teacher, revealer, and guide. Sacerdotalism and systematic theology became the prevailing force in the Church visible everywhere. And from that backsliding there has not yet come any general recovery. That accounts for the fact that "the great majority of professing Christians of to-day are much in darkness regarding the place and work of the Third Person in the Divine government."

Canon Bell on "Confession."

IN a letter to The Times (which is daily publishing a voluminous correspondence on the subject) Canon Bell, late of Cheltenham, says:—"The letters which have appeared in The Times on the subject of confession, and the value it may have in certain cases when the conscience is troubled by some weighty matter, seem hardly to touch the heart of the matter now so earnestly and so widely discussed. The opening of the mind and its sorrows to a learned minister of God's word, or to a judicious friend, is a most natural thing, and may be of great service to a disturbed conscience. But I imagine this is not the question now under discussion, but rather what is known as 'Auricular Confession and Priestly Absolution' as practised in the Church of Rome, and which have been introduced into the Church of England. In the case of each confession the Church requires from the penitent a full confession, and the priest seated on the judgment seat claims to be the searcher of hearts, the bestower of pardon, and the awarder of penalties. It is a system in which the priest sits in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God, and is wholly unscriptural, the source of many evils—moral, social, and political—alike hostile to the law of God and the welfare of man.

"This system by which the priest is bound to rack the soul with questions, to search into, to probe, to inquire into the secrets of the heart, and draw thence its sins, has often proved morally fatal to the confessor, as well as to the penitent who kneels before him in the confessional box and pours out his or her sins in his ear. It is this system from which we recoil; it is this system against which we protest; and it is this system against which the Church of England protested at the Reformation, and which has no place in the Book of Common Prayer. She does not enjoin auricular confession, nor does she hold that theory of absolution which gives to man the authority of God.

"Let us ever remember that the Prayer Book of the Church of England is a reformed Prayer Book, and that by the omission from her formularies of the practice of auricular confession and priestly absolution she condemned them; and as we would retain the peace and purity of our families let us hold fast the truth that between the sinner and his God there stands no man save one—the Man Christ Jesus."

The Ritualistic Conspiracy.

SIR,—One thing Mr. Kensit has done, which no one before him has accomplished, and for which the Protestants of England have reason to be devoutly thankful! He has roused the whole nation to the fact that Romanism is rampant in the Church of England, and that the clergy, supported by the weak remonstrance and often patronage of the bishops, are now bold to assert their rights to all the practices of the Roman Catholic religion, of which they avow they were wrongfully deprived at the Reformation. That there are some Evangelical clergy left in the Church of England I am fully aware, but of what use are they in the conflict which is now upon us?

They must know that the Catholic world is centring its thought upon the conversion of our beloved country to Romanism, sparing neither money nor influence for the purpose—insinuating its priests into the very ranks of the English Church, and getting those who have sworn allegiance thereto to break their solemn vows by reordination through a Papal channel. These things are transpiring before the eyes of the Evangelical party of the Established Church, and they make no sign. Hopeless of any help in that direction, I turn with confidence to the ministers of the Free Churches, and as a Protestant, lover of my country and my Bible, I pray them to come to our aid. If they will lead us, we will follow, and we may yet win the day against the advancing hosts. With Dr. Horton, I believe that the perversion of England is not impossible, and that "within another generation we may see the country that we love brought to the condition of Italy or Spain." Could a GREATER DISASTER BEFALL OUR NATION?

Surely, as Protestants, we have not lost our esteem for the honoured name we bear; we have not forgotten how we came by the grand heritage which has been handed down to us by our forefathers, who fought and bled and died to acquire it.

Rome has not changed her nature or her creed, though she has modified her methods to meet the times. Her boast is that the "One Holy Catholic Church," as she styles herself—as if there were no other—"never changes." If she cannot force us into her communion, as in former days, by threats of the rack, the thumbscrew, the inquisition, and the State, she will endeavour to seduce us by milder and more modern means. She still asserts that the Pope is the Vicegerent of God and the Vicar of Christ. Her utterances are still said to be infallible. She would rob Protestant England of her Bible, for she declares that "the most pernicious of all sects is the Protestant Bible Society." She would drive our wives and daughters into the hated confessional, prevent our approach to God and our Saviour except through a fallible priest, teach us and our children to kiss and adore a bit of wood in the shape of a cross, and bow down in idolatrous worship before a piece of biscuit.

To the ministers of the Free Churches, then, I appeal. Let your voices be heard throughout our land in opposition to the sacerdotalism and idolatry which are gaining strength every day. Let no craven silence seal your lips, no criminal apathy paralyse your action; be brave and valiant for the truth, or the nemesis of neglected duty will assuredly overtake you.

For if man before his duty with a listless spirit stands,
Ere long the Great Avenger takes the work from out his hands.

—Yours faithfully. A PROTESTANT.

Irish Street Preaching.—The advocates of open-air preaching claim that it has now succeeded in overcoming opposition everywhere except in Sligo. There the forces of mob, priest, local Protestant opinion, and constitutional executive authority are all combined against the preachers. We have never been able to understand on what sane principle people refuse to a man who is anxious only to preach the Gospel the same liberty of speech they claim in politics for themselves. If anyone does not want to hear him, the world is big enough for them to get out of earshot. It is a bad case that requires to be supported by brickbats and rotten eggs. It is too late in the day for anyone's religion to be protected or promoted by that sort of argument.—Christian Irishman.

FROM OTHER LANDS.

A Great Opportunity in China.

ALL over China there is an increasing thirst after enlightenment from Christian sources. No doubt the knowledge that the Emperor and the Empress Dowager have lately been reading the New Testament, and that the Emperor lately sent for other Christian books, has caused readers in all ranks of life to desire to look into the same books. However various may have been the causes leading up to it, the fact remains that Bible societies and the Christian Literature Society report a great increase in their sales in many parts of the empire. Not only so, the native printing establishments have been reprinting wholesale very many of the publications of the Christian Literature Society, and in some instances popularising them by putting them into the ordinary colloquial.

While we rejoice in this further diffusion of Christian literature, it does not add anything to the funds of our society to enable it to overtake its great aim, namely, the Christian enlightenment of the students meeting at the chief examination centres. Someone lately truly said that "these students form the Gibraltar of China"—gain them, then all China is gained, for with them is the thought and intellect that are to guide the China of the future. If these were gained over to Christianity, the native church would soon be self-supporting and self-disseminating, though, for many years to come, missionaries will be required to guide and inspire the native leaders, and assist more especially in educational work throughout the empire. But, alas! we have only been able to reach about twenty out of the 200 great examination centres. The result has, nearly in every case of the twenty, been a movement in favour of Protestant Christianity. Had we but funds to reach them all we have every reason to believe that the whole empire would soon be turning to a pure Christianity as its only hope.

Roman Catholics are busy, Greek Church missionaries are on the increase. Three years hence, when the Russian railway is completed, Russia will have great influence all over the north of China. Now, therefore, during these three years, Protestants should bestir themselves, and "come to the help of the Lord against the mighty" if China is to have a pure Christian faith. It is confessed on all hands that one of the methods most urgently needed and most rapid in its results is the dissemination of effective Christian literature.

The Governor and Chancellor of Education and some of the gentry in the province of Hunan, the most anti-Christian province in the empire, have repeatedly expressed their indebtedness to the publications of the Christian Literature Society for setting them right in regard to Christianity and Christian civilisation. And it is important to bear in mind that a province in China is, in size, equal to an average European kingdom.

Many other instances could be given of very anti-Christian districts turning completely round to favour Christianity in consequence of the leading men having got possession of some of the C.L.S. literature. Some missionaries far in the interior report that new stations, even in hostile regions, can be opened in perfect peace if only the books of our society (called in China "the Society for the Diffusion of Christian and General Literature") are promised to be on sale.

One of the Chinese secretaries of the society has lately become an earnest inquirer, moved thereto, he confesses, by the truths he had been writing at the dictation of Mr. Richard, the society's general secretary in Shanghai.

The higher-class girls' school, opened lately by Chinese of rank in Shanghai, is the beginning of a new era for China. Its appointments are much after the style of our better class Mission girls' schools. There are sixteen pupils, all with unbound feet; the matron is a Christian; the teacher of English is a Christian young woman from a Mission school; missionary ladies are also helping by teaching certain subjects.

Mr. W. H. D. Rouse, 4, Bilton-road, Rugby, will answer correspondents, or they may write directly to me, Prayer for China.

AN APPEAL FROM CHINESE CHRISTIANS.

THE members of the Presbyterian Synod in North China send greetings to the Christian brethren in all lands, and earnestly ask their prayers on behalf of China in her present troubles. The harmony between China and Western nations is now broken, offences arise on every hand, the important places on the seaboard are now all guarded by Western Powers, military operations are stirring up enmity that may any day result in bloodshed. Whether this is the will of heaven or whether it comes only from the designs of men it is impossible to say, but how can we who are citizens of China and members of the Church of Christ look without concern on what is passing? We embrace this opportunity afforded by the meeting of Synod to send a letter to Christians of other nations to ask them to pray for us.

Although of different nationalities, we all have one God, one Spirit, one faith, one baptism, and we are one body in Christ. If one member is wounded the whole body suffers. Moreover the missionaries in China are Christian scholars from the West, whose support, together with the means for carrying on their work in schools and hospitals, is raised by contributions from Western lands. When we Chinese have been without bread Christian people have fed us with heavenly supplies, when we were without a wedding garment they bought us a robe of righteousness, when we were dead in sin we were begotten again through the Word they preached. From all this we assume that as the Western Christians give their money for China, so their minds are directed to China, and that they cannot but be concerned on account of the DANGERS NOW BESETTING THE EMPIRE.

The special things for which the Synod asks prayer are the following:

1. We ask prayer for the Emperor and his high officers. Desiring to promote Western learning, the Emperor has made new regulations for the purpose. He has also lately sought and examined many new books, of which not a few are of a religious character. These things may possibly prove the beginning of faith, and may bring a blessing to China. Ask God to give the Emperor a clear understanding and a full knowledge of the facts, that he may perceive that the prosperity of the country depends not only on the spread of Western learning and the training of men of ability, but still more on the diffusion of Divine truth and the renovation of men's hearts. So may Sovereign and people, high and low, be all of one mind.

2. We ask prayer for the literary examiners and for all schools where Western learning is held in esteem. Since the new regulations were promulgated every province has desired to establish schools for the training of educated men. Already there are a number of prosperous schools of this kind, and we fervently hope that the official examiners throwing away their old prejudices (i.e., against Western learning) will honestly select really able men, and that means may be found of bringing every district and county into harmony with the new policy.

3. We ask prayer for the people at large that they may put away the old and accept the new, that the Imperial will may at once prevail, and that there may be no disorder in any part of the land.

4. We ask prayer for the church in China, that in view of the suspicions and unrest existing in the minds of the people, the Christians may be more zealous and persevering in prayer, that they may be scrupulously careful not to presume on their position to insult others or to make any occasion of trouble, and that if involved in trouble caused by others they may be patient and avoid giving offence.

5. We ask prayer for all the several nations, that their intercourse with China may be in harmony with truth and right, and at the specified time they may return the territory they have leased, and that none may entertain the design of dividing China out or swallowing her up, and that they may be at peace among themselves, united as one family and entertaining no warlike designs.

Although our country is helpless and weak, yet we have faith that the prayers of the righteous will prevail and that God will care for us. When Abraham prayed for Sodom, God heard him, saying, "If there be ten righteous I will not destroy it." We trust that amongst the eighty or ninety thousand professing Christians in the various churches in China there may be more than ten righteous men. If believers in the East and West will all unite in sincere prayer, why should we doubt that God will hear?

Children in Canada.

WRITING from Canada on the eve of her return voyage, Mrs. Birt, of the Sheltering Homes, Myrtle Street, Liverpool, writes:—

"Our boys and girls have met with a good welcome this year from Canadians, and have all been comfortably and suitably located with respectable families. This means that they have secured, first and foremost, a good home, with all the advantages of such, washing, mending, attending Sunday-school and church with members of the family, and clothing (or, when old enough, paid wages, out of which their clothes are bought), and the habit of making deposits in the Post Office Savings Bank taught.

"Many of our boys and girls, who have been steady, good workers, are in the happy position of having a little bank book of their own, with a nest-egg to help them on in the future, which I am sure they would never have saved in England. The good home with 'all found' enables the wages to be prudently taken care of.

"In visiting those placed out in former years we find great cause for encouragement. One boy, who has a capital saddler's business, took a trip to England, and would have fetched out his mother had she been willing to go.

"Two brothers were found, one working a farm, the other a cheese factory; they had brought out their mother and stepfather, with several children, who were working with them on the farm. Several girls who are school teachers were seen, one of whom has saved money enough to take a course at M'Gill Normal School this winter. Her adopted father left her a sum of money when he died, which has assisted her to get an education. The school was never so successful as when she had charge of it. Many are marrying and forming comfortable little homes. Some, of course, develop self-will and other faults, and move from situation to situation, like the rolling stone gathering no moss. But the vast majority are being gradually absorbed into the ranks of loyal Canadians, with property or money saved in the bank.

"Just when our poor boys and girls leave school is the time of danger in Liverpool. A few weeks of street life, idling about with more depraved companions, go far to undo the good of years of teaching, and if the father or mother dies the ordinary control and comfort of home is broken up. This is the time when boys and girls need a helping hand to put before them a way of life where they can rise to be a help to others of the family, while the younger orphans can find loving homes in Canada, where they may forget their sorrows, and be cherished as children of the home as never before.

"The committee of the Sheltering Home will be very grateful to friends who will again help them in this work among the poor and needy boys and girls."

The Bombay Y.W.C.A. is to have a building of its own. A cable has been received pledging £2000 toward the object, with promise of more. The work in the city in the various branches of the Y.W.C.A. seems to be in a flourishing condition. Miss Hill, who has given up her travelling work, will act as general secretary in Bombay until new workers are sent out from home.—Bombay Guardian.

Work in South America.

THE missionaries who have gone forth into South America under Señor Emilio Olsson, of the Christian and Missionary Alliance, New York, are sending home accounts of their labours. Mr. H. S. Ridings (31, Carson-road, Dulwich, S.E.), hon. secretary of the London committee, sends us the following extracts from recent letters:—

CITY OF LA PLATA.

We lost no time in getting our large front room in shape for meetings. We have a full house every Sunday morning. Also, at night the families, both high and low, of the neighbourhood come to hear us tell of Jesus; and we have a meeting in mid-week, very well attended. Our work here, in Argentina, as in other parts of South America, is emerging from the state of uncertainty which usually accompanies a beginning, and is assuming definite shape. It is growing, we know not how, only that God has it in hand.

CHILI.

The Lord has been blessing the work among the Chili people and Germans, so that we can at this early period rejoice in having fifty German converts and thirty baptized Chilenos. The missionary spirit exists amongst the converts, and they hasten to do all in their power to spread the blessed Gospel over this land.

PERU.

God has opened up such a wonderful field for us here. Every day I am more convinced of the leadings of God. This land is the very Garden of Eden in the hands of the enemy. Just three days' ride from here are wild Indians (Chunchus). I am now in the very heart of the mighty Andes, over 225 miles from the nearest mission, surrounded by about 50,000 Quichua Indians, a bright but downtrodden race, kept in ignorance by licentious priests. Surely Peru is white for harvest.

BOLIVIA.

There are plenty of Spanish-speaking natives here who can speak both the Quichua and Aymara dialects of the Indians, and who, when converted, can work among them. Since being in Bolivia I have sold Bibles, distributed tracts, witnessed for the Lord, studied Spanish, and had the joy of the Lord. Everyone has his pick at the poor Indian. Centuries of oppression have developed in him cunning, deceit, etc., in dealing with his masters. He is a petty thief and a cheat; on the other hand, he is industrious, frugal, and to one who treats him well very faithful. The Roman Catholic religion never interferes with the Indian feasts and their semi-savage or heathen practices, and the outward ceremonies and rites of the Church suit them exactly.

ECUADOR.

The Lord has sent me two natives of Ecuador who went to Chili four or five years ago, and there heard of Jesus and were converted. They are here now, and want to take the good news to their kindred away in the interior, and after much prayer the Lord has laid it on my heart to send them. Reading and distributing the Word has brought me in contact with hundreds of people. One day I met a young Peruvian, and the Lord used me to lead him into the light. I have attended three of their religious feasts (which are surely abomination unto the Lord), and have spoken to many people at these feasts, which generally last a week. One dear man from the interior sat down with me while I read to him about Jesus and his love, and the blessed Spirit made it plain to him. He accepted Jesus as his true Saviour, and invited us to go into the interior to tell his family about Jesus.

VENEZUELA.

The Lord has certainly been blessing our work, and encouraging us. With our helper, and a good package of Bibles and Scripture portions, we have visited all the towns and villages round about Caracas. He has thoroughly worked the capital, and we have followed up his house-to-house visitation. A few weeks ago a native brother went three days' journey into the interior, and witnessed for the Lord in an important town. The result was that about a dozen people requested that the Gospel might be preached to them. Our native helper has gone to them, and expects to establish a permanent work.

A Manly Christian Life.

THE LATE MR. WILLIAM WILCOCKS,
SOLICITOR AND SUNDAY-SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENT.

AS a rule we devote this page to reflections on the life of some well-known public or quasi-public character whose writings and works are known to the Christian world, and whose sphere of influence is unrestricted by purely local considerations. Equally useful lessons, however, may sometimes be learned by the contemplation of a life which, whilst it cannot be described as public, is nevertheless one which will appeal to the reader, and from which some inspiration may be derived. It affords an illustration of the fact that it is possible in business life to carry out the principles of Christian life so as to make Christianity attractive. Religion is sometimes introduced into City life in such a way as to be merely a cloak to cover questionable proceedings.

Born in a remote village in Devonshire, Mr. Wilcocks came to London thirty-two years ago to fill the position of junior clerk in a City firm of solicitors. After twelve years' service, he was presented by the firm with his articles—a thing of very rare occurrence. Admitted as a solicitor in 1882, he was rewarded for his faithful services by being received into partnership last year. He lived but one year to enjoy the fruits of his faithfulness, but in dying he left behind him the memories of a noble, manly, Christian life. No one ever came into contact with him without feeling they were in the presence of a God-fearing, God-loving, God-serving man. Not that he was accustomed to obtrude such matters on those whom he met in business. Yet no one ever went away with the slightest doubt as to his Christianity. He lived that which he believed, and was not ashamed of it.

Of the thirty-two years of his London life, he was for twenty-two connected with Dr. Spurgeon's Sunday-school at West Croydon, first as teacher, then as superintendent, and lately as vice-president. So long a connection with one school is not very common in itself, but when we mention that the school contained nearly seventy classes and numbered nearly a thousand scholars it will be seen that the duties he undertook were of no mean order. During those years a fresh generation occupied the classes, and, notwithstanding the number of scholars, there were very few whom, when speaking to them individually, he did not address by their Christian names. Many of the teachers and scholars who were once under him are now in foreign lands, yet in the midst of his business and school work he found time to correspond with not a few of them. He was universally looked up to by the teachers as a sound adviser, and by the scholars as a true friend.

As representing the church on the council of the free churches in the district, his great experience in church and general matters was much valued. With many success in business means less time to devote to church and school work, but with him the greater his successes the more was the energy exhibited; and the greater the responsibility thrown upon him in his profession the more mature grew his influence amongst teachers and scholars. His business life and school life went hand in hand—one was the reflex of the other, and this is probably the secret of his great influence in both.

Dr. Spurgeon, in his funeral sermon, remarked that he never liked to see erected over the grave of a Christian man the representation of a column broken by the artist's hammer, as if to indicate that the life had been snapped off short. The Christian life is never cut short; it is always ended. God knows when it has reached its ripest stage, when its influence will be greatest and its memory freshest. Mr. Wilcocks was thus allowed to reach the height of his ambition in order to exhibit the truth of the fact that in order to succeed in matters temporal it is not necessary to recede in matters spiritual.

It is seldom that so representative a body of mourners is brought together as was the case at his funeral. Amongst them were the senior member of his firm, his office colleagues, his fellow-deacons, most of the teachers of the school, and a considerable number of the scholars; whilst at the grave were gathered, in addition to these, members of the Bar, of his own profession, and clients. This expression of respect was well earned, and one of the floral tokens was unique, being subscribed for by no less than 971 Sunday-school scholars, and this notwithstanding that no Sunday intervened between his death and burial when public announcement could be made to the scholars.

There are many lessons to be learned from such a life as this, and we would do well to pause and consider them; especially as in these days business cares become more and more absorbing, and the rush to obtain wealth and position is likely to obliterate from the character those attributes by which a follower of the Master is or should be known to the world. It is a pleasing duty to call attention to one whose dominant purpose in life was to live up to the principles which he professed. The greatest encomium that can be passed upon any man is that he was as a servant sincere, as an employer exceptional, because of his consistent Christian character.

The Plague is increasing at Bombay. It has carried off Dr. Elizabeth Phillips. During Sunday and Monday last there were fifty-nine deaths. Several Europeans have been attacked.

The Northfield Conference.

We continue our notes of the Conference proceedings as published in American contemporaries.

THE SERVICE OF PRAISE.

Singing takes a very prominent part in the services of the Conference. Mr. Moody believes that singing is just as important as preaching, and frequently refers to letters that he has received from people who have been to Northfield, and have received blessing from the singing. He has good leaders about him—Mr. Ira D. Sankey, whose name is always thought of when Mr. Moody's great work is mentioned; Mr. G. C. Stebbins, who has been associated with him in evangelistic work for a number of years; and Prof. D. B. Towner, of the Chicago Bible Institute, who leads the singing each summer during the young men's college conference. Another leader who does not very often take active part in the Conference and yet indirectly has had much to do with making the singing what it is, is Prof. A. J. Philip, who instructs in singing at Northfield Seminary and Mount Hermon. The Mount Hermon quartet and the Estey chorus of the seminary have by their excellent singing brought fresh laurels to the two schools.

In addition to their usual morning service, on Monday, August 9, the English preachers held an extra meeting in the afternoon, when they met those who wished to ask special questions. A good many people who followed the sermons closely found it difficult to square the teaching regarding the "Life More Abundant," or "The Overcoming Life," with their own experiences, and instead of dealing with each inquirer separately they met them all together and answered written questions. The following day a meeting exclusively for ministers was held. In a suggestive address on

THE SHEPHERDING OF SOULS,

Dr. Mabie, of Boston, used the following illustrations:—

"Spain has lost her power over her dependents and colonists because those who have gone among them as professed shepherds have left out self-sacrifice and resurrection energies. They have cared more for the fleece than for the flock. Thieves and robbers they have become, these products of a corrupt Christianity. Hence it is that these poor despoiled colonists turn with eager gaze to Americans to see whether we shall prove shepherds true, proving to them that we 'have come that ye might have life, and have it more abundantly.' If we are true, we must prove that we are ready to lay down our lives that we may take them back again in higher form.

"What is the influence of this life in pagan lands? A Japanese divinity student in Cambridge, Mass., a warm friend of mine whom I met in Japan, and who was my interpreter, was once asked to speak. He said he would tell how he was converted. He desired to enter the Imperial University of Japan, that he might study philosophy in order to counteract the influence of foreign missionaries in his native land. He was unable to secure admission there, but was able to enter a school carried on by the American Episcopal Church, where he had a Christian room-mate. One day these two young men went to Bishop Williams, the head of the school, as the representatives of the students, to complain of the defects of the building in which they roomed. It was cold, especially on the north side, where the speakers had their room. The venerable Bishop listened attentively, and expressed his regret that the Mission Board had not been able to send them sufficient money to keep the building in good repair. Then he turned to the Christian student and said: 'But this matter can be settled as far as you are concerned. You are young and I am old. My work is nearly ended. Yours is just beginning. Your health and comfort must be considered. I have a sunny room on the south side; you shall take that room, and I will take your cold room on the north side.' In vain the young man protested. But the Bishop was persistent. His life was of little value. The young man might injure his usefulness by impairing his health. The Christian student burst into tears, and soon the heathen student did the same, for around the brow of the self-sacrificing man of God he seemed to see a light divine. He had never seen such a spirit of sacrifice among heathen people or heathen teachers, and he said, 'If that is what Christianity does for a man, I want to be a Christian."

On Wednesday, August 10, Mr. Moody had a "question drawer" for an hour, and kept the audience deeply interested by his replies. In speaking of Christian work in cities, he said that people who could labour among the working people should do so, and those who could not do personal work, but could afford to hire a female missionary, could do effective work for the Master. "You should not pay her less than 600 dols. a year," he added; and told something of the splendid work of Mrs. Bishop, of New York, who supports thirteen missions, in many of them employing several people, missionaries, doctors, trained nurses, kindergarten teachers, and Bible-readers, according to the work necessary to be done in a given place. This is better than college settlements; where the name of Christ is not mentioned. But let us not quarrel with these settlements. We will go ahead and put in the Gospel where they are striving to change the environment.

Mr. Macgregor spoke on "The Indwelling Christ," and Mr. Morgan's subject was "Environment," following up an address he gave on the preceding day on "Heredity."

MOUNT HERMON CHAPEL.

Our readers will recollect that the building of the chapel for boys, at Mount Hermon, was suggested by Rev. F. B. Meyer, who undertook to raise half the cost in England, the other half being contributed by American friends. On August 11 the corner stone of the new building was laid with all due ceremony by Mr. H. Moore, of Boston, Mr. Moody not being present. The newspaper account says:—"The gathering at Mount Hermon at a distance resembled the crowd at a country fair, but when one approached near the building, around which the people were standing and sitting, the voice of prayer and praise soon disclosed the nature of the meeting. The new chapel is constructed of Northfield granite, and is 110 ft. long and 64 ft. wide, and will seat a thousand people. It is nearly completed, and will be dedicated this fall. The laying of the corner-stone had been deferred, in order that it might be done when the English preachers were present. The building will cost about 40,000 dols. Of that amount 30,000 dols. was given when the subject was first presented to the friends of Mr. Moody in England and America. To-day 5,000 dols. additional was subscribed by those present at the services. Mr. Morgan promised to raise 500 dols. of that amount, and Mr. Macgregor a like sum, from friends in their country. Mr. Sankey and Mr. Moore agreed to do the same in America, and the remainder was raised in small sums."

In the course of his address Mr. Moore referred to the wonderful growth of the Mount Hermon institutions:—

"Go back with me seventeen years, when I visited Mount Hermon School, in yonder little farmhouse, when they had only eleven boys. I have realised the hand of God leading in this work, first erecting the five cottages which we see, afterwards Recitation Hall; then, as the applications for admittance were so numerous that Mr. Moody felt he must enlarge and make room for more students, Crossley Hall and the dining-hall were built, at an expense of about 125,000 dols. After that we had the gift of Silliman Hall for scientific purposes for the students. This year a new dormitory is added, which will accommodate a hundred and twenty more students, and now we are erecting this chapel for the express accommodation of these students. As I look over this campus and see these beautiful buildings that have been erected, costing in the vicinity of 500,000 dols., I am led to exclaim, 'What hath God wrought!'"

In the evening, at Northfield, Mr. S. H. Hadley, of the New York Water-street Mission, told the story of his conversion, when a homeless drunkard, through the late Jerry M'Auley.

On the morning of Friday, August 12, Mr. Macgregor spoke of constant readiness for service as the true attitude of the cleansed and consecrated believer. In the afternoon Dr. Cyrus Hamlin, the veteran missionary from Turkey, told the story of the founding of Robert College, Constantinople, after many difficulties on the part of the authorities and the Jesuits. At the evening service Major Whittle gave a stirring address on the work among soldiers, and Mr. Campbell Morgan preached on "Christian Optimism."

At the close of the song service on August 16, Mr. Moody explained his position upon singing in Gospel meetings. He said that he had heard a criticism that he had too much singing. "I feel sure that the great majority of people do like singing, and I propose to make singing a prominent factor in all my services. I have been trying to have an object lesson here for you ministers. It will help you build up your audiences if you have good singing; it will build them up even if you do preach a dry sermon. I know what I am talking about. If you have singing that will reach the heart, it will fill your church every time. You say you can't read music. Neither can I; but I never saw an audience yet that I couldn't get music out of."

Mr. Ira D. Sankey left Northfield the previous day for Eastport, Long Island; from there he will go to Montauk Point to sing and preach to the soldiers.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

In the afternoon Mr. Moody conducted a question and answer meeting. The questions for the most part were requests for advice in regard to Christian work in the home churches. Mr. Moody's answers were characteristic, and he frequently repeated what he tried to make very emphatic, that it is time that the laymen were taking an active interest in the church affairs, and not leaving all the work to the ministers. A question was asked, "What would you do if your pastor were opposed to evangelistic meetings?"

"Hold them in schoolhouses," answered Mr. Moody, "or in parlours, and if you can't get a room, hold them under the trees; only don't fire stones at the church. That will please the devil more than anything you can do."

In answer to another question he said that Sunday night was the best time of the whole week for evangelistic services, and a church should have them fifty-two Sundays in the year. "I wouldn't give up the Sunday evening for anything."

"Would you give them up for a temperance meeting?" someone interrupted.

"Not by a good deal," he answered. "I'd preach the Gospel, and that covers all. I have been greatly abused by temperance people because I don't preach more on temperance. Lots of people who would not come to hear me if I announced a temperance sermon come, and then I give them the Gospel. Sunday morning the people should be given spiritual food for the upholding of Christian character. You cannot exhort sinners all the time, and pastors that try that are dead failures."

[From The New York Observer.]

The Conference which closes at Northfield to-day (August 18) has covered more time and been attended by more people than any other of the nearly a score that have been held in that charming New England town. The number of ministers has been largely in excess of that gathered in former years. There have been more young people present this summer than usual, and in point of size the meeting has been a great success. But the Conference has been successful in other respects than that of numbers. The thousands of Christian people who have been in attendance have had a great opportunity of having their spiritual life quickened and deepened.

Mr. Moody presided at most of the meetings with his old-time enthusiasm, and in response to appeals from his friends, spoke upon the Bible and several of the fundamental doctrines, such as atonement, repentance, and regeneration. No more thrilling addresses were delivered at the Conference than those which he made. Many of his five minute speeches produced lasting impressions; twice he spoke on the Bible for two hours without interruption. His faith in the Word of God is as simple as a child's confidence in the word of his mother. It is a relief to find a man whose influence is so manifest, without the shadow of a doubt regarding the truths of Scripture, which the majority of Christian people hold dear. Sceptics and critics do not find the atmosphere at Northfield congenial and they are seldom present.

The sermons have been extremely searching this year, especially those delivered by the preachers from London, Messrs. Morgan and Macgregor. For more than two weeks they were heard in the morning, and occasionally one or both would speak in the afternoon or evening. Their preaching was along the line of the Keswick teaching, viz., that believers should cease living in the realm of flesh, that they should abandon every known sin and dwell in the realm of the Spirit, living a life of peace and joy. They did not mean that believers thus separated from a life of sin would be sinless, in the sense that they would commit no sin —special stress was laid upon the fact that sinless perfection and a Spirit-filled life were far from being identical. Nor was the teaching to the effect that if a man were filled with the Spirit, as he was urged to be by both Mr. Morgan and Mr. Macgregor, he would be free from temptation. On the contrary, it was made very plain that the closer one lived to the Saviour and the more completely his will rested in the will of God, the fiercer would be the attack of the adversary and the more severe would be the struggle; but victory would be certain, because of the intercessions of the Master at the Throne of Grace, and because of his presence in the heart of the faithful disciple.

Dr. T. S. Hamlin, of Washington, gave a helpful address one evening, in which he said that what he received from the teaching of the Conference was this: In order to gain the richer, deeper, fuller experience of which one hears there, his religious life must grow—the baby is beautiful, but the boy is more than the babe, the youth is more than the child; the man gives up what the youth admired—a man playing horse with a string and two chairs is an idiot.

Scores of ministers and several laymen took part in the devotional meetings which preceded the preaching services, but few people knew anyone who was praying, as no names were announced.

The British Chautauqua.

THE annual Summer School of the British Chautauqua has been held in Edinburgh, and from August 13 to 27 Christian workers combined pleasure with profit at its various meetings. The lecturers included Drs. Agar Beet, Marcus Dods, Monro Gibson, Professor T. Williams, and Rev. C. Anderson Scott. Several excursions were organised, thus adding to the enjoyment of the School.

Mr. A. E. Sidford, writing from the School, says: "The British Chautauqua is a society for interdenominational fellowship, for the spiritual and mental improvement of its members. Members assembled to the number of nearly 200 for recreation and instruction, and will in due course resume their work, with new ideas and inspiration. Meetings have been open to the public, and one held in the Free Church Assembly Hall was packed with a great crowd, gathered, and that on an August evening, to hear Rev. G. C. Lorimer, D.D., of Boston, U.S.A., lecture on 'Gladstone—Statesman, Scholar, and Saint.'

"Many eminent Christian men in Edinburgh have shown sympathy, and have actively participated in the work and pleasure. Among these have been Professor Simpson, M.D., and Mr. C. J. Guthrie, Q.C. Professor Marvin, M.D., LL.D., of Louisville, U.S.A., the celebrated microscopist, gave a most instructive and humorous lecture on 'Unseen Friends and Foes,' denoting the latter as most 'subtle and powerful in the natural world, as in the spiritual.' He commended the motto 'Wash and pray' as worthy of attention from Christian teachers, as dust and dirt are deadly to the temple of the Holy Ghost. A deeply earnest spiritual tone has pervaded the morning gathering for prayer."

Oxford Letter.

[From Our Own Correspondent.]

THE Pembroke-street Primitive Methodists still hold their annual camp meeting. The services were well attended. The writer has a Primitive Methodist in his Bible class who remembers the camp-meetings of fifty years ago. He often speaks of those days of fire, and delights to tell how he found Christ in one of the meetings.

The work at the Church Army Labour Home gives much encouragement. During the last few months there have been signs of a spiritual awakening among some of the men. A new officer has commenced work in the difficult parish of St. Ebbes. He succeeds Capt. Easton, who has gone to Yorkshire. Oxford needs a few aggressive missionaries.

The Duke and Duchess of Marlborough are winning the hearts of the Oxford and Woodstock inhabitants. It is not merely that they take a personal interest in the good work going on, and are ever ready to support it with their presence; but by their geniality to all classes, and by their kind consideration of the tradespeople in Woodstock, who are each entrusted in turn with the supply of some of the Palace needs, they are gaining for themselves real regard and affection. Such thoughtfulness brings its own reward, the love of the poor and the genuine regard of those who under different treatment are only too ready to hate. Last week the Duke entertained a large body of firemen at Blenheim, and the men will not easily forget the kindness meted out to them. If this were more general, class jealousies would soon disappear.

Rev. W. G. S. Whicker, curate of St. Clement's, is succeeding Rev. F. S. Webster as vicar of St. Thomas's, Birmingham. Mr. Whicker has won the affection of a large number of people in Oxford by his sterling qualities, his kindly manner, and his evident sincerity in all he has undertaken. Mr. Bunbury, who sails in the autumn for Hong Kong as principal of a C.M.S. College there, has been succeeded at Holy Trinity by Rev. E. Seagrove, who will be heartily welcomed to the ranks of the Evangelical clergy in Oxford.

The Principal of Wycliffe (Rev. F. J. Chavasse) is preaching a special course of sermons on Sunday evenings in the Hannington Hall. His subject is "The Rich Man and Lazarus." The hall is crowded each evening, and the services are followed by the prayers of many Oxford workers. We hear that Wycliffe Hall is to have forty men next term. Evangelicals throughout the country thank God for this school of the prophets, which, together with Ridley Hall, Cambridge, should have a regular place in our intercessions.

Harvest Hymn.

"Thy paths drop fatness."—Psalm lxv. 11.

With grateful hearts to-day we praise
The God who rules on high,
Whose goodness lengthens out our days,
And sends us large supply;
We laud his holy name who wields
His fruitful sceptre o'er the fields.

The earth, prepared by sun and shower,
Received the precious grain,
Which, though enwrapped in death's still power,
Soon sprang to life again;
And, lo! the fields were covered o'er
With ripened grain—a golden store!

Not to ourselves, we gladly own,
This large supply we owe;
The sun and shower were his alone
Who makes such fulness flow;
His paths drop fatness o'er the land,
And fields rejoice at his command.

Homes for Aged Blind.—The Branch Home at Southend, opened in April, is likely to prove a great blessing to those for whom it is intended. Since the opening twenty-five persons have been sent down for periods ranging from a week to a month. We are most anxious to extend the benefit to others, but our funds are exhausted. Our inmates number eighty-seven. The overwhelming majority of these have passed their three-score years and ten, twenty-four being over eighty, and three over ninety. Henry and Ann Bright.

The Right Way.

"This is the way, walk ye in it."—Isaiah xxx. 21.

SOME of us from childhood have had our thoughts turned to the One who said, "I am the Way." Or in youth, in manhood, and womanhood we have heard that voice saying to us, "Follow Me." Or even in old age, after a long and weary stumbling along other paths, some have, as by a miracle (I know no greater miracle), been brought into the narrow way. There is but one road along which we can travel safely; a hundred and one fraught with more or less danger: ways of pride, ambition, self-seeking, pleasure, love of money, and many, many are the travellers along these roads; and there is the way of holiness, that simple, narrow way that leads to life.

Those who are not yet travellers upon that narrow way are inclined, some of them, to pride themselves on the pleasantness of the way they are going, and scoff at those who take the painful (as it seems) narrow way. Such satisfaction is the very delusiveness of the way. It is pleasant, bright, comfortable. Yes, at present. You walk along in a gay, light-hearted fashion, with never a thought as to where it leads.

TYPES OF TRAVELLERS.

I mark the travellers one by one. There, there is one sinking in a slough of lust and sensuality; he used to be a bright young fellow, the pride and joy of his parents' hearts. There, there is another, clinging in desperation to his hoarded wealth, while beside him stands a grim figure, pointing to the dark abyss of a grave awaiting him. There, there is another drowning in a pool of evil habits. A pleasant way, did you say? Ah, the horror of it! It is so pleasant till you get to the end. Then the reality bursts upon you, and you have but time to utter a cry of despair as you fall into the ruinous pit. The way of transgressors is hard, and sooner or later, pray God it may be sooner, you will find it out. Jesus said, "I am the Way. Come unto Me." "Him that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out." "He that believeth in Me shall not perish."

The way of holiness is a narrow way, and can only be entered through a strait gate—the gate of contrition, confession, humiliation, and faith. It has one special characteristic, it is easily left. Although narrow, it does not confine us as in a cage; we are perfectly free to turn to the right hand or to the left. But when we have left it, how difficult it is to find again. There are plenty of ways out, there is but one way in. Many of us have turned aside through love of self, carelessness, fretfulness, impatience, malice, envy, and, most of all, through unbelief. Yet when we leave it we LOSE ALL THE BEST IN LIFE.

Our Master knows how difficult we find it to pass the outlets that invitingly lead out of the narrow way, and so He bids us, earnestly and emphatically, to watch. There are outlets of religious observance —you may go to church, and all the rest of it, and yet your feet may not have trodden a single step along the path of holiness—of worry, of impatience, of anger. You know the outlet through which you went, and perhaps you have not found that strait gate again. Do you want to find it? Would you enter in again and journey along that narrow path once more? The gate is still there, and over it is set up a cross, beneath which cross are written the words: "Come unto Me." And such is his great love that if our hearts are truly contrite and believing—that being the sole condition—we may enter in at the gate again.

What a glorious company have already trod and are now treading the narrow way of the Christian life! The black and the white man link their arms; the rich and poor; the business man, the clerk, and the missionary; the matrons and the maids; the lord and the 'bus driver; the lady and the servant girl. In the narrow way there is no respect of persons. We can all rejoice in the love of God, not because He said He loved some of us, but because He said He loved the world!

Home Missions.

Manchester Wesleyan Mission.

YEAR by year we have given some particulars of the advancement of the Manchester and Salford Wesleyan Mission, and we welcome the tenth annual report, which opens by stating that the aim of the Mission has been "to evangelise the outcast, and to arouse to religious earnestness the crowds in city streets who are untouched by ordinary religious effort or regular church worship."

The Mission uses as centres of evangelistic work the Central Hall, the Free-trade Hall, the Grand Theatre, and Wesley Institute in the city; also halls and chapels in Ancoats, Hulme, and Salford. In the congregations under the charge of the Mission there are every Sunday more than 14,000 persons, who, with comparatively few exceptions, belong to the non-churchgoing population. The number enrolled in fellowship meetings is 4000. The organisers take care that those who join the Mission are, as far as their abilities allow, given useful work to do; in fact, the membership is the chief source from which workers are drawn.

It is from the introduction of the report that we take these particulars. Proceeding, we learn that services are held every Sunday in twenty-six lodging-houses, and twelve lodging-houses in addition are regularly visited. This work is done by a band of 260 workers. Twenty cottage missions are carried on week by week by some hundred voluntary workers. The cabstands in the city are regularly visited, and services are conducted in workshops and in the open air. One of the most helpful voluntary associations in the Mission is the Aggressive League, members of which seek to induce men who are actually under the influence of drink, or who are in danger of becoming drunkards, to attend the services. Many of the best converts in the Mission have been won in this way.

One hundred district visitors have on their lists for regular visitation 3500 houses. There are fully 1000 enrolled voluntary workers in the Mission. This includes the workers in all the branches, but it does not include the 460 volunteers who give their services as skilled members of bands, orchestras, and choirs. The weekly temperance concerts, with an attendance of 2500, have done mission work of a good kind, and this work, both amongst adults and children, is very prosperous. In the Sunday-schools there are 2500 scholars. More than 1200 of the Mission people are members of Bible-classes.

The Mission has been gradually drawn into a highly organised and entirely unsectarian work of relief, rescue, and prevention. Regardless of creed, people in distress are variously helped. Competent men and women have control of this work. They have made it their special study, and are able to guard, with a remarkable degree of success, against deception. The servants' registry has been helpful to scores of young women, and the employment bureau to hundreds of men and women. Hammond House Preventive and Training Home, for girls who have been rescued from perilous surroundings, is always full, and its work is excellent. The medical mission and nursing for the sick poor assists every department of the Mission. During the year 1500 visits have been made by the trained nurse.

The many other adjuncts and agencies must go unnamed; they feed the poor, shelter the outcast, and employ those who, through want of occupation, are not only starving, but enduring keen temptation. The full membership of the Mission church stands at 2631, against 2187 last year. The oversight entails a heavy responsibility upon the superintendent, Rev. S. F. Collier. Full particulars of the various departments will be found in the illustrated report, to be had by addressing the superintendent at the Central Hall.

Hereford Y.M.C.A. Hop-pickers' Mission.—For the past ten years a Gospel mission has been carried on among the hop-pickers of Herefordshire. For this year's effort religious literature and periodicals will be welcome, also other aid. The hon. sec. is Mr. Fred Lawrence, 18, Widemarsh-street, Hereford.

Ragged School Union.

THE past year has been signalised by steady growth and development, and the R.S.U. of to-day is a stronger and more diversified factor for righteousness than at any previous period of its long, eventful history.

Efforts made by this Union on behalf of the children of the street are more generally recognised and better understood than was the case in the near past. Unquestionably there is a wide field of usefulness and influence which is only partially touched by more modern agencies, and by God's help it is desired to occupy it, as means permit; with an endeavour at the same time to work in hearty co-operation with other societies and agencies for the benefit of the same class of children.

Mingling with the notes of thanksgiving to God for what has been accomplished are many humbling thoughts of how much has been "left undone." There is urgent need for increased religious work amongst poor children. Schemes for providing new buildings at Dove-row, Haggerston, and at Goldie-street, Peckham, are still in abeyance, awaiting the command from some of the Lord's wealthy stewards to "arise and build."

Remembering that the Ragged School Union is a religious agency, a spiritual force, whatever else it may be, we note that there are 231 afternoon and evening Sunday-schools, conducted in 155 separate buildings; total average attendance, 43,631; 82 morning schools and services, with 6067 children's attendances; 199 Bible classes, with a regular membership of 3965; 171 regular prayer meetings attended by 8041 members, and forty of the classes report 228 senior scholar communicants.

Many of the young people have professed conversion, and special means are being used to establish the converts in the faith. They need every such encouragement, as we may well judge from such an utterance as this: "I would give my heart to the Saviour now, only I could not live as a Christian. How could I, when last Bank Holiday father and mother were fighting, and the two girls (one not yet fifteen years of age) came home dead drunk? I was the only one who undressed before going to bed that night."

The Society's work continues to be wisely and energetically superintended by Mr. John Kirk, and the office is at 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

Theatrical Mission.

COMMENCED in 1876 in a small way, the Theatrical Mission has steadily grown, until it is now becoming increasingly recognised as a power for good. Macready House, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden (the headquarters of the Mission), has in hundreds of cases proved a true harbour of refuge to girls coming to London to try their fortune "on the boards." Many of these aspirants have no friends in the metropolis, no introductions, and frequently no money. However foolish it may be for them to come, once arrived in the great city they have a claim upon Christian pity, and the help rendered by the Mission in such cases has, by God's blessing, saved many a young life from moral danger too terrible to contemplate.

There are in connection with the Mission over 3000 members, who look upon Macready House as their London home, and the place where they can rely on friendly counsel and aid. Transient visitors during the year who more or less avail themselves of the benefits of the work number over 500, and 168 have been boarders under immediate control, some for months at a time.

The work is capable of indefinite extension. It is desired to awaken interest in these weary toilers for a nation's amusement, so that wherever touring companies go the girls may find friends who will show to them that Christian sympathy and loving interest in their welfare which are such potent factors for good.

Considerable influence is exerted by the Mission in the provinces and on the Continent. To show how glad girls are to be provided with lady correspondents, Rev. F. B. Meyer informed the secretary (Mr. S. E. Burrow) that after a series of special meetings held in his schoolroom no less than twenty girls of the theatrical profession asked to be put into communication with Christian ladies.

The last balance-sheet shows that, including a mortgage on Macready House, the Mission has a total indebtedness of over £4000, and it need scarcely be said that this constitutes a heavy burden, and causes increasing anxiety. If girls who choose a theatrical career are exposed to great and varied temptations such as those depicted by a recent writer, how vastly important becomes the "shepherding" which is exercised from Macready House as a centre of sound Christian and social influence.

Royal Albert Asylum.

ON the highest spot of Chobham Ridges, Bagshot, stands the Royal Albert Orphan Asylum, an institution which was founded in 1864, at Collingwood-court, as a memorial to the Prince Consort, for the purposes of rescuing children who, not being waifs and strays, are yet too friendless and destitute to compete with candidates at orphan asylums where, canvassing for votes at elections being allowed, influence and means are indispensable. Every case that comes before the Royal Albert Orphan Asylum Committee is thoroughly investigated, but it is not by votes that the boy or the girl succeeds in gaining admission—it depends on whether the case really deserves help.

Since its establishment about 1500 necessitous orphan children have here received a good sound, Christian education, and have been fitted to earn a livelihood on leaving, the boys being taught trades, such as those of the tailor, carpenter, bootmaker, baker, and gardener, whilst the girls are instructed in the mysteries of household economy, and learn how to cook, wash, sew, knit, and make their own clothes.

That the education received at Bagshot produces good results is shown by the future history of the pupils. A number of these, now full-grown men and women, visited "the old place" on Saturday, when there were commemoration day festivities. About eighty of the old scholars dined together, and afterwards Mrs. Christopherson distributed the prizes won by the present students.

To free the institution from debt a sum of £13,000 is required. The expenditure last year was £4,100, but the average number of inmates was 180, and the cost per child only amounted to a little over £20. An inspector of schools, Mr. F. Dugard, speaks most favourably of the instruction, remarking that the pupils have evidently taken pleasure in their lessons, their replies to his questions being bright and intelligent. And the reports of the technical and horticultural branches are equally satisfactory. Remembering that the pupils range in age from eight to twelve, the boots, slippers, coats, frocks, stockings, etc., that they have made are remarkably neat and tidy, and, moreover, are well fitting.

Won by Prayer.

JANE CAKEBREAD, who has earned an unenviable notoriety for her frequent (nearly 300) convictions for drunkenness, is said to be dying. For some time she has been in Lady Henry Somerset's Home for Inebriates at Duxhurst. Hard as stone, all kindly influences seemed futile to touch her heart.

"Judge then," says M. A. P., "how Lady Henry felt when one day she saw this face of stone soften, tremble, break into a deluge of tears. She looked for the secret of this mighty and unhoped-for transformation. It lay in a letter which contained just these words: 'From one who prays for Jane Cakebread; but who can only send her this.' 'This' was just a spray of honeysuckle! Jane Cakebread dropped the letter and the honeysuckle. 'A lady, you see, has sent Jane Cakebread a piece of honeysuckle,' and the iron barriers of vice, suffering, despair, hatred, which had locked up her heart for all these years, were broken; and she wept bitterly. 'She showed,' comments Lady Henry, 'that she had a woman's heart after all.'"

Kettering.—The London-road Hall, erected in 1891 for the convenience of the large and growing population at the southern end of the town, is the centre of well-sustained Christian influence and activity. The seventh anniversary was celebrated last week, when Mr. George Nokes, of London, preached two sermons on the Sunday, and delivered an address at the public meeting on the following day. This gathering was presided over by Mr. Charles Pollard, the founder of the work.

Missions in Prisons.

THE Home Office (says the Daily Mail) has made a new move. Evangelists are to be allowed to hold missions inside the various prisons up and down the country where the chaplain is willing that such a religious effort should take place.

Indeed, one or two missions have already taken place at Wormwood Scrubbs, Wandsworth, and Exeter. Another takes place in a week or so at Maidstone, and in the space of a very few months the probability is that every prison of the country will have had a mission of its own.

The mission lasts a week, and the evangelist gives a short address every morning, about eight or nine o'clock, according as the regulations of the prison permit. The convicts who wish to speak with the evangelist give their names in to the warder, who in turn hands the list to the chaplain, the latter finally placing it in the hands of the missioner.

For a long time the Home Office wavered over the question whether the evangelist should have private intercourse with the prisoners in their cells or not; but it was pointed out that all the moral good of the mission would be lost if warders were present at these interviews, and so the Home Office gave way, with the result that the convict can tell the evangelist just what he pleases without the eye of the warder being on him.

Singing has been made a strong feature of the missions, and the various convict choirs have done good service. Few people are aware that the greatest honour a prisoner can aspire to is to sing in the choir, for no matter how good his voice, if he has not the requisite number of good conduct marks he is not allowed to join the musical portion of the convict community.

The chief reason why the Home Office is taking up the matter so strongly is the fact that the missions seem to have appealed mainly to the "first offenders." The hardened gaol-bird rarely sends in his name to the evangelist, but this the Home Office does not mind, for the authorities hope the impressions gained by the "first offenders" will keep them from offending a second time.

All those who seem inclined to mend their ways are being cared for on leaving the prison by the Church Army—who are providing most of the evangelists—and other organisations who look after discharged prisoners.

Child Criminals.

SIR,—During the twenty years I have been visiting prisons, few matters have impressed me more forcibly than the need there is to use every effort to prevent juveniles from embarking upon lives of crime. Therefore I view with sorrow the method which some justices still adopt of sending children to prison as convicted prisoners before they commence a period of detention in a reformatory.

This morning I saw a child, aged twelve, dressed in prison clothes as a convicted prisoner in Pentonville Prison, waiting his removal to a reformatory. Surely no child should be sent to prison if (consistently with the due administration of justice) he can be dealt with in any other way. By the Reformatory Schools Act, 56 and 57 Vic., ch. 48, sec. 1, a Court is empowered to send a youthful offender to a reformatory without previously sentencing him to a prison.—Yours faithfully, Wm. Wheatley, Superintendent St. Giles's Christian Mission.

Liquor in the Transvaal.—A Reuter's telegram from Pretoria, dated August 27, says:—The amended Liquor Law proposes to punish offenders, convicted for the third time of selling liquor to natives, with lashes and a long term of imprisonment without the option of a fine.

The Parents' Mission has for its object improvement of the lives and homes of the people by inculcating a due recognition of parental responsibility. While the Mission carries the Gospel to the home, advocating daily Bible-reading and family prayer in every household, it lays much emphasis upon the fact that the father as well as the mother is responsible for the exercise of good influence. Open-air meetings during summer and autumn are a marked feature of the varied operations, and these gatherings are frequently attended by as many as 500 working-men, whilst skilled and trained speakers teach that "the great reform" is the new birth, and that the Gospel is the one and only solution to the great problems now perplexing the people.—The secretary is Mr. Alfred Webb, 39, Warwick-lane, E.C.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

Christ's Resurrection.

Dear Sir,—I have read with much interest and profit Dr. Pierson's address on "In Christ Jesus," reported in your issue of 11th inst. May I ask a question concerning it? In dealing with the manner of Christ's Resurrection, he makes the statement that, on entering the tomb, Peter saw the linen cloths "exactly as they had been wrapped around the sacred Body, undisturbed in their convolutions, and he knew that it was a miracle."

I have seen this statement made before. May I ask whether there is sufficient authority for it? The account in St. John xx. merely says that the two disciples saw the "linen cloths lie"; it says nothing as to their condition one way or the other, at least I cannot find any detail of this nature. Had they retained undisturbed their convolutions, presenting to the beholder the form of the now risen Body, would not an eye-witness most probably have given some hint of it? He is careful to tell us that the "head cloth" had been wrapped up and laid apart, a fact which apparently had its share in convincing him of the reality of the Resurrection.

Does the Greek word in verse 6 mean "in convolution"? The question is of some consequence when it is made to appear as an undoubted fact, and to serve as the pattern of the believer's spiritual resurrection. No commentator with whom I am acquainted takes the above view, while Westcott and others give satisfactory reasons why "the other disciple (most probably John) saw and believed."—Yours truly, Arthur Burnell.

Dear Sir,—I was greatly interested in the address delivered at Keswick by Dr. Pierson, published on page 8 of The Christian, on August 11; but on reading John xx. 7 it seems to me that the words, "wrapped together" refer to the "napkin," not to the linen cloths. In that case, beautiful as Dr. Pierson's thought is, it does not agree with the Word, either as rendered in the Authorised or Revised versions. It would be interesting to me, and probably to others, to know how Dr. Pierson explains this difficulty.—Yours truly, M. W.

Leeds, August 22.

The Pope and Scotland.

Dear Sir,—I have just read in The Christian a quotation you have given from the N.B. Daily Mail in regard to the Pope's encyclical to Scotland. Would you allow me, as a Scotsman resident in Italy, to say that the encyclical here in Italy is regarded simply as a piece of hypocritical cunning, designed to impose on Scottish honesty and uprightness. Those who live in this country, knowing as they do the character of the Roman Catholic Church and the Vatican dignitaries, find it utterly impossible to believe in the sincerity of a single line of the encyclical. The Church of Rome, realising that its fate in Italy and (I believe) in other Roman Catholic lands is sealed—that it is in such lands despised and scouted as a huge engine of immorality and political intrigue and treason—has come to set its hopes of life in Protestant lands, in which countries alone it is free from civil restrictions and penalties to intrigue politically, to slander Christian work, and to oppress Protestants.

In this encyclical the garb of loyalty and religion is put on, but beneath is the Popish wolf. The idea of Roman Catholic ecclesiastics (for I do not believe the poor dying Pope ever saw the encyclical, and at best he is but a cypher in the hands of the Jesuits)—men who know nothing about the Bible, nothing about Christianity, men for the most part, if we may credit popular belief, destitute of a rag of moral sense—talking of the Bible and of anxiety for the soul's salvation! The thing is preposterous. What the Papal Church would do for Scotland is what it has done for Cuba and the Philippines, or, to take a specimen of its work nearer home, what it has done for the Roman Catholic parts of Ireland. What Scotsmen need to do is to resist unflinchingly the Papal Church, whether it comes as the adversary or as an angel of light.—Yours faithfully, A. R.

The Anti-Vivisection Movement.

Dear Sir,—With your kind permission I would call the attention of your readers to the work of the London Anti-Vivisection Society, the office of which is at 32, Sackville-street, Piccadilly. I have not a word to say against any other association having for its object the suppression of barbarous cruelty. On the contrary, it is encouraging to find that, in more quarters than one, mercy and righteousness are alike raising their voices against the cowardly, unfeeling, and absolutely unnecessary practice of vivisection. It should, however, be known that the London Anti-Vivisection Society aims at nothing short of total abolition, having found that attempts at restriction and partial reform are practically useless.

If any reader should suppose that my words are too strong, I would beg him to read what has been published by this Society with the sanction of eminent men of science, who can substantiate the statements made. The protection of the lower animals from systematic torture is surely a Christian duty, and I would appeal to the readers of your paper, whatever their branch of Christ's Church may be, to assist in putting an end to a revolting and increasing scandal.—Yours truly,

A Member of the L.A.V. Society.

"Be ye Separate."

Dear Sir,—Your remarks in a recent issue on the above passage are timely, and no doubt will be to many, as they have been to me, encouraging. The fact that so many have put the other construction of which you speak upon the passage, namely, separated themselves from one another, has made it to me somewhat perplexing. That the motive of many of these people is right I do not for a moment doubt, but after reading your remarks I question whether their action is the wisest.

You speak of members gathering together within the Church, but separated from other members of the body, "on the ground of holiness or fulness of the Spirit." But this in my experience is not so general as that of members coming out of the Church altogether, and forming themselves into bands; and in justification of such action they quote the above passage, and refer to worldliness in the Church, and the inconsistency of many of its members. I have frequently attended the meetings of these people solely from a desire to know more of the mind and will of God, but I confess to having been frequently disappointed, from the fact that the conversation almost invariably turned on the necessity of all true followers of Christ coming out of the churches, and the result has been that I have felt myself to be an intruder, and was not wanted.—Sincerely yours, T. Reay.

Brixton Hill Rescue Home.—Since the opening of this Home eleven years ago, at 143 and 145, Brixton-hill, S.W., 291 girls have been admitted. During the past year sixteen have been received, nineteen sent out; ten are now in the Home. Twenty babies have been cared for and placed out in foster-homes. A real help to Miss Stacy, the lady superintendent, would be rendered by readers communicating with her respecting homes for the babies, which they could recommend, and would possibly overlook. Every effort is made to influence the girls to amend their ways, by Scriptural teaching, earnest talk, and practical homely work. Girls are received irrespective of creed, and from all parts of the country, as well as from London. The hon. sec., Miss Stemp, 35, Josephine-avenue, Brixton-hill, says that the work has suffered much by the death of old friends.

Shaftesbury Memorial Mission Hall is situate in Union-street, Borough. The missionary says he is very well received in the various houses when visiting round the district, and he is cheered to see so many from these homes come to the meetings, there always being a full attendance on Sundays. He has succeeded in obtaining an entrance into one of the lodging-houses close by, where there are a hundred and fifty inmates, and hopes shortly to commence regular meetings there on Sunday evenings. Amid efforts of varied kinds for the spiritual and temporal good of old and young, open-air gospelling is maintained in various parts of the neighbourhood on Sunday afternoons and Wednesday evenings. The work has prospered and been very encouraging during its eighteenth year. Hon. Sec., Mr. M. R. Moser, 23, Maresfield-gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

Open-air Mission.

A COMPANY of seven evangelists from this mission started services on the sands at Douglas, Isle of Man, on Saturday, August 20, and have continued each day since. Five meetings daily have been held, attended by great crowds. Many have sought the Lord on the sands. A man who landed on the island on Monday, with his wife and child, to see the sights of Douglas, was attracted to the meeting, came regularly to the services, and accepted Christ; he returned home without seeing the sights of Douglas, but saw Jesus as his Saviour. Special prayer-meetings have been held daily, when cases of special interest have been brought before the Lord. The children's services have been remarkable for numbers and attractiveness. The mission will continue till the early part of September. G. R. C.

Open-air Mission, 11, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.

Evangelists' Movements.

The tent mission on Mortimer Common, conducted by Mr. John Weedon for the Reading Free Church Council, has been so successful that the Council has decided to extend the mission for a few weeks.

Messrs. Burrows and Loney, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, have been conducting meetings in one of the society's Gospel halls at Bundoran, co. Donegal, for the past few weeks, and with excellent results.

Mr. J. J. Sims has brought to a close a three weeks' mission in connection with the Merchiston branch of the Railway Mission, Edinburgh. The Word has been preached with power and freshness. Christians have been revived and sinners awakened; the evangelist has been cheered by seeing interesting cases of decision for Christ.

A Gospel Mission has been recently conducted by Paddy Norman (of the Manchester Wesleyan Central Mission), in a tent at Bedminster, Bristol. At the first Sunday evening meeting the tent was too small, and the Town Hall, capable of holding more than 1,500, was secured, and two remarkable meetings have been held each Sunday ever since. Striking cases of conversion have occurred. Paddy Norman has been engaged to continue the work for eight weeks.

Mr. Henry Thorne has recently completed a lengthy preaching and lecturing tour in Surrey, Kent, Berks, Wilts, Devon, and Cornwall. Great blessing has been given in most of the places visited. At Exeter and Truro a wonderful work of God was realised in gatherings of children and young people of the Sunday-schools. Mr. Thorne has arranged to conduct missions in some of the places visited, and it is expected that other doors will be opened shortly.

During the summer months a large band of workers from the Bristol Y.M.C.A. (young men and women) has been engaged each Sunday and Wednesday evenings, conducting Gospel services on the Broad Quay. Several interesting cases of blessing have cheered the workers. From August 22 to 29 a week's open-air mission was held on the same spot, and each night large crowds gathered to hear the Gospel. As the winter comes on these services will be continued in the Fruit Market, High-street.

Extensive arragements have been made by the Portsmouth F.C. Council for the united mission to be conducted by Mr. Gipsy Smith this month. A special committee of representatives from each church in the district has been appointed, and the town has been mapped out into districts for visitation. Large posters are being placarded, and 35,000 handbills have been distributed. Sunday evening meetings will be held in the Town Hall, and the week evening services in Wesley Chapel, which is large and central.

The Great Tent was opened at Dalston-lane, nearly opposite Dalston Junction, on Sunday last, when Messrs. Ned Wright and Leonard Weaver, and the blind singers, Mr. and Mrs. Baker, of Philadelphia, U.S.A., preached and sang the Gospel to appreciative congregations. The tent is large enough to seat 3000, and the outlook is encouraging for a blessed work of grace. The above brethren and Mr. W. Grove and others will continue the meetings nightly. The prayers and co-operation of Christian workers is earnestly requested.

Mr. Henry Collins, of the Evangelisation Society, has been the August preacher at Dr. Barnardo's Edinburgh Castle, where he is always welcome. Mr. Collins, as an evangelist, is richly endowed, and God is with him. The Word preached has been greatly blessed in several known cases, some of them of a remarkable character. The children's sermonettes have been eagerly listened to by over 1000 boys from Dr. Barnardo's Homes, besides the usual adults comprising the Sunday morning audiences. In spite of the great heat large congregations gathered on Sunday evenings to hear the Gospel. Mr. Collins's pithy and pointed addresses to the men and women of the P.S.A. have been admirably fitting, and results have followed. Mr. Collins's services have been secured for September also.—W. R. N.

EVANGELISTS' ENGAGEMENTS.

Mr. Chas. Inglis, in Norway, with Polytechnic party.

Mr. Ned Wright, Eastbourne (Y.M.C.A. New Mission Hall), Sept. 11-18; Lee, during October.

Sergeant Pullinger hopes to preach on Doncaster Racecourse, staying in the place from Saturday, Sept. 3rd, to Friday, the 9th. On Sunday, Sept. 11th, he will be at Burgess Hill, Sussex.

Requests for Prayer.

Pray blessing on a three weeks' mission in Grantown, N.B., by Messrs. Scroggie and Maxwell, commencing September 4.

For much blessing on a Gospel mission, organised by the Shoreditch Y.M.C.A., and conducted by Dr. Harry Guinness, September 18 to 30.

For blessing on a Gospel mission to be conducted by Mr. James Eyres at Pontypridd, from October 2 to 16, in connection with the Congregational churches of that town.

Rosario Sailors' Home and Mission.—The wheat harvest, which at one time promised to be very abundant, has not fulfilled expectations, consequently the number of vessels required to carry it has been much smaller than anticipated and this has reduced considerably the number of sailors coming to the port. On the other hand the Home is a necessary check on the crimps and boarding-masters who otherwise would fleece poor Jack to their heart's content. During the year ending with May last 414 ships were visited, and 168 meetings were held at the Home. Boarders using the house numbered 231. Many tracts and Scriptures were distributed, and sound reading matter was extensively given away. Mr. W. Barnett is hon. sec., and Capt. Ericssen superintends the work.

Soldiers' Christian Association. — Like the Y.M.C.A., the S.C.A. is inter-denominational in character and organisation, and seeks to become a direct mission to unconverted soldiers in the barrack-room. If the Army is to be reached to any large extent and won for Christ, it must be through the men themselves; and those who read the reports from the branches, as published in the monthly record News from the Front, will be impressed by the way in which God is using the united efforts of members to reach their comrades in the barrack-room. Over 300 new members have been enrolled during twelve months. The work is maintained in more than 200 centres, and in nearly forty stations where there are no Soldiers' Homes, meetings are held in barracks. The results of the work it is impossible to estimate, as men are continually being drafted to all parts of the Empire; but the fact that work has been commenced and successfully carried on wherever Christian men have been sent shows how far-reaching the effects are from a missionary point of view. Mr. A. H. Wheeler is secretary, and the office of the mission has recently been transferred from Portsmouth to Room 24, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

INTERNATIONAL S.S. LESSONS.

September 11.

Sinful Indulgence.—Amos vi. 1-8.

Golden Text.—"They also have erred through wine, and through strong drink are out of the way." Isa. xxviii. 7.

TEACHER should read through the whole book of Amos so as to be able to give class a connected account of what the prophecy refers to. Also life and work of Amos. Lesson should embrace following points:—

State of the Kingdom.

Three victories promised to Joash by Elisha had enlarged the country to its dimensions under Solomon. Wealth had increased with national power. Then followed the usual accompaniments of great wealth—viz., luxury, ease, a low state of morals, and an indifference to things spiritual. A rod was "in pickle" for the nation, to bring them back to their religion and morality. The Assyrian Empire was growing on the north border, and as soon as they were strong enough would stretch a hand over Palestine.

Amos.

"Amos" means "burdensome," a name which befits the heavy and warning message he had to declare. Native of Tekoa, near Bethlehem. He was a farmer, and in going to and fro in the country to sell his produce and to purchase his herds he would have ample opportunity to see the state of the country.

He was not educated in the schools of the prophets, but he was a student of the Pentateuch. He was a born preacher, therefore he must preach. His work was chiefly done at Bethel, which was the centre of all that was both good and bad in the nation. City of palaces, colleges, idol temples, etc.

Divisions of the Book.

1. Chap. i. and ii.—Execrations on the surrounding nations. This to win his audience to listen. Then he shows that, being guilty of the same sins, similar execrations fall on them.

2. Chap. iii.-vi.—Recital of the punishment which God had in the past brought on wicked nations. Each punishment had for its object the bringing of the people back to God. Denunciation of Israel's sin.

3. Chap. vii.-ix.—Series of visions:—

(1) Devouring locusts.

(2) Drought like a devouring fire.

(3) God standing with plumb-line against the nation (which is the building), and finding it out of plumb—it is ready to fall.

(4) A basket of summer fruit near decay.

(5) God standing by the altar (the last place of refuge—sanctuary), and saying "Smite."

Then comes the application and the demand for reformation.

The Lesson.

This comes at the end of Section 2.

v. 2. Calneh — a city on the other side of Euphrates. Hamath—a city of Syria. Gath—a city of the Philistines.

You are no better than these, in spite of God's care and tuition. Where there are many opportunities much will be required.

v. 3. You cannot do away with the day of violence by putting it from your mind. You rather bring it nearer by such indifference. "Don't care" has ruined nations as well as individuals, grown-ups as well as children.

v. 7. In about thirty years the Israelites were led into captivity.

v. 8. God abhors the luxury, ease, wealth which Israel deemed the "excellent," and for which it was prepared to sacrifice everything else.

Practical Applications.

1. Wealth spent on selfishness is always bad. Christ speaks about wrong ways of spending money. It is a science that needs much prayerful thought.

2. The warning of good men should be noted. If the prophet's voice had been attended to, even at the eleventh hour, the misery would have been mitigated.

3. All sin brings inevitable punishment in its train. No one can escape the punishment (say) of the drunkard. Teacher should emphasise this.

4. The wicked man brings trouble on the good. Old fallacy: "He's nobody's enemy but his own."

Child-Life in Heathen Lands.—7.

CHILD-WIDOWS! I can readily imagine one and another of my young friends who read this page exclaiming, "What can it mean—child-widows"?

Yes! There is no doubt at all that there are, even while I am telling you this, some twenty-five millions of widows in India, thousands of whom are no older than the girls who read these words. They have been married, perhaps, at the early age of five or six years. Large numbers are married before they reach eleven years, and, as very often happens, do grown up and sometimes even to old men. It must seem to you very, very strange indeed. But it is quite true.

And if a husband should die before his wife, the condition of the widow is the saddest, the most wretched, it is possible to think of. The poor child-widow is not only never allowed to marry again, but is treated with the most heartless cruelty and inhumanity, simply because her husband is dead. She is reproached, too, with having done wrong in some previous life, and thus caused her husband's death.

Until the British interfered some years ago a cruel custom prevailed that was called suttee. It meant that when a husband died all his wives should be forced to submit to be burnt to death amid the flames that consumed the dead husband. It was the dread of widowhood with its awful miseries that led fifty wives at one time to ascend the funeral pyre of a Rajpoot husband with all the composure of a perfectly quiet mind. They would face so horrible a death for themselves as that rather than endure the miseries inseparable from child-widowhood. But that practice has been forbidden by the British Government, and cannot now take place.

The condition of girl-widows, however, is most deplorable. And when I have told you a few facts about them I am sure that you will be quite ready to say "I am most thankful that I was not born in India."

When a husband dies his widow suffers as much as if the death-angel had come for her also. She must not be approached by any of her relatives, but several women, from three to six—wives of barbers, a class kept for this purpose—are in waiting, and as soon as the husband's last breath is drawn, they rush at the newly made widow and tear off her ornaments. Ear and nose rings are dragged off, often tearing the cartilage, ornaments plaited in with the hair torn away, and if the arms are covered with gold and silver bracelets they do not take the time to draw them off one by one; but holding her arm on the ground, they hammer with a stone until the metal, often solid and heavy, breaks in two. It matters not how many wounds they inflict, they have no pity, not even if the widow is but a child of six or seven.

Often the poor thing, supposing she is being punished for some crime will ask, "What have I done, that you strip me of all my jewels?" and learning that she is simply a widow her condition becomes the most miserable one can imagine.

For fifteen days after a funeral the relatives must eat and drink only once in the day. The widow must keep up this pratice for a year, with frequent fasts. She is frequently visited by her relatives, in order, it would seem, to pour upon the innocent sufferer a very torrent of abuse. Her own mother will say, "Unhappy creature! I can't bear the thought of any one so vile. I wish she had never been born." Her mother-in-law will declare, "She has bitten my son and killed him; now he is dead, and she, useless creature, is left behind." The sister-in-law will exclaim, "I will not look at or speak to such a thing." Every indignity that the tongue can speak is heaped upon her, lest bystanders, or it may be the gods, should think they had sympathy with her.

And all this misery and reproach she will have to endure for the remainder of her life. It is a picture all of gloom from the beginning to the end, and the gloom deepens as time rolls over her drooping head.

This will be more than enough, I hope, to awaken your sympaties and your prayers for the millions in India who are at this very hour enduring the bitter distress of which I have been telling you.

You can understand now how it is that missionaries in India are so anxious to establish schools to teach the children the Bible, and the wondrous story of Christ's tender love for children. Don't you think it must make these child-widows' hearts leap for very joy when they know that Christ cares for them and wants them in all their misery to come to Him? He will indeed comfort them. Never miss an opportunity of sending what help you possibly can to relieve these child-widows.

Bible Acrostic.

Sick Children and Invalids' Dinner Tables.—We feel sure that if this institution were better known, and the fact that in ministering to the bodily wants of the sick poor their spiritual needs are cared for, it would commend itself to a wider circle of Christian friends. Upwards of 3,300 dinners of hot roast meat and vegetables have been dispensed during the eleven months of the past year; and, with the exception of August (when the busy workers take a needed holiday), the dinners are provided for the entire year. Free tickets to the number of 1,240 were sent to district visitors and others for distribution. Tickets may be had at 5s. a dozen, either at 77, Church-street, Lisson-grove, N.W., or at 52, Montagu-square, W. Communications to Mrs. Routh, at the latter address.

Children's Medical Missionary Society.—A useful auxiliary work has been done for many years past by extending among children a knowledge and love of medical missions; and the result has been much help afforded to the cause at home and abroad. "The Children's Secretary" is Miss Annie R. Butler, Medical Mission House, 49, Highbury Park, London, N.; and it has been her privilege to address a large third of the inhabitants of St. Agnes, Scilly Isles, this year. The audience—children, women, fishermen, had only had the briefest notice of the meeting, yet forty-five assembled, and listened with unflagging interest. Other work of the same kind has been done in various directions. The various branches scattered up and down the country seem to vie with one another in collections, sales of work, and other means of providing funds.

THE BOOK WORLD.

THE LATE DR. SCHAFF.

Few American names are better known in the Eastern world than that of Dr. Philip Schaff, himself a connecting link between Europe and America, a native of Switzerland and a citizen of the United States; conspicuous in literature as an editor, a Church historian, a commentator, a hymnologist, a member of the Company of Revisers; and in public life as an ardent friend of Church union, an unwearied promoter of the objects of the Evangelical Alliance and the Presbyterian Alliance, and generally of all Christian objects in harmony with Evangelical Protestant truth. The memoir* that has been published by his son is one of very great interest, for Dr. Schaff was a man of beautiful Christian character, and was universally regarded with esteem and affection.

It is interesting from the beginning to trace the career of a poor orphan boy, the only child of a girl-widow of twenty, to whom he was profoundly attached, and to learn that when he went from home to the Pietist school at Kornthal his home sickness, which was almost unbearable, became the birth-pang of a new life from above. "I have found in Christ," he said, "the satisfaction of my longings, the calming of anxious fears, turning darkness into day." In his theological course in Germany he came under all sorts of teachers—men like Ewald and Baur on the one hand, and Tholuck and Neander on the other. By God's grace, and encouraged by such fellow-students as Adolphe Monod and Frederick Godet, he stood firm in the Evangelical ranks. Coming to be known to an American deputation who had gone to invite the celebrated F. W. Krummacher to become a theological professor at Mercersburg, and who had formed a very high opinion of young Schaff, both intellectually and spiritually, he was appointed to the chair which Krummacher declined, and, after first setting himself to learn English, began his work, and for twenty years was professor at Mercersburg. Thereafter he was called to a chair in Union Seminary, New York.

From the first he was deeply impressed by the disunions of Protestantism, and eagerly promoted all that could tend to heal them. Hence his profound interest in the Evangelical and Presbyterian Alliances, on behalf of which he underwent enormous labour, when the former met at New York in 1873, and the latter at Philadelphia in 1880.

We have no space to write of his labours as a professor, an author, or an editor. His Church history, in seven volumes, was his most elaborate work, but he bestowed also great labour on his collection of the "Creeds of Christendom," and on his English issue of "Herzog's Encyclopædia." He made fourteen journeys to Europe in the course of his life, and had much pleasant intercourse with our chief Christian scholars and many other distinguished men. He bore a leading part in the American revision of the New Testament. When Moody and Sankey were at New York in 1876 he gave them every encouragement. "It is a sin (he used to say) to act or speak against such a religious revival, perhaps the greatest the world has ever seen since Wesley and Whitfield. It is the best refutation of infidelity, and shows what power the simple story of sin and grace still has." He often used to tell the story of Mr. Moody's conversation with Gladstone after one of the London meetings. "I wish I had your chest," the statesman is reported to have said. "And I wish I had your head upon it," was the quick rejoinder.

Dr. Schaff had no disposition towards the theories of the "higher criticism." Writing to his friend, Professor Blaikie, of Edinburgh, who had asked him his opinion, he referred to his having studied under Baur at Tübingen, and seen the remarkable reaction which took place afterwards against his views on the origin of the books of the New Testament. "I am confident," he said, "a similar reaction will also take place in the criticism of the Old Testament, when we shall know more of the earlier sources on which the historical books are confessedly based."

The intensely laborious life of Dr. Schaff terminated on Oct. 20, 1893; he died listening to favourite passages of Scripture, such as John xiv., 1 Cor. xiii., and the singing of "Ein' feste Burg," and other favourite hymns.

THE RITUALISTIC CONSPIRACY.

When Mr. Walter Walsh's book, The Secret History of the Oxford Movement, appeared we dwelt upon its startling significance, and indicated its great importance as proving the treachery of the Ritualistic clergy. Though somewhat high in price, the book has been in large demand, and is already in its third edition, completing twelve thousand copies. This fact is full of encouragement, for numbers who have endured High Church practices have been ignorant of their Romeward tendency. This book should open the eyes of many such Protestants, making them jealous of their privileges, and showing them why they should stand by their principles. In the preface to a third and cheaper edition Mr. Walsh remarks: "This book has, of course, been severely censured by the friends of those whose misconduct and disloyalty it exposes; but so far as I am aware no one has even attempted to prove that it is in any way inaccurate as to its statement of facts." Friends of the Protestant cause will do well to help the circulation of Mr. Walsh's book. (3s. 6d. net. Swan Sonnenschein & Co.)

A BOOK FOR SAILORS.

Our sailors have a speech of their own, with which those who address them do well to be familiar. Rev. Walter J. Mathame, F.R.G.S., has had peculiar facilities for making the acquaintance of "Jack" and his language, and in his latest book he addresses seamen with a force and sympathy which well match his published appeals to landsfolk of the working classes. The title, Jack Ahoy! or, Talks with Sailors, seems fragrant of the "brine"; when we open the book we are conscious of animation and purpose in every page. In the first chapter, "Hullo there!" the author establishes good terms with his seafaring readers, to whom he proceeds to speak on things that belong to life and godliness. The book is in every way first class, and we echo the words of Miss Agnes Weston when she pronounces it "admirable," and writes: "I should rejoice to know that every seaman possessed a copy. I cannot imagine a better work than that those possessed of money would use it to send your book on board every merchant ship, and ships of the Royal Navy as well." All workers among sailors would equally welcome supplies for distribution. "Jack's Almanac," at the end of the talks, is rich in salt sayings and sea proverbs. (1s. and 2s. according to binding. Dublin: Eason & Son).

THE FUTURE LIFE.

Perhaps no sublime subject has been so widely discussed as that of the future life, to which Rev. J. E. C. Welldon makes a deeply interesting contribution in The Hope of Immortality, an essay incorporating his Hulsean lectures delivered before the University of Cambridge. On this great subject every thinker pursues his own line; and two or three sentences will make clear Mr. Welldon's position: "The immortality for which I plead is not conditional but absolute. I do not urge that immortality is attainable, but that it is actual; not that it is partial, but that it is universal; not that it may be, but that it is...The immortality for which I plead is the personal, intrinsic, inalienable, eternal attribute of every individual soul of man." An inquiry regarding the soul leads to the conclusion that it is the seat of human identity, also of the principle of life, and survives eternally in the fulness of its intellectual, moral, and spiritual powers; and that "its fate in the future life is in some manner fixed or conditioned by its character and discipline in this life." It is needless to say that the book is the result of wide reading and much thought; not being excessively erudite, it should have many readers of the great "ordinary" class. The chapters on the nature, history, and value of the belief in immortality are good; the chapters on evidences for the belief lucidly summarise the familiar arguments; while that on the Christian amplification of the belief raises questions of a more speculative and dividing character, baptism being given an undue importance, and prayers for the dead being excused if not advocated. (6s. Seeley & Co.)

A Vision of the Cross. By Stanley Hope. (6d. Stockwell.) The old old story told to meet the need of unbelieving sinners and of sinning believers. Simple truth, large clear type, recherché style, elegant appearance.

The story of Christ has been well told for little children, by Kate Thompson Sizer, in Our Blest Redeemer (1s. C. H. Kelly). With its numerous illustrations, large and small, the book will be welcome in many homes.

The Sabbath-school Committee of the Presbyterian Church of Victoria has issued a capital little book, entitled Sidelights on the Shorter Catechism, by Rev. P. J. Murdoch, M.A., of Camberwell, Victoria. The explanations and illustrative incidents constitute the book one of real utility. (6d. Office of the S.S. Committee, 237, Collins-street, Melbourne.)

There are some good things in The Apostle of the Gentiles, and Other Poems, by Henry E. Tunstall. While the style might be improved, the sentiment is unexceptionable. (1s. 8d. From the Author, Oak Cottages, Stubshaw Cross, Ashton-in-Makerfield, Newton-le-Willows.)

The September issue of The Public School Magazine contains some hitherto unpublished African journals of the late Bishop Hannington. These journals form part of a religious section of the magazine, edited by Rev. Norman Bennet, the Church Parochial missioner to public schoolboys.

Friends of the late Canon Nash will be glad to possess a booklet, In Memoriam: Thomas Augustus Nash, containing a sermon giving an account of his life and character, preached in Little Wenlock Church, on July 24, by Rev. D. H. S. Cranage, M.A., curate. (Hobson & Co., Wellington, Shropshire.) Profits from the sale of the booklet will be given to the C.M.S.

Bible students will find much that is of value in the pages of Things to Come, which correctly describes itself as "a Journal of Biblical Literature, with Special Reference to Prophetic Truth." The fourth volume, containing the monthly parts from July 1897 to June 1898, contains many good things in exposition, as well as notes on the signs of the times. (George Stoneman.)

Pastor F. E. Marsh has written a small book on a great theme, Christ's Atonement (1s. 6d. Marshall Bros.). Nine in number, the chapters cover a wide field of instruction, beginning with Analogies, and passing on to consider the Necessity, Meaning, and Blessing of the Atonement. There are also studies of the Substitutionary Aspect, Spiritual and Moral Power, and Sanctifying Effect of the Atonement. The work will be of service to many.

Messrs. Hart and Straker, of 33, Furnival-street, E.C., have issued a beautiful Souvenir of Spurgeon's Tabernacle. It is printed on thick paper, and contains a brief history of the Tabernacle, with portraits of the late Mr. Spurgeon and the present pastor; also views of the Tabernacle, as it was before the fire and after, besides other pictures. Those who wish to assist in the rebuilding, and also to secure an admirable souvenir of the Tabernacle, can do so, as the profits of the sale of this book go towards this fund.

Many workers among children will welcome Rev. John Mitchell's new book, How to Gain the Eye of the Young, a collection of blackboard illustrations, object lessons, outlines, etc. (2s. 6d. S. W. Partridge & Co.) The preface intimates that where teachers have no class-room to themselves they may use a slate and pencil or crayons, an intimation worthy of consideration in Christian homes as well as Sunday-schools. Mr. Mitchell's drawings are remarkably striking, while the accompanying letterpress is explicit and admirably arranged.

"Printed at the Okayama Orphan Asylum, Japan," is the imprint of a choice booklet, The Man who Feared God for Nought, being a rhythmical version of the Book of Job, by Otis Cary (Elliot Stock). Among other aims of the author was that of presenting the Book of Job in a form specially adapted for reading aloud in the family, or before an audience; and for this, as well as for general reference, the work deserves attention. Scholars will read with interest the introduction on Hebrew poetry and its translation, with special reference to Job.

Everything from the pen of Dr. Handley Moule is welcome to Bible students. His recent work, Colossian Studies: Lessons in Faith and Holiness from St. Paul's Epistles to the Colossians and Philemon, is a choice devotional work, as well as a mine of expository suggestion. The performance is best described in Dr. Moule's prefatory words: "I have sought to take the Apostle's sentences up, one by one, as if they met my eye for the first time (in a certain respect), and to turn them into English so as to convey the freshness of the impression. When this has been accomplished, with whatever measure of success, my sole further purpose has been to bring out for the reader's notice some of the inexhaustible messages for the soul which the study of the God-given utterances of the Apostle has carried home to myself." The result of ripe learning, applied with rare spiritual insight, the book will be useful to preachers, as well as stimulating to private students. (5s. Hodder & Stoughton.)

A useful book, issued at a time when it should be in large demand, is The Principles of Protestantism, by Rev. J. P. Lilley, M.A., of Arbroath. (2s. 6d. T. & T. Clark). It is issued in the excellent series of "Handbooks for Bible Classes and Private Students," and has been prepared as a companion to Dr. T. M. Lindsay's manual on "The Reformation." In the course of two hundred and fifty closely packed pages Mr. Lilley examines the doctrinal differences between the Protestant Churches and the Church of Rome. Whereas the ultimate idea of Protestantism is the right of direct access to God, through Christ his Son, it is shown that in the course of conflict with Roman theologians it threw out branches in various directions. Hence this volume deals with three master principles of Protestantism—the evangelic method of salvation, the Word of God, and the fellowship of believers. Mr. Lilley has gone to authoritative sources for information, and he writes in a temper admirably befitting a student's handbook.

A book of many attractions is The Coming People, by Charles F. Dole (5s. H. R. Allenson), in which a man of thought and conviction maintains the blessedness of peace, love, and contentment, establishing the excellence of these when compared with militarism, race feuds, and greed. Economic "principles" are boldly examined in these eloquent pages, and even where, occasionally, one cannot acquiesce there is ample reason for admiring the author's vision, and sympathising with his noble contention. In a word, this contention is that Christ's beatitude regarding the meek is by no means antiquated, but of present-day force, and finds interpretation and illustration in the fact that the truly kind and gentle are the happy of the earth, and are, in fact, "the coming people." The author is an American, and in a preface to the English edition of the book he expresses a conviction that the central thought of his work will help men of all nations better to understand one another, and will tend to bind them together in firmer bonds of good will. It is hardly necessary to add that the work is ethical rather than dogmatic.

The Life of the late Mrs. Booth, of the Salvation Army, is being prepared for publication by Mr. W. T. Stead, and will be issued in the early autumn.

Rev. F. L. Denman, of the London Jews Society, has issued in booklet form an instructive paper, entitled ZIONISM AND ITS RELATION TO PROPHECY. (1d. London Jews Society, 16, Lincoln's-inn-fields, W.C.) The pages deserve a careful perusal at the present time.

A timely pamphlet is MAKING PLAIN FOR ALL TIME; OR, WHAT DOES THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND SAY? It brings present-day errors and superstitions to the touchstone of Protestant standards, and shows their Popish origin and essential character. (6d. G. Slater, 74, Strand, W.C.)

Some very thoughtful papers on prophecy are issued by the World-Wide Prayer Union for the Lord's Return. We welcome the twenty-fifth, entitled THE MANIFESTED UNITY OF THE CHURCH, by Rev. N. S. Taylor. There is light and truth in the pages. (1½d., post free, from the Author, Templemore Park, Londonderry.)

Simplicity and precision may be said to characterise the pages of ASTRONOMY FOR THE YOUNG, a little book by Wm. Thynne Lynn, B.A., F.R.A.S., formerly of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich. The type is bold, making the booklet suitable for the young in an important sense not always kept in view. (G. Stoneman.)

Church records have a charm all their own. More than a local interest attaches to a booklet, JUBILEE OF THE OPENING OF MOUNT PLEASANT CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, TUNBRIDGE WELLS: Report of meeting held on January 20, 1898, with sermons preached on the preceding Sunday. (6d. R. Pelton, The Broadway, Tunbridge Wells.)

A LIFE OF LUIGI CAPELLINI, APOSTLE OF THE ITALIAN ARMY, is being written by Anna M. Stoddart, author of "John Stuart Blackie's Life," and will be issued at Christmas, price 2s. 6d. It will be sold to further the fund for extending the premises of the Evangelical Military Church in Rome. Friends desiring copies should write at once to Miss Stoddart, at 35, Antrim-mansions, England's-lane, N.W.

ONE BY ONE is the title of a booklet, in which Mr. Thomas Hogben relates an interview he had last year with the late George Müller. Needless to say prayer was the subject of conversation. Mr. Hogben adds other cases of intercessory prayer, faithfully persisted in and Divinely answered. Many will read the pages to spiritual profit. (6d. per 100, from Mr. Hogben, Welcome Mission, Portsmouth.)
